29th Congress, 1st Session. | Rep. No. 752. | Ho. of Reps.

WAR WITH MEXICO.

June 24, 1846.

Mr. C. J. Ingersoll, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made the following

REPORT:

The act of Congress approved May 13, 1846, for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and Mexico, having become a law, on an exigency which scarcely allowed delay, or required deliberation, the ordinary method of referring the President's special message to the Committee on Foreign Affairs was pretermitted. Still, it is proper that reasons for so important an act should be manifested to the world; and that committee, therefore, submit the following report:

Essentially and happily pacific as are the institutions, the interests, the local situation, and the desires of this republican Union, its development and prosperity will never be arrested or disturbed by wars of passion, conquest, or offence. Only once, in the seventy years of its national existence, has war been declared by act of Congress; while Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, and Mexico have been convulsed by foreign and intestine hostilities. Resort to armies and navies for forcible vindication of our rights, or redress of wrongs, has but once been solemnly enacted. Hostilities by sea, against the revolutionary depredations of the French republic, against the piratical powers of Africa, and with various Indian tribes within our own territories, have taken place by authority of the American government. But the war declared against Great Britain, thirty-four years ago, is the single instance, since the acknowledgment of American independence, when Congress, pursuant to executive recommendation, ordered an appeal to arms, in the most solemn method of a declaration of war by act of Congress, till now.

Numerous petitions and memorials have been, during this session of Congress, referred to this committee, deprecatory of all war, and urging a Congress of nations to prevent it. To all such benevolent appeals it may be well answered, that the government of the United States, by the novelty and strength of its pacific organization, is the best guaranty of peace ever yet presented to the world, and that its transactions attest that consoling fact.

With great regret, and not till long after further forbearance was impracticable, the constituted authorities of the United States find force the only means of self-defence from long-continued, unprovoked, aggravated, and insufferable injuries inflicted by a sister republic and neighbor nation, with whom our preference was close alliance, and against whom the sword is drawn with infinite reluctance. But, as was the case in the war, at last, after many years of endurance, extorted from this government by Great Britain in 1812, there was no alternative but war to repel and punish the provoking hostilities perpetrated upon us by Mexico, without (except in the affair of Texas, which shall be explained) the slightest pretext for them. American property, persons, commerce, treaties, public ministers, consuls, and messengers, crews of national vessels—at length, our soil and soldiery—subjected to outrageous wrongs, seizure, incarceration, insult, homicide, and even inhuman violation of the dead, at last compelled the American government to vindication of their people, with no alternative but war or extreme degradation.

History affords too many lamentable proofs that nations the nearest in position, institutions, and mutual dependence, which should perpetuate their peace, are only more apt than others to quarrel and combat. While the North American conterminous republics of the United States and Mexico add another instance of this fatality, with earnest assurance our government may appeal to all its proceedings, since it fostered Mexico into independent sovereignty, for proof that the United States have constantly and anxiously, by every effort of conciliation, concession, and even humiliating self-denial, striven to avert the calamity of conflict in arms.

During many centuries of Spanish colonial dependency, Mexico, the richest of her transatlantic possessions, contributed three and twenty millions of dollars in silver every year, besides other immense riches in the productions of her soil, to the support of her mother country in Europe. In 1808 Napoleon's usurpation of the crown of Spain, his imprisonment of the Spanish royal family, placing his brother Joseph upon the throne, and invading the kingdom with large armies, in the order of overruling Providence, gave occasion for the revolt and emancipation of Mexico, with the other Spanish colonies of South and North America. The long-oppressed Indian population of Mexico, in 1810, rose upon their Spanish masters, and massacred them wherever found. Twenty thousand marched under their leader, Hidalgo, upon the city of Guanaxuato, with death to the robbers (by which name they stigmatized the Spaniards) as their watchword—at once possessing themselves of the treasures, the arms, and the ascendant, necessary for the complete overthrow of Spanish dominion in Mexico. After many years of commotion, showing that the Mexican population were unprepared for free government, on the 24th of February, 1821, the plan of Iguala (so-called) was established, by which a monarch was raised from the native Mexicans, in the person of Iturbide; which short-lived kingdom soon fell, with the monarch executed as a traitor; and in October, 1824, a federal republic was proclaimed.

From first to last the dealings of the United States with Mexico have been acts of kindness and amity: even while a Spanish colony, treated with signal liberality by our government, which discountenanced and punished the hostile expeditions of Miranda and of Burr against Mexico, and when it was apprehended that French emissaries of Joseph Bonaparte visited Texas with inimical designs, again despatched officers, and took effectual measures to frustrate the enterprise. The whole world witnessed the deep interest taken by the American people and government in the emancipation of Mexico from European dominion, and in her national independence. When the great continental powers of Europe combined to prevent that event, and one of them, sustained by others, invaded Spain with large armies, to subdue, in the mother country, the rising spirit of freedom, the minister of the United States at London, Mr. Rush, offered the British prime minister, Mr. Canning, to unite with Great Britain in declaring all the Spanish American colonies independent; and when the British government declined that proposal, President Monroe proclaimed "that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed, and maintain, were thenceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power, and that we owe it to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and other powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt, on their part, to extend their (the European) system to any portion of this hemisphere, as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the governments who have declared their independence, and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we should not view any interposition, for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States."

On the 27th of January, 1823, the United States led the way (which most of the great maritime powers of Europe afterwards followed) of acknowledging Mexican independence, and appointed one of their most illustrious citizens, General Andrew Jackson, to bear the homage of this acknowledgment as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from the republic of the United States to the republic of Mexico. Six years after, in the beginning of President Jackson's chief magistracy, his Secretary of State, Mr. Van Buren, on the 10th of October, 1829, wrote to Mr. Butler, the American minister in Mexico: "The United States, drawn by a community of views and feelings towards a young nation engaged, as they once had been, in a struggle for life or death, for independence and freedom, continued to sympathize with Mexico; and nothing but their immutable principles of non-interference in the domestic concerns of other nations, and of inviolable neutrality towards belligerants, prevented them from extending a helping hand to the young republics of America. From the moment that, consistently with their rule of conduct, and the established principles of public law, they could consider Mexico and Spain as two distinct nations, which fate had forever separated, the United States pronounced the freedom of America; and their Congress, with a unanimity of which the history of legislation affords no example, invited Mexico and her sister republics to take their rank among the independent nations of the earth. The influence which this important event had on the European powers, is too well known to require elucidation. The example of the United States was followed almost immediately; and Mexico, a little more than one year after she had proclaimed her independence, was represented at Washington by a minister invested with the prerogatives of an ambassador of a free State, and diplomatic and commercial relations were soon after established between her and the most influential powers of the old world."

Amicable inclination and territorial concession, by the government of the United States, to Mexico, began before the latter's sovereignty, by the treaty of Washington, signed there the 22d of February, 1819, and ratified there the 22d of February, 1822, commonly known as the Florida treaty, by the third article of which the whole province of Texas, from the river Sabine south and west, was yielded to Spain as part of her

Mexican colonial possessions. Soon after our acknowledgment of Mexican independence of Spain, however, a treaty of limits, signed by the American minister, Mr. Poinsett, at the city of Mexico, the 12th of January, 1828, and ratified at Washington the 5th of April, 1831, confirmed to the republic of Mexico the same limits by which the boundaries between the United States and Mexico had before been settled between the United States and Spain.

On the 4th of October, 1824, Mexico adopted a federal constitution, of which our own was the model, and which was well calculated not only to perpetuate the liberty and promote the prosperity of the different States composing the confederacy, but also to unite the sister and neighboring republics in bonds of the closest intimacy and friendship. On the 5th of April, 1831, a treaty of commerce and navigation was concluded between the United States and the Mexican republic, upon the most liberal principles of reciprocity, and everything promised a happy future in the mutual relations between the two republics.

Treaties of limits, followed by a treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, between the United States and Mexico, made every provident, and, as it seemed, every possible provision for the harmonious relations and profitable intercourse of two nations whose mutual interests, even without conventional stipulations, might guaranty their union. Instead of which, beginning with the very earliest proceedings of Mexican revolt from Spain, several years before independence was achieved or acknowledged, the indignities and outrages of a people but partially civilized, and a government not well established or conducted, never ceased to be inflicted on the persons and property of American citizens, officers, and vessels. The history of no nation presents, within so brief a period, such a series of wanton and unredressed wrongs. Many thousand pages of official correspondence, several volumes of documents printed by order of Congress, attest the complaints and expostulations of a power always able to punish its wrongdoer, yet for twenty years continually resting upon mere deprecation of the injuries, which, at last, without provocation on our part, or justification on theirs, plunged the two countries into the horrors of a war, of borders and of races, of unavoidable invasion and lamentable conquest, which, unless closed speedily by such a peace as the United States will no doubt gladly accept on terms of magnanimous moderation, may lead to disastrous changes of dominion and subjugation of people, fatal, perhaps, to one of the combatants, and disadvantageous to the other.

The first minister of the United States to Mexico, Mr. Poinsett, was recalled by President Jackson in October, 1829, by request of Mr. Montoya, the Mexican chargé d'affaires at Washington, in consequence of the prejudices then already arising in that country against this, and directed at the person of our minister. Instructions to his successor, Mr. Butler, from Secretary Van Buren, declared that,

"The time has been when Mexico was not disposed to deny in how great a degree those proud and auspicious results were justly attributable to the prudent yet bold and friendly policy of this government towards the new States of America. The people of this country had a right to expect, in return for their magnanimous and disinterested conduct, the manifestation, at least, of such a sentiment on the part of the people of Mexico which neighboring States should cherish, as it is their interest to cultivate and improve them.

"Every step which has since that period been taken by the United States, in their advance to meet Mexico upon terms of mutual good will, has been marked by a character of benevolence and disinterestedness whose object could not be mistaken. A minister of the highest rank, and invested with the most unlimited powers, was despatched to the metropolis of the Mexican confederacy, provided with instructions whose every word breathes a spirit of philanthropy and disinterested concern for the welfare of Mexico, which ought to have disarmed every feeling of jealousy and enmity, if, indeed, after what had passed, it could have been imagined that any such were entertained by the government or people of that country.

"The United States, enlightened by their own experience, and actuated by a sincere solicitude for the destinies of a new State whose interests were in so great a degree identified with our own, were anxious that Mexico should follow their footsteps in the career of industry and commerce which has brought them to their present high state. Their minister was, accordingly, instructed forthwith to open a negotiation for the conclusion of treaties and conventions intended to cement the bonds of peace and friendship which were to unite the two republics, and to establish the basis of their future relations upon the most liberal principles of public law, and their commercial intercourse upon those of the most perfect equality and reciprocity. The ports of the United States were to be opened to the free access of the vessels and productions of Mexico, and concessions, prompted by a desire to foster and encourage her young marine, were to be liberally made. Every means was tendered which could secure to Mexico, as far as her geographical position would permit, an equal share in the advantages to be derived by an intelligent and industrious people from an extensive maritime commerce. Not content with holding out to her a helping hand upon the ocean, the United States had instructed their minister to enter into an arrangement with the Mexican government to open a mutually advantageous inland commerce between the conterminous States of the two confederacies; a measure whose results, had not the benign views of this country been blighted by the pernicious influence of narrow and ungenerous suspicions, would, besides bringing to light the immense sources of wealth now hidden in the boundless wilderness of the North American continent, and enriching the citizens who inhabit the border settlements of the two nations, have been to repress the cruelties and depredations upon the frontier settlers of the savage aborigines, whose powerful hordes cannot now be reached by the comparatively weak arm of Mexico, who ravage the establishments forming in her new territories, prevent the increase of her population, and check the spirit of enterprise, which, if protected and fostered, would soon convert those immense deserts into smiling and populous agricultural settlements. It is most obvious that this measure, had it been promptly and efficiently prosecuted, would have been of greater advantage to the citizens of Mexico, shut out as they are from almost all communication with the seaboard, than to those of the United States, who need no such expedients to find a market for the produce of their agriculture or industry.

"Whilst this government was thus endeavoring at home to promote the true interests of the two countries, and to show by acts of the most unequivocal character its desire to lay the foundation of a close and lasting union between them, the same friendly spirit was displaying itself abroad in their diplomatic intercourse with the most powerful and influential among the European nations.

"Early in 1825 the minister of the United States at the court of the Emperor of Russia, then standing at the head of a European alliance which seemed to hold the scale that weighed the destinies of empires and States in the old world, and exercised a powerful influence over those of America, was instructed to use every effort to induce that monarch to take into his serious consideration the then relative condition of Spain and her ancient colonies, and to prevail upon the former to terminate a contest as unavailing for her as it had proved wasteful of blood and treasure to both parties. Similar instructions were at the same time given to the diplomatic representatives of the United States at Paris and London; and thus a simultaneous effort was made, at the courts of the three greatest potentates of the world, to bring the united weight of their influence to bear upon the councils of the King of Spain, and to infuse into them a spirit more favorable to the cause of exhausted America. This friendly interference on the part of the United States was received in a spirit corresponding with that by which the measure had been dictated; and this government has every reason to believe that the three sovereigns to whom it was addressed were well inclined to the great object in view, and in which this government was the first to act. * * * * Far from our being discouraged by the failure of this expedient, and still animated by a desire for the restoration of peace in America, it has, down to the present period, been made a standing instruction to the ministers of the United States at the court of his Catholic Majesty to avail themselves of every fit occasion to induce his government to give permanent tranquillity to Spanish America by the recognition of its independence, and thereby to confer a signal blessing on the civilized world, and on no part of it more than Spain herself."

Within six years President Jackson was constrained to address Congress in the following message:

"At the beginning of this session Congress was informed that our claims upon Mexico had not been adjusted; but that, notwithstanding the irritating effect upon her councils of the movements in Texas, I hoped, by great forbearance, to avoid the necessity of again bringing the subject of them to your notice. That hope has been disappointed. Having in vain urged upon that government the justice of those claims, and my indispensable obligation to insist that there should be 'no further delay in the acknowledgment, if not in the redress, of the injuries complained of,' my duty requires that the whole subject should be presented, as it now is, for the action of Congress, whose exclusive right it is to decide on the further measures of redress to be employed. The length of time since some of the injuries have been committed; the repeated and unavailing applications for redress; the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens; upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this government and people by the late extraordinary Mexican minister, would justify, in the eyes of all nations, immediate war. That remedy, however, should not be used by just and generous nations, confiding in their strength, for injuries committed, if it can be honorably avoided; and it has occurred to me that, considering the present embarrassed condition of that country, we should act with both wisdom and moderation by giving to Mexico one more opportunity to atone for the past, before we take redress into our own hands. To avoid all misconception on the part of Mexico, as well as to protect our own national character from reproach, this opportunity should be given, with the avowed design and full preparation to take immediate satisfaction if it should not be obtained on a repetition of the demand for it. To this end, I recommend that an act be passed authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States, by the Executive, against Mexico, to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us, upon another demand thereof, made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico.

"The documents herewith transmitted, with those accompanying my message in answer to a call of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, will enable Congress to judge of the propriety of the course heretofore pursued, and to decide upon the necessity of that now recommended.

"If these views should fail to meet the concurrence of Congress, and that body be able to find, in the condition of the affairs between the two countries, as disclosed by the accompanying documents, with those referred to, any well-grounded reasons to hope that an adjustment of the controversy between them can be effected, without a resort to the measures I have felt it my duty to recommend, they may be assured of my co-operation in any other course that shall be deemed honorable and proper.

"ANDREW JACKSON.

"Washington, February 6, 1837."

Still, in the spirit of forbearance, he was unwilling to resort to this last extremity, without "giving to Mexico one more opportunity to atone for the past before we take redress into our own hands." Accordingly, he recommended "that an act be passed authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States by the Executive against Mexico, to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us, upon another demand thereof, made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico."

The respective committees of Foreign Relations in the two houses of Congress emphatically responded, in their reports, to the character of these outrages, as portrayed in the message of General Jackson. The committee of the Senate, however, recommended that another demand should be made for redress upon the Mexican government, in pursuance of the form required by the 34th article of our treaty with Mexico, and the result submitted to Congress for its decision, before actual hostilities should be authorized. This article requires that "if (what indeed cannot be expected) any of the articles contained in the present treaty shall be violated or infracted in any manner whatever, it is stipulated that neither of the contracting parties will order or authorize any acts of reprisal, nor declare war against the other, on complaints of injuries or damages, until the said party considering itself offended shall first have presented to the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, and demanded justice and satisfaction, and the same shall have been either refused or unnecessarily delayed." The committee say, that "after such a demand, should prompt justice be refused by the Mexican government, we may appeal to all nations not only for the equity and moderation with which we have acted towards a sister republic, but for the necessity which will then compel us to seek redress for our wrongs by actual war or by reprisals. The subject will then be presented before Congress at the commencement of the next session, in a clear and distinct form; and the committee cannot doubt but that such measures will be immediately adopted as may be necessary to vindicate the honor of the country and insure ample reparation to our injured fellow-citizens."

The resolution with which this report concluded was, on the 27th February, 1837, adopted by the unanimous vote of the Senate.

In compliance with the suggestion of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, a special messenger was sent to Mexico, who, on the 20th July, 1837, made a final demand for "justice and satisfaction," in the manner prescribed by the 34th article of the treaty.

The Mexican answer to this final demand for justice and satisfaction was so far at least a confession that they were due, as to eventuate, two years afterwards, in the convention signed at Washington on the 11th April, 1839, by Mr. Forsyth and Mr. Martinez, for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the United States of America upon the government of the Mexican republic; proclaimed, after ratification, by President Van Buren, the 8th April, 1840.

Between President Jackson's message of July, 1837, and President Van Buren's proclamation of April, 1840, on the 7th July, 1838, Mr. Howard and Mr. Cushing, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, reported an extensive view of our relations with Mexico, as follows:

"Mr. Howard made the following report:

"The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which had been referred, during the course of the session, several messages from the President of the United States, and other documents, showing the state of our relations with Mexico, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully offer the following report:

"That causes of complaint appear to have existed for many years, on the part of the United States, against the government of Mexico, both on account of insults offered to our flag and national vessels, and injuries committed upon the persons and property of our citizens. Representations were accordingly made of these grievances, attended by demands for redress, by the accredited functionaries of the United States residing in Mexico; but as that government entirely neglected to repair these outrages, and the ill feeling of their people, or remissness in the execution of their laws, continued to produce fresh causes of dissatisfaction, the list of grievances became enlarged, from time to time, by the addition of constantly occurring injuries, the remonstrances against which were treated with equal inattention. It is not the design of the committee to enter upon an historical review of our earlier relations with Mexico, although the examination would show an increasing earnestness on the part of the government of the United States in its calls upon that of Mexico for redress, and a resort to more and more decisive steps to express its dissatisfaction at the delay, until the strong measure of withdrawing the minister of the United States from Mexico, upon the declared ground that his further residence there would be useless, roused the attention of that government, for a short time, from its apathy, into which, however, it soon again sunk.

"On the 8th February, 1837, the President of the United States transmitted to both Houses of Congress a special message on the subject of Mexico, in which he manifested a strong and proper feeling at the indifference which Mexico had exhibited to the repeated and vigorous remonstrances against insult and injury by the representatives of the United States, and recommended 'the passage of an act authorizing reprisals, and the use of the naval force of the United States by the Executive, against Mexico, to enforce them, in the event of a refusal by the Mexican government to come to an amicable adjustment of the matters in controversy between us, upon another demand thereof, made from on board one of our vessels of war on the coast of Mexico.' This message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whose opinion appears to have coincided fully with the President on the aggravated nature of our complaints, and the abstract justice, under the laws of nations, of the step proposed.

"The President said, in his message, that 'the length of time since some of the injuries have been committed; the repeated and unavailing applications for redress; the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this government and people by the late extraordinary Mexican minister, would justify, in the eyes of all nations, immediate war.'

"The Committee on Foreign Affairs imbodied their opinion in the two following resolutions:

"'Resolved, That the indignities offered to the American flag and injuries committed upon the persons and property of American citizens by officers of the Mexican government, and the refusal or neglect of that government to make suitable atonement, would justify the Congress of the United States in taking measures to obtain immediate redress, by the exercise of its own power.'

"'Resolved, That, as an evidence of the desire of the American government to preserve peaceful relations with the government of Mexico, as long as the same may be compatible with that dignity which it is due to the people of the United States to preserve unimpaired, the President be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to make another solemn demand, in the most impressive form, upon the government of Mexico, for redress of the grievances which have heretofore been ineffectually presented to its notice.'

"This report was made on the 24th of February, and does not appear to have been acted on by the House of Representatives, whose constitutional period of service expired on the ensuing 4th of March.

"But, as a strong indication of the opinion of both branches of Congress as to the two points presented to the notice of the House in the above resolutions, a clause was inserted in the appropriation bill, providing for the outfit and salary of a minister to Mexico 'whenever, in the opinion of the Executive, circumstances would permit a renewal of diplomatic intercourse honorably with that power;' which act was approved by the President on the 3d of March, 1837. Language cannot be selected to express more clearly than this the desire of Congress that amicable relations should be restored between the United States and Mexico, and its opinion not only that they did not then exist, but could not be renewed by sending a minister to Mexico, in the then attitude of the two countries, without forfeiting the honor of the United States.

"The adjournment of the last Congress, whose power had been invoked by the President as the only means of obtaining redress, left the political relations between the United States and Mexico in the following delicate condition: The United States had withdrawn its minister; the executive branch of the government had declared it useless to negotiate further, and called for the interference of the legislative power; and that power, speaking through both branches of Congress, had declared its concurrence with the President, by pronouncing it dishonorable for the United States to renew the mission of its minister to Mexico, at the same time clearly indicating a wish for the restoration of friendly intercourse, even in the very act of expressing the above opinion. It is the purpose of the committee to review, briefly, what has since occurred; in which investigation they trust that the House will perceive the reasons why this report has been delayed until this late period of the session.

"It appears, from the report of the Secretary of State to the President, transmitted by him to Congress with his annual message, that a formal demand was made upon the government of Mexico, the account of which is as follows:

> 'Soon after the adjournment of Congress, a careful examination was made of the various existing causes of complaint against Mexico, as well those of an individual as of a public character. The archives of the legation of the United States at Mexico having been brought to Washington by Mr. Ellis, the late chargé d'affaires to that government, the department was enabled to exclude from the list of claims various cases, some of them of a doubtful character, and others which, after having been presented to the government for its aid in procuring a settlement, had been adjusted through the efforts of the persons interested in them. A fair and full statement of the remaining causes of complaint, chronologically arranged, was then carefully prepared, (a copy of it is annexed to this report, marked A,) and forwarded, with all the evidence within reach of the department in support of each claim that had arisen since the treaty, to the government of Mexico, by a special messenger, who was the bearer of a solemn demand from this government for redress, (copy annexed, marked B.) This demand, with the accompanying evidence of its justice, was delivered to the Mexican government on the 20th July last.'

"The President, in his message of 8th February, had recommended that this solemn demand should be made from on board of one of our vessels of war; and the committee now think that such a demand would have suited better than any other with the dignity of the American government, and been more likely to have been listened to by Mexico. But the President had also recommended that the high functionary who should bear this last demand should have large discretionary powers, to be exercised, under the direction of the President, in the alternative of failing to rouse the languid sense of justice, so often and fruitlessly appealed to before; and these powers could only be granted by Congress. The plan of the President was consistent with itself, but the lingering reliance of Congress upon the proper feeling of Mexico induced it to withhold the grant of the power to make reprisals. To have sent an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary with a squadron, and instructed him to make so formal a demand, remaining for that purpose under the protection of the flag and guns of the American navy, without having the power to proceed further in case of the remonstrance being treated with neglect or contempt, might have been to expose the honor of the nation to severe and perhaps merited imputations by all those who might hear of such lofty pretensions and impotent conclusions. The pacific spirit of Congress, therefore, by abstaining from the passage of an act authorizing reprisals, marred the unity of the plan recommended by the President; and no alternative was left to the Executive but to make the demand by a special messenger, in the mode which was actually pursued. The messenger was instructed to remain in the city of Mexico one week; and as this brief stay has been the subject of some criticism, it may be proper to remark, that it would have been perfectly justifiable to have ordered his immediate return, after the delivery of his despatch. The Mexican government might, with entire propriety, have been left to the selection and expense of its own agent to bear its answer; and the delay of a week ought to be considered as a courtesy extended, rather than slight offered, to that government. The committee are not aware that Mexico has ever complained of this; and those who have found fault with it did not perhaps attach sufficient consequence to the reflection that Mexico had then, and has had ever since, the same facilities of communication with the government of the United States which the latter possessed of communicating with Mexico. There have always been in this country agents through whom despatches might be sent to the Secretary of State; or, if Mexico had preferred it, a special messenger might have been employed to bear the answer. It is of more importance, however, to inquire what that answer was, than how it might have been, or actually was, transmitted.

"The Minister of Foreign Relations of the Mexican republic said, on the 29th of July—

'The President, notwithstanding it is his most anxious wish not to delay the moment of that final and equitable adjustment which is to terminate the existing difficulties between the two governments, has, however, already ordered that the voluminous series of documents accompanying the said note from the honorable John Forsyth, and by which the claims in question are supported, should be translated and examined in this department. His excellency has also directed that, as this goes on, the results should be compared with those derived from evidence already existing in this department with regard to all matters connected with each case; and that, where differences should be observed, the local authorities should be called on for new and more distinct information. Finally, it is the desire of his excellency that nothing should be left undone which may contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which have so seriously engaged the attention of the American government. The minister of Mexico in Washington will then have the honor to communicate successively to Mr. Forsyth the opinion of the President upon each case, and the resolution adopted by him in consequence.'

"After these fair promises in July, it might have been supposed that, in the course of two or three months, some answer would have been given by the Mexican government, anxious as it professed itself to be "not to delay the moment of that final and equitable adjustment which was to terminate the existing difficulties between the two governments;" but August, September, and October came and passed away without a single note. At length, in November, when Congress was about to meet, and the silence of the Mexican government would have attracted the earnest attention of that body, presented to their view as it must have been by the President, the Mexican minister informed the Secretary of State that "of the fifty-seven subjects of complaint presented obviously for the last time," his government had only looked into four. It will strikingly illustrate the inattentive if not contemptuous manner in which the demand made by the United States was treated, that the list transmitted by the Secretary of State does not appear to have been examined at all, although it is difficult to imagine what state paper could have been of more solemn import, or entitled to a more prompt and anxious inspection. The third section of the thirty-fourth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Mexico, on the 5th of April, 1831, is as follows:

"'If (what indeed cannot be expected) any of the articles contained in the present treaty shall be violated or infracted in any manner whatever, it is stipulated that neither of the contracting parties will order or authorize any acts of reprisal, nor declare war against the other, on complaints of injuries or damages, until the said party considering itself offended shall first have presented to the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, and demanded justice and satisfaction, and the same shall have been either refused or unreasonably delayed.'

"In conformity with this article of the treaty, the Secretary of State of the United States addressed a letter directly to the proper functionary of the Mexican government, 'presenting a statement of such injuries, verified by competent proofs,' after the appropriate committees of both Houses of the American Congress had recommended this formal demand to be made as preparatory to a resort to the exercise of its own power; and yet the circumstances of the case satisfy the committee that this last effort of the American government has never been properly considered. Of the nine cases stated by the Mexican minister, five were not mentioned in the list of grievances, and the government of Mexico must have arrived at the knowledge of their existence from some other document than that to which reference is now made; others which are contained in it are numbered erroneously; and, finally, reference is expressly made by the Mexican minister 'to the index of the printed pamphlet sent by Mr. Forsyth to the minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic,' when no printed pamphlet whatever was sent. The message of the President of the United States to the House of Representatives of the 8th February, 1837, covered a list of the claims of American citizens upon Mexico, which was printed for the use of the House; and this list must have, by some indirect means, been communicated to the Mexican minister, and been by him transmitted to his government; because the coincidence is perfect between his references and that list: and the secretary of foreign affairs says, in his report to Congress on the 30th of January last, that 'some of the claims, unaccompanied by any proof, are limited to a simple indication of the printed list in which they are presented.' But that document was merely explanatory of the nature of the claims, to enable Congress to judge of their character. The Secretary of State, in revising the list and fortifying each case with proofs, as required by the treaty, when he made a formal demand upon Mexico, left out several cases and added others; and it must have been an inexcusable liberty or contemptuous neglect for the Mexican minister to use, in his correspondence with the Executive of the United States, upon so grave a matter as that which furnished the subject of their negotiation, a document which must have been irregularly obtained from the records of the House of Representatives.

"The committee have already remarked, that it was not until the 18th of November last that any notice was taken by the Mexican government of the demand made upon it in July, and then but four of the cases mentioned by the Secretary of State were commented upon; some superfluous industry having been expended by that government in rejecting five which had not been brought before it. It may be proper to examine what these four cases are, the decisions upon which are the results 'of the desire of his excellency (the President of Mexico) that nothing should be left undone which might contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which had so seriously engaged the attention of the American government.'

"The four cases are—

"1. The ship Louisa.

"2. The Cossack.

"3. The cases of Chouteau and De Mun.

"4. The Gorostiza pamphlet.

"The cargo of the Louisa, consisting of arms, cordage, and flour, with other provisions, was taken at the port of Acapulco, in the year 1821, by order of Don Augustin de Iturbide, and appropriated to the use of the Mexican government. On the 1st of February, 1822, that government acknowledged the debt, and decreed the payment of the sum of $48,363 to the owners. A part of this amount, $14,418, was subsequently paid, but the balance is still due. In August, 1823, the Congress of Mexico suspended the payment of this balance, but these proceedings were reversed by the subsequent Congress.

"Nothing could possibly be more simple than this case. The property of an American citizen was violently seized and converted to the use of the government, which acknowledged the entire debt, and paid a part. The result of four months' deliberation is announced by the Mexican minister thus:

"'From the records of this department, it appears that after various proceedings, and the payment of a part of the debt to the claimants, the subject had been referred to the general Congress for its determination with regard to the remainder. His excellency the President, being desirous that these affairs should be brought to a speedy termination, has been pleased to direct that endeavors should be made to have this matter decided at the next ordinary session of that august body, for which purpose this department will use every exertion; in the present extraordinary session it could not be discussed, as no subject can be taken up except those specially provided for by the laws.

"'I communicate this to your excellency for the information of the honorable Secretary of State, and, through him, of the claimants.

"'And I, sir, comply with the last direction, by transcribing for you the said note, praying you at the same time to accept my sincere respects.

"'FRANCISCO PIZARRO MARTINEZ.

"'To the Hon. JOHN FORSYTH,
"'Secretary of State of the United States.'

"At the 'next ordinary session of that august body,' the secretary for foreign affairs made a report, from which the following is an extract:

"'This republic, to show that she has been aggrieved, would require nothing else than the general conviction existing in Europe and America that the United States have not conducted themselves as good neighbors. If all the journals and reviews that have been published within the last two years be examined, it will be seen that, notwithstanding the difference of opinion professed by their editors, all agree in qualifying as hostile the conduct maintained by the American cabinet towards Mexico. The official journals themselves, of the United States, prove this truth; and it is equally proved by the debates in their Congress, as well as in the British Parliament.'

"This is the 'exertion' which the executive department used, in conformity with its promise, to induce the Congress of Mexico to pay a debt to an American citizen which it had itself admitted to be due. Between the promise in November, 1837, that 'endeavors should be made to have the matter decided,' and that the 'department would use every exertion for that purpose,' and its fulfilment in the manner contained in the above extract in January, 1838, no event had transpired, within the knowledge of the committee, to change the political relations between the United States and Mexico, unless the message of the President to Congress in December, 1837, be considered by Mexico as such an occurrence. The insufficiency of this reason need not be examined minutely by the committee, nor the right as well as duty of the President of the United States to communicate freely with Congress defended. This principle has been too recently a leading topic in our foreign affairs to need any illustration now; nor does the government of Mexico complain of it. There is, then, no reason why that justice, which has been too long delayed to the American owners of the ship Louisa, should have been further and, apparently, indefinitely postponed.

"The committee will not enter upon a detailed examination of the cases of the 'Cossack,' and of 'Chouteau and De Mun,' two of the four which are responded to by the Mexican government in November last. The official answer in the case of the Cossack says:

"'In order to present in a clear light this affair, which is now for the first time brought forward, to have search made respecting the circumstances, to have the exactness and the justness of the claims determined, and to obtain a declaration whether the treasury of this republic is bound to make good a restitution which is said to have been decreed by an agent of the Spanish government, it was indispensable that the claimants themselves, either in their own persons, or through their attorney, should present the documents required, and should appear in this republic.'"

"The proofs which are presented to the Mexican government in an authentic form by the Secretary of State, in July, 1837, contain a 'copy of a decree of the supreme tribunal of Mexico, dated 22d December, 1821,' which orders that the money deposited in the national treasury on account of the sale of the Cossack and her cargo should be paid over to the master, and yet the case is said to be brought forward for the first time in 1837; and those proofs also show that Mr. Taylor, the American consul at Vera Cruz, was the agent to prosecute the claim, whilst it is gravely asserted by the Mexican Secretary for Foreign Affairs that the claimants, or their attorney, should appear in the republic.

"With respect to the case of Chouteau and De Mun, it is sufficient to remark that, if the argument of Mexico be correct, it would become the duty of every nation, whose citizens might be seized and aggrieved whilst in Mexico, to hasten and redress the injury before the government of the country underwent one of those changes to which it is prone.

"The fourth and last of the cases to which a response is given by Mexico, is that of her former minister, Mr. Gorostiza; who, whilst enjoying the privileges attached by the laws of nations to his official station at Washington, circulated secretly amongst the diplomatic corps a pamphlet, written by himself, abusive and slanderous both of the government and people of the United States. For a particular narrative of this affair the committee refer to the report of the Secretary of State, one of the documents accompanying the message of the President to Congress at the commencement of the present session. When the first notice was taken of this transaction, it was merely brought before the Mexican Government, unattended by any demand for satisfaction or redress, upon the supposition that so much of it as has given offence to the government of the United States would be voluntarily disavowed as soon as the fact of its having given offence was known. The committee are of opinion that such a disavowal might have been easily made, without any abatement of the dignity of the government of Mexico, and view the course of that government, in defending points which might have been easily waived, as indicating a want of respect or an unfriendly feeling to the United States.

"The committee concur with the Secretary of State in the opinions expressed in his report, and think that the President would have been justified in refusing to receive another minister from the Mexican republic, until the conduct of Mr. Gorostiza was disavowed by his government. That he did receive, and continues to accredit him, is another proof of the disposition of the American government to persevere in every effort to restore that harmony between the two nations which their substantial interests require.

"At the commencement of the present session of Congress, the President of the United States expressed his regret at the unfriendly condition of our relations with Mexico, and concluded as follows:

"'Not perceiving in what manner any of the powers given to the Executive alone could be further usefully employed in bringing this unfortunate controversy to a satisfactory termination, the subject was by my predecessor referred to Congress, as one calling for its interposition. In accordance with the clearly understood wishes of the legislature, another and formal demand for satisfaction has been made upon the Mexican government; with what success, the documents now communicated will show. On a careful and deliberate examination of their contents, and considering the spirit manifested by the Mexican government, it has become my painful duty to return the subject, as it now stands, to Congress, to whom it belongs, to decide upon the time, the mode, and the measure of redress. Whatever may be your decision, it shall be faithfully executed, confident that it will be characterized by that moderation and justice which will, I trust, under all circumstances, govern the councils of our country.'

"This part of the message was referred by the House to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whose early attention was attracted to it. In the latter part of December, the Mexican minister wrote to the Secretary of State, and enclosed to him a copy of the following decree:

'DECREE.

'DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS.

'His excellency the President of the Mexican republic has been pleased to address to me the following decree:

'The President of the Mexican republic to the inhabitants. Be it known that the General Congress has decreed as follows:

'Art. 1. The government is authorized to arrange (or compromise, transigir) with regard to the claims preferred, or which may be preferred, by that of the United States of the north, and to commit to the judgment of a friendly power the decision of those upon which they cannot come to a determination, provided the United States themselves agree to this.

'Art. 2. The government is also authorized, in case the United States should deny the satisfaction which we should ask on our part, or delay it beyond the time which shall be fixed conformably with the treaty, or should contine the open aggressions already committed, to close the ports to the trade of that nation; to prohibit the introduction and use of its manufactures; to establish a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand; and to take all measures required for the purpose, and for the safety of the republic.

'MIGUEL VALENTIN, President.

'Terso Viejo, } Secretaries.
'Rafael de Montalvo, }

'Therefore, I order it to be printed, published, circulated, and carried into due fulfilment.

'Palace of the National Government in Mexico, May 20, 1837.

'ANASTASIO BUSTAMENTE.

'Luis Gonzaga Cuevas.

'And I communicate it to you, that you may be informed of it, and act accordingly.

'God and liberty! CUEVAS.

'May 20, 1837.'

"Why this decree was communicated, it is difficult to comprehend. It was passed in Mexico two months before Mr. Forsyth made his demand, as above recited; and, in the reply of the Mexican Secretary, not the slightest allusion is made to its existence. On the contrary, it is said that 'the President wishes that a reply to all (of the fifty-seven cases of grievance) should be regularly made, in order that a competent judgment may be formed with regard to each in its turn;' and, during the slow process by which four cases were examined in four months, it does not appear to have occurred to the Mexican government that the decree in question was any other than a municipal regulation, with which the United States had nothing to do. Even in the despatch communicating the decree to Mr. Forsyth, not the slightest intimation is given of any willingness to refer the decision of the claims to a friendly power; and the Secretary of State might, with equal propriety, have sent to the Mexican minister a copy of the acts of Congress, as bearing upon the subject of their correspondence. Still, there must have been some object in view in transmitting it; and when the Committee on Foreign Affairs remembered the positive assurances of the Mexican government, in July, that 'nothing should be left undone which might contribute to the most speedy and equitable determination of the subjects which had so seriously engaged the attention of the American government,' and the assertion of the Mexican minister, in November, that his government then 'began to make known, through his agency, the results of its minute examination,' they entertained a hope that, in the course of the winter, responses would be given to more of the claims, especially as many of them are of easy solution. The extraordinary omission or forgetfulness of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in his report to the Mexican Congress of the 30th January, to inform that 'august body' that he had pledged his faith to the United States that every exertion should be used to induce them to pay the claim of the owners of the ship Louisa, has been before remarked in a preceding part of this report.

"Two other passages of this Mexican document require a brief notice, in order that the course pursued, and feelings entertained, by that government towards the United States may be fully understood. The following is one:

> 'Those circumstances, then, of which the Department of War and Marine has already informed Congress, obliged the government to ask for a suitable explanation; and Mr. F. Pizarro Martinez was, to this effect, appointed minister plenipotentiary in Washington, after having been furnished with all the instructions necessary for the fulfilment of his mission. It is very painful to be obliged to state to Congress that, up to the present moment, this department has not received a single proof of the disposition of the United States to adjust our differences.'

"The extraordinary difference between the sentiments professed to the United States and those promulgated to the Mexican Congress, cannot fail to arrest the attention of the House of Representatives. In July, the United States are 'assured that, in its successive answers to the claims now preferred, its (the Mexican government's) conduct will be regulated by its sincere desire to preserve harmony and good understanding with a friendly power;' and, in November, when it had accomplished the arduous task of examining, however imperfectly, four out of the fifty-seven cases presented to it, the promise is renewed that the investigation of the claims will be continued, and 'the result of the researches communicated as soon as possible.' But, with fifty-three of the cases undisposed of, the Mexican Congress is told that not a single proof of the disposition of the United States to adjust the differences has been received. Perhaps this version of the affair is considered in Mexico as using every effort in its power, by a department, to induce that 'august body,' the Congress, to pay the debt which the records of Mexico itself show to be due, and which the Department of State could not avoid admitting.

"Another passage of the report is as follows:

> 'We shall soon have officially the result of the mission of Mr. F. P. Martinez, and he will either re-establish our relations, or authorize the government to put into effect the law of May 20th of the last year, and to take that attitude which justice and the fair character of the nation demand. Till now, it has thought proper to exert every effort in favor of peace between two nations, whose union and prosperity excite the liveliest interest in both hemispheres.'

"Mr. Martinez arrived in Washington on the 14th of October, 1837, and was immediately accredited as minister plenipotentiary. In November and December he presented the notes which have been commented upon in this report; and, up to the 30th January, he had presented no more. His effort, therefore, to re-establish friendly relations consisted in giving negative answers to four out of fifty-seven cases, and in communicating to the government of the United States the Mexican decree of the 20th May. What result of the mission the Mexican Secretary expected 'soon to have officially,' the committee cannot conjecture. As little can they imagine what the minister could have to say, which would justify the Mexican government 'in closing its ports to the trade of the United States; in prohibiting the introduction and use of its manufactures; and in establishing a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand;' unless it was that the government of Mexico must be fatigued with the examination of four cases, and would go no further with the list.

"The committee are fully aware that, in every free government, the right of unreserved communication must exist between its several departments; and this right they do not mean to contest for a moment. But they cannot explain to the House of Representatives their views of the present, and prospects of the future relations between the United States and Mexico, without bringing into notice all the circumstances which may affect those relations; and it is one of no small importance, that the actual posture of affairs is not fully explained to the Congress of Mexico. As long as that legislative body is taught to consider Mexico as the only aggrieved party, the difficulty of effecting a restoration of friendly feeling is clearly augmented; and it is only for the purpose that the House of Representatives may have in its possession the materials of forming an opinion upon this point, that the committee will now refer to a despatch from the Mexican minister to the Secretary of State, dated March 2, 1838. After acknowledging the receipt of some more proofs in some of the fifty-seven cases, which he had transmitted to the Secretary of Mexico, he says: 'The said Secretary states, in his answer, which I received yesterday, that he was about to enter upon the examination of these claims; and that he would, as speedily as possible, transmit to me the determination of the President upon each in succession, as well as upon the others still pending. I have the honor to communicate this for your information, and to express to you, at the same time, the regret of the Mexican government that it has, as yet, been able to reply on so few of the claims of the United States. We, however, trust that you will bear in mind the difficulties of procuring all the information necessary for such determinations, as the events to which the greater part of the claims refer happened so long since; and we are also persuaded that you will admit, as circumstances in excuse for the delay, the changes which took place in October last in the ministry, of which the said Señor Cuevas formed part.'

"With the tone and temper of this communication no fault can be found, whatever may be thought of the validity of the excuses for delay. If the information necessary for the determination of the cases were so difficult to be obtained, and the cases themselves happened so long since, it must be remembered that they have been pressed upon the attention of the Mexican government for several years past; and the difficulty which that government now experiences is owing entirely to its own supineness. In many cases, sufficient and authenticated proofs were sent by the Secretary of State, with his demand, in July; and even if this view of the matter be unsatisfactory, still it is inexplicable why the Department of Foreign Relations did not recommend to Congress the payment of the debt to the owners of the Louisa, which it had promised to use every effort to have paid, instead of presenting a report which was calculated to inflame the minds of that Congress against the government of the United States.

"The committee have now brought their review down to March, 1838; up to which time the Mexican government was supposed to be occupied in examining the proofs transmitted by Mr. Forsyth in the fifty-four neglected cases, and those which had been presented subsequently to May, 1837.

"But, in April, 1838, some sudden impulse seems to have seized upon the Mexican government, and have led them to this belief: that although the papers in the cases were so scattered in the various ports and towns of Mexico, that it was impossible to collect them to be examined at home, yet it would be easy to bring them together, transcribe, and submit them to the inspection of some third power. Accordingly, on the 7th of April, Mr. Martinez addressed to Mr. Forsyth a note, from which the following is an extract:

> "'His Excellency the President, being convinced that this [an arbitration] is the most effectual means of terminating, at once, the evils to which Mexico and the United States are now subjected, and of re-establishing, upon solid bases, the relations of friendship and good neighborhood between the two couutres, has ordered me to propose it.'

"On the 21st of April, Mr. Forsyth accepted the proposition, and declared his readiness to enter into the negotiation of a convention for the purpose of arranging the particulars of the arbitration; adding, that the posture of the relations between the two countries made it proper that this should be done immediately, as the President would not feel himself authorized to recommend any suspension of the action of Congress, to whom the whole subject had been referred, before a convention of arbitration had been concluded between the two governments.

"On the 30th of April, Mr. Martinez, who was then at New Orleans, informed Mr. Forsyth that he had applied to his government for the necessary powers to conclude a convention; but was, in the mean time, authorized to propose Prussia as the friendly power to which the reference should be made.

"On the 10th of May, Mr. Forsyth replied that the President agreed to the nomination of Prussia.

"On the 17th of May, the Mexican minister replied in the following note, which is the last upon either side up to the day of presenting this report to the House of Representatives:

"Mexican Legation,
"New Orleans, May 17, 1838.

"Sir: By the note which you did me the honor to address to me on the 10th instant, I had the satisfaction to learn that his excellency the President admits with the utmost pleasure the proposition made by me on the 30th ultimo, in compliance with an order from my government, to refer to Prussia the deceision of the claims and complaints of the United States against the Mexican republic; and that you are only waiting for my arrival at Washington to enter into the negotiation of the convention to be concluded to that effect.

"At the moment when I received, on the said 30th ultimo, the note which you had done me the honor to address to me on the 21st of the same month, informing me of the President's acceptance of the arbitration proposed by Mexico, I communicated it to my government, by way of Havana, and by another channel which also appeared to be safe. I would have sent a vessel expressly for the purpose of carrying information of such importance, if the blockade by the French had not prevented it. As it was impossible for me to do that, I was obliged to have recourse to the circuitous route above mentioned. I have, however, availed myself of the opportunity afforded, on the 10th instant, by the departure of the sloop-of-war Natchez for Tampico, to repeat my communications, and to solicit new powers, the want of which alone detains me at present, to my great regret; being, as I have previously assured you, sir, firmly convinced of the necessity of concluding the convention in question as speedily as possible.

"As soon as I receive the indispensable documents above mentioned, I will set off for Washington. In the mean time, I have the honor to renew, &c.,

"FRANCISCO PIZARRO MARTINEZ.

"To the Hon. John Forsyth,
"Secretary of State.

"Having brought this narrative to a close, it remains for the committee to submit to the House a few reflections which spring from it. The President has given formal notice, through the Secretary of State, that he will not recommend any suspension of the action of Congress before a convention of arbitration has been concluded between the two governments. Congress is about to adjourn, and no convention has been concluded. The subject of anxious inquiry with the committee is, therefore, whether any, and what legislative measures they will recommend to the House of Representatives.

"It appears somewhat extraordinary that this proposition of an arbitration was not made sooner. The decree upon which it is founded was passed by the Mexican Congress in May, 1837, and was not communicated to the government of the United States until December, 1837; and then only upon the ground, as it is asserted by the Mexican minister himself, that, 'in some of the newspapers in these States, notice was taken of the decree.' What 'newspapers' these were, or what this 'notice' was, it is useless to inquire. The decree itself is considered by the committee to be unfriendly, and almost hostile in its character. This will be apparent, they think, when the question is asked, and answered, why the decree was passed at all. The intention could not have been to clothe the President of Mexico with the power of agreeing to an arbitration, because, under the constitution of that country, he had that power already. But it must have been to vest him with a power which he had not, which is fully accomplished by the second article of the decree. By this he is not only authorized to close the ports of Mexico against our commerce, and prohibit the introduction and use of our manufactures, but also to establish a period for the consumption or exportation of those already on hand. The only precedent for the last sweeping power, in modern history, is that exercised by the Emperor Napoleon, in his continental system, when he forfeited and burnt all British manufactures which he could find within his grasp. And yet this same power is conferred by the Congress of a republic upon its President, to be used against a nation whose Congress had been discussing the propriety of vesting in their President a power strictly recognised by the laws of nations—that of ordering reprisals—and had declined to do so. The Congress of the United States preferred that another solemn appeal should be made under the treaty; whilst that of Mexico rushed heedlessly on in its career of unfriendliness, by clothing their President with the tremendous power of seizing and confiscating all American manufactures in the hands of whomsoever they might happen to be. The committee refer to the passage of this decree, and the nearly simultaneous refusal by the American Congress to vest in the President the power to order reprisals, merely for the purpose of contrasting the proceedings of the two governments, and showing the unwillingness of the United States to augment the difficulties existing between them. It is now proposed, however, by Mexico, to put into activity the friendly spirit of the first part of the decree by resorting to an arbitration. At what time that government adopted this determination, it does not appear. The letter of its minister is dated on the 7th of April, 1838. It is extraordinary, that, when the authority was given to the minister to make this proposition to the United States, and the further authority 'to name the power to the judgment of which Mexico was ready to submit the decision of the differences now unfortunately subsisting,' it was not deemed proper to give him also the necessary instructions and authority for the execution of a convention of reference. There was every inducement to do this. The President had, early in December, referred the whole subject to the Congress of the United States, upon the declared ground that 'the powers of the Executive alone could not be further usefully employed in bringing the unfortunate controversy to a satisfactory termination;' and this must have been known to the President of Mexico, because the Mexican minister, on the 11th of December, addressed a note to the Secretary of State, from which the following is an extract:

> 'Aware that, after so decided an expression of the the feelings of the Executive, my presence can be of no practical utility in Washington, I beg leave to inform you that I am about to return to the bosom of my family in New Orleans, where any communications can reach me with very little delay'

"The reference to Congress must therefore have been known to the President of Mexico. He must have known also (for the friends of Mexico are not inattentive observers of what passes in the American Congress) the opinions expressed by the Senate and reported to the House of Representatives towards the close of the last session; and in these circumstances the committee see abundant reason why the proposition for an arbitration should have been accompanied by ample powers for the immediate execution of a convention. It appears also that on the 30th of April, Mr. Martinez, then at New Orleans, received the note of Mr. Forsyth of the 21st, informing him of the acceptance of the proposed arbitration; and that he communicated it to his government by way of Havana, and by another channel which appeared to be safe. On the 10th of May a duplicate was forwarded by the United States sloop of-war Natchez, which sailed for Tampico. All these efforts certainly indicate great earnestness on the part of the Mexican minister, and the committee with great pleasure express their belief in his zeal and sincerity. But the whole months of May and June appear to have afforded time enough for letters to have gone from New Orleans to Mexico, and to have returned from Mexico to Washington. The consequence of the original omission of the Mexican government to furnish its minister with the proper powers, and of its failure to supply this defect up to the time of presenting this report, is, to place the Committee on Foreign Affairs in some uncertainty whether or not to recommend any legislative measure to the House of Representatives. Reasons may perhaps be found in the present peculiar condition of Mexico, why the attention of its government is too much engrossed with a controversy with another power, to have fortified its minister here with the requisite powers, since his application for them; and the committee are willing to yield to the force of those reasons, by forbearing to present any distinct recommendation to the House. They feel themselves constrained to express their dissatisfaction with the existing and unsettled condition of this negotiation. It is not probable that the arrangement of the contemplated convention will be free from difficulties. On the contrary, there are two circumstances which, upon the basis proposed by Mexico, threaten to be of no easy adjustment. It is not their duty, or perhaps their right, to anticipate the discussion of this matter; and they would have been gratified if an opportunity had been afforded for reviewing the whole ground, after the negotiation should have been closed, either successfully or otherwise. But the time is at hand when Congress will adjourn, and this report can no longer be withheld. They will therefore only express a hope that the government of Mexico is, at last, influenced by a more friendly spirit towards the United States than that which has characterized its deportment for many years past; and that it will approach the negotiation of the proposed convention with such a temper, and upon such terms, that the President of the United States can resume, permanently, the exercise of those powers which he has heretofore found insufficient to protect the honor of the government and the rights of the people of the United States."

"MINORITY REPORT.

"The undersigned, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, dissenting from the majority of the committee in some respects, asks leave to submit to the House a summary statement of his views relative to the actual posture of the controversy between the United States and the Mexican republic.

"Without deeming it necessary to enter into a particular examination of the subjects of controversy between the two nations, he concurs in the opinion, that the Mexican government, by a series of acts, part aggressive on the rights of individual citizens of the United States, and part immediately affecting the national dignity and honor, and by delay to make reparation in the premises, has given to the United States cause of resort to measures of public remedy, if other circumstances did not render such a course at present impolitic and unjust on the part of this government.

"He perceives, in the prolonged war of independence waged against the Mexican republic by the mother country, and in the civil anarchy which has accompanied and followed that war, much palliation, but by no means any adequate justification, of the irregularities which have marked the foreign relations and the diplomatic intercourse of that republic. Claiming the rank and prerogatives of an independent nation, the government of the Mexican States should observe the obligations which that station imposes.

"He perceives a further palliation of the conduct of the Mexican government in events connected with the establishment of the independence of Texas. But neither in this can he find any sufficient answer to the causes of complaint alleged by the United States, because some of the injuries sustained by us date back anterior to the commencement of the civil war in Texas, and others of a later date are wholly independent of that fact; and because, whatever reason the Mexican republic may have to take umbrage at the conduct of the citizens or the government of the United States in reference to that or any other matter, it surely behooves her to seek redress through negotiation, or other direct ways sanctioned in the usage of nations, rather than by occasional acts of public or private resentment.

"At the same time the undersigned considers the errors of the Mexican republic to be in so great a degree consequential on the disorders and revolutionary changes induced by her struggle for independence—a struggle undertaken in emulous imitation of the great example of these United States—that he thinks it becoming the honor of the United States, as the leading power of this hemisphere, whilst manifesting a due sensibility to wrong from whatever quarter, yet to hold itself ready to receive indulgently any overture of reconciliation and peace from a sister republic of the new world.

"He is the more strongly impelled to this view of the subject, inasmuch as peace, where consistent with honor, is the truest and best policy of the United States at all times; and, therefore, pacific means of redressing public injuries are, other things being equal, to be encouraged and preferred by us. All the maxims of religion and morals, not less than political expediency, and the enlightened spirit of civilization which characterizes the age, plead in behalf of the cause of peace.

"Add to which, that, independently of the considerations of profit and loss involved in the general question of war, many of the grounds of complaint in this case are for injury to the property of individual citizens of the United States, whose interests would be sacrificed rather than promoted by any hostile proceedings against the Mexican republic.

"Entertaining these views, therefore, of the general subject, the undersigned cordially approves of the proposition made by the Mexican government, and accepted by ours, to refer the controversy between the two countries to the friendly arbitrament of one of the most trustworthy European powers—a mode of ending national disputes, and of introducing into such disputes the law of reason in lieu of the law of force, which this government has nobly distinguished itself by adopting in other cases.

"In which condition of the affair, he thinks nothing should now be said or done to augment on either side the existing irritation; and he abstains, therefore, from all comment on the details of the late negotiations of the two governments.

"He conceives that, until the contrary shall distinctly appear, the amicable proposition of the Mexican republic should be entertained and treated by all departments of the government of the United States, and more especially by Congress, as having been proffered in perfect good faith, and as being an honest advance on the part of Mexico towards a full reconciliation with the United States.

"The undersigned at the same time declares, that if, however, the reverse shall hereafter appear, and it shall prove (contrary to his expectations) that the Mexican government, not satisfied with having persisted in so many acts injurious to the United States, has added thereto the aggravation of procrastinating redress by insincere and perfidious pretences of accommodation, he shall consider it the right of the federal government to pursue, in that event, the most prompt and decided measures for amply vindicating the interests and the honor of the United States.

"CALEB CUSHING."

The preamble to the convention of 1839 states that a convention for the adjustment of the claims of citizens of the United States, upon the government of Mexico, was concluded and signed at Washington, on the tenth of September, 1838; but not ratified by the Mexican government, on the alleged ground that the consent of the King of Prussia to provide an arbitrator could not be obtained. The seventh article, therefore, stipulates that the King of Prussia may appoint a person to act as an arbiter in his behalf, and the eighth article provides that immediately after the signature of this convention both parties shall, by a joint note, invite the said monarch to appoint an umpire, in the event of the commissioners differing in relation to the claims. Thus, several pretexts for procrastination and repudiation were to all appearance overcome. The sixth article allowed the Mexican government, if it should not be convenient to pay at once the amount found due, to issue treasury notes, and even those treasury notes were allowed to be valid for only one-half their amount in payment of duties.

This convention in terms confesses claims for injuries to the persons and property of the citizens of the United States by Mexican authorities.

On the 10th of August, 1841, Mr. Rives, from the Senate Committee of Foreign Affairs, reported, that in reviewing the history of the relations "which have existed between the United States and Mexico, it is painful to observe in how many instances the property, liberty, and personal security of the citizens, as well as the national rights and dignity, have been violated and outraged by a neighboring power, with which it has been our policy to maintain the most friendly intercourse. The government of the United States, in seeking the redress for these injuries, which respect for its own character, no less than the protection due to its citizens, urgently demanded, has at all times exhibited a moderation and forbearance in pressing its just claims, which nothing but the most anxious desire for the cultivation of harmony and good neighborhood with a youthful republic, just rising into an independent national existence on the same continent with itself, could have prompted or excused. At length, after various abortive experiments, assuming in one instance the shape of a formal arrangement, agreed upon with its minister here, but which the government of Mexico failed to ratify, and through a patient and persevering adherence by the United States to every honorable means of pacific adjustment, a convention was concluded and ratified by both powers for the settlement of these unpleasant subjects of controversy."

After a delay of nearly two years, on the 11th of April, 1839, the administration of General Jackson succeeded in concluding a convention with Mexico, "for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the United States of America upon the government of the Mexican republic."

The board of commissioners, under this convention, consisting of two American and two Mexican citizens, was not organized until the 25th of August, 1840; and under its provisions they were compelled to terminate their labors within eighteen months from that date. Four of these eighteen months were spent in preliminary discussions, which had arisen on frivolous and dilatory objections, raised by the Mexican commissioners. Indeed, from their course of conduct, it was at one time seriously apprehended that the board might separate, without hearing or deciding a single case. Finally, however, on the 24th December, 1840, they commenced the examination of the claims of our citizens, having then but fourteen months left to conclude their labors. During this period, the board allowed eleven claims, amounting, principal and interest, to the sum of $439,393 82; and the umpire, upon disagreeing reports of the American and Mexican commissioners, allowed fifty one claims, amounting, principal and interest, to the sum of $1,586,745 86—making an aggregate of $2,026,139 68.

It was hoped that the Mexican government could promptly discharge the amount of these claims, according to the terms of the treaty; but we were again destined to disappointment. That government stated its inability to comply with these terms, and its desire that they should be modified. The government of the United States, ever willing to comply with the wishes of the Mexican government, so far as this could be done without compromitting the rights of our citizens, acceded to this request, and on the 30th January, 1843, concluded a new convention with the Mexican government on the very terms which it had proposed. Under its provisions the interest due on the whole amount awarded was to be paid on the 30th April, 1843; and the principal, with the accruing interest, was made payable in five years, in equal instalments at the end of every three months. Under this new arrangement, made to favor the Mexican republic, nothing has ever been paid except the interest due on the 30th April, 1843, and three of the twenty instalments.

But this is not all, of which we have just cause for complaint. There were pending before the umpire, at the time when the commission expired, 78 claims, which had been examined and allowed by the American commissioners, amounting, principal and interest, to the sum of $928,627 88. Upon these he refused to decide, alleging his authority under the convention had expired. In addition to these claims, six other claims, amounting to $3,336,837 05, were presented too late to be considered by the board before its dissolution. To provide for the final adjudication of these two latter classes of claims, as well as others which had not been presented to the board, a third convention was signed at Mexico, on the 20th November, 1843. This convention was ratified by the Senate of the United States on the 30th January, 1844, with two amendments. The first changed the place of meeting of the board of commissioners from Mexico to the city of Washington; and the second struck out the 16th article, which referred the claims of a pecuniary nature that the two governments might have against each other to the board, with an appeal to the umpire, in case a majority of the commissioners could not agree.

These amendments were manifestly reasonable. To have compelled the claimants, all of whom are citizens of the United States, to proceed to Mexico with their documents and testimony, would, in a great degree, have defeated the object of the commission. Besides, a new board was to be, in fact, but a continuance of the old one; and its duties would have been chiefly to complete the business which had been left unfinished in the city of Washington by the former commission.

In regard to the second amendment, it may be remarked that it never had been suggested, in the course of the negotiation, that either of the governments had claims of a pecuniary character on the other, or that any claims existed except those of American citizens on the republic of Mexico.

Upon a reference of these two amendments of the Senate to the government of Mexico, it interposed the same evasions, difficulties, and delays, which have ever characterzied its policy towards the United States. It has never yet decided whether it would or would not accede to them, although the subject has repeatedly been pressed upon its consideration by our ministers. The convention of 30th April, 1843, has thus become a dead letter.

It ought, also, to be stated that since the final adjournment of the board of commissioners on the 25th February, 1842, twenty-eight new claims have been filed in the Department of State. Seventeen of these amount, according to the estimate of the claimants, to the sum of $1,147,989 55; and the remaining eleven have been presented without any estimate. To sum up the whole:

The amount finally adjudicated under the convention of the 11th April, 1839, is - - - - -	$2,026,139 86
The claims referred to the umpire upon a disagreement between the American and Mexican commissioners, but which were not decided by him - - -	928,627 88
Amount of claims submitted to the board too late to be considered, according to the estimate of the claimants themselves - - - - - - - -	3,336,837 05
Amount of 17 claims filed in the Department of State since the adjournment of the board, according to the estimate of the claimants themselves - - - - -	1,147,989 55

Together with eleven other claims, filed since that period, on which the claimants have placed no estimate.

The result of the whole is, that the injuries and outrages committed by the authorities of Mexico on American citizens, which, in the opinion of President Jackson, would, so long since as February, 1837, have justified a resort to war or reprisals, still remain unredressed, excepting only the comparatively small sum received under the convention of April, 1839. The history of the whole case presents a striking illustration of the patient forbearance of the United States in the face of long-continued outrages and wrongs inflicted on our citizens by the Mexican authorities,—we pass over, for the present, the violence which has been committed on the persons of our fellow-citizens.

That nothing might be wanting to complete the disastrous disappointment of our acknowledged, tried, adjudicated, and accepted claims of American citizens on Mexico, it appears that after three of the twenty instalments were, with great difficulty, paid by means of forced loans; two others have been dishonored, and their payment probably thrown back on the American government. But from Mr. Slidell's investigation, while in Mexico, and report, it appears that the merchant Voss, whom unluckily our own minister and special agent trusted, by collusion with the Mexican Secretary of the Treasury, (Trigueros,) got receipts in full from our agent, not for money paid, which alone he was expressly ordered to take, but for drafts on the provincial treasuries, which drafts were dishonored. So that, though not a dollar has been paid of these instalments in Mexico, the American claimants insist that their own government has become liable for the amount; and a bill has been reported by this committee for their payment by act of Congress.

At first the sympathetic admiration of the Mexicans for the Americans seemed to be as great as their hatred of the Spaniards. On the fall of the attempted Mexican monarchy in the person of Iturbide, which succeeded that of their Spanish allegiance to Ferdinand the Seventh, this country was made the model of that in all its institutions. Sixteen free and sovereign States confederated in a union like ours, by the constitution of 1824. Legislative power was lodged in a senate and house of representatives; the former chosen (two for each State) to be thirty years of age; the latter to be twenty-five years of age, and elected for two years; a president chosen for four years by the legislature of the several States; a vice-president with functions like ours; and a judiciary of the same kind. The first congress assembled at the city of Mexico on the 1st of January, 1825. General Gaudaloupe Victoria was chosen president, General Nicholas Bravo, vice-president, whose administration was at first wise and prosperous, and there was reason to anticipate the happiest results. In November of that year Spain evacuated the castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa, and President Victoria announced that after the lapse of three hundred years the flag of Castile had disappeared from North America, and that of the republic waved on the last stronghold of European power. Titles of nobility and slavery were abolished. But before Victoria's administration closed, Vice-President Bravo denounced it in December, 1827, as too democratic, and openly rebelled in arms against it. Bravo's insurrection was overcome, and, with several adherents, he was banished by a decree of the congress, dated the 15th April, 1828. These feuds were the beginning of the factions and revolutions which have ever since distracted Mexico. Mr. Poinsett, the American minister, was accused of taking part in their origin, by favoring what was called the Yorkinos or democratic party; and, after a popular outbreak threatening his life, was at last obliged to leave Mexico at the request of the Mexican minister. At the next presidential election General Gomez Pedraza, the candidate of the so called Scotch or monarchical party, was chosen president by a very small majority over General Guerrero, the candidate of the Yorkinos or democratic party. Refusing to submit to the election of Pedraza, Guerrero appealed to arms, and the famous General Santa Anna, as a leading partisan of Guerrero, from the headquarters of an army, in September, 1828, (pronounced, as they term it) proclaimed against Pedraza. Victoria, whose presidency had not yet expired, subdued and captured Santa Anna. But another insurrection broke out in the capital, which was pillaged, the Spanish inhabitants, many of them, murdered, and Pedraza driven from the presidency to which he was elected. On the 1st of January, 1829, congress declared Guerrero president, General Bustamente vice-president, and the office of minister of war was conferred on Santa Anna. Soon after, Bustamente rebelled against Guerrero, captured him at Acapulco, and he was put to death by military execution as a traitor in February, 1831. In 1832 General Santa Anna rebelled, and on his march from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, the 23d December, 1832, compelled Bustamente to relinquish the government to Pedraza, for whom a vessel was sent to this country, where he was in exile. In the forms of the federal constitution, Santa Anna was soon elected to succeed Pedraza, and inaugurated the 16th May, 1833. The same month he defeated General Garcia in Zacatecas, and proclaimed the plan of Zaluca, by which the federal constitution and State legislatures were dissolved, and a triumphant soldier made dictator. Santa Anna, defeated and captured in his attempt to subdue Texas, was succeeded by Bustamente, recalled from France. In 1841 Santa Anna again rebelled, and in September of that year reduced Bustamente to capitulate by the plan of Tacubaya. In December, 1842, Santa Anna dissolved his own centralized congress, and convoked a convention, and next year he was chosen president for five years. In 1844 he called for a forced loan of four millions for the conquest of Texas, Yucatan having seceded from his government. Joaquin de Herrera then became president in December, 1844, and Santa Anna was banished. The army, however, soon overthrew Herrera, because he would not carry on war for Texas against the United States. General Paredes, ordered to the Texan frontier, revolted at St. Luis Potosi, returned to the capital, and displaced President Herrera, the 30th December, 1845. Soon after, Mr. Slidell arrived in Mexico, who was amused till Paredes could concentrate forces for the war on the northern frontier, which was then declared and prosecuted. The forms of republican government were preserved during all these revolutionary disturbances; but the substance was crushed under the worst of all despotisms, that of short-lived military usurpation; general supplanted general, and revolution followed revolution in volcanic eruption. The foreign relations of Mexico became as unsettled and uncivilized as their internal operations. Great Britain, France, and the United States, the first to acknowledge Mexican independence and cultivate its sovereignty, were the first to suffer by it. Lawless depredations on the property, and outrages on individuals of all these nations, signalized the anarchical career of the Mexican authorities.

The history of no nation probably ever presented so many causeless and futile revolutions in the same cycle. The United States, by far the greatest sufferer, bore, not indeed in silence, or without complaint, but without resistance or retaliation, twenty years of gross injustice and acknowledged wrong. Petitions, memorials, and remonstrances from individuals and bodies of men, the victims of Mexican outrage, crowded the archives of our departments and the Journals of Congress. The official correspondence of Secretaries Clay, McLane, Livingston, Forsyth, Webster, Upshur, Calhoun, and Buchanan, with the American ministers in Mexico, numerous letters from American consuls there, the annual and special messages to Congress of Presidents Adams, Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler, and Polk, are filled with complaints of Mexico. Reports from committees of both houses of Congress, presented the 3d July, 1836, by Mr. Clay, the 19th February, 1839, by Mr. Buchanan, the 1st July, 1838, by Mr. Howard and Mr. Cushing, and the 10th August, 1841, by Mr. Rives, besides various resolutions laid before Congress—among the rest one by Mr. John Quincy Adams, of the 19th February, 1838—attest an incessant series of wrongs undressed, menaces and forbearance to put them in force, ever since the United States have had commercial or diplomatic intercouse with Mexico. Convulsed, distracted, impoverished, that republic, the prey of successive military usurpers, laid violent hands on the citizens of this country and their property, wherever pillage was convenient, and, promising atonement, violated nearly every promise with barbarous perfidy. Treaties of indemnity were wrung from her, but with little benefit beyond their confession of the wrongs, the Mexican government, nevertheless, persisted in perpetrating, and failed, except partially, to atone for. Outrage and impunity were the continual course of many years.

It is a common mistake of American grievances, to suppose that we are contending for the recovery of only pecuniary obligations; mere debts, for which their government may be held responsible to ours. There are debts of very long standing, and most aggravated kind. As soon after the Mexican revolt from Spain as during the Emperor Iturbide's reign, on the 22d of December, 1821, the supreme court of justice of Mexico decreed damages for the seizure, by the Mexican government, of the American vessel the Cossack, and cargo; which damages have never yet been fully paid. Cases, too, of individual outrage, were multiplied, from first to last.

In 1827, James O. Patty, with six other Americans, harmlessly trapping beaver, were seized at St. Catalina, in Lower California, and thrown into prison at Diego, where one of them died of cruel treatment.

Twenty-one American citizens, resident at Chihuahua, complained, in 1832, by memorial to government, that the arm of power had fallen heavily upon them, by a frightful system of usurpation, disregarding right, and trampling upon justice. Not only has American property been frequently and officially robbed, but the persons of American citizens thrown into a filthy jail, among thieves and robbers.

When a single individual, Alexander McLeod, was lawfully imprisoned in New York, on fair trial by jury, in an open court of justice, for an imputed crime of which he had boasted, the British government threatened, and the American government apprehended that the threat would be executed, to wage instant war for his vindication. The French government sent a squadron of frigates, which battered down the castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa, for alleged Mexican offences infinitely less than those the United States bore, with perhaps impolitic and unwarrantable patience, for a long time. French officers, at the cannon's mouth, exacted from the Mexican government reparation. Similar chastisement from Great Britain was prevented only by Mexican submission to peremptory demands. For the outrages at Tabasco, in which Englishmen and Americans suffered in common, the British minister, Mr. Pakenham, exacted full satisfaction. In 1833, General Arista, in forcible opposition to the existing authorities of Mexico, seized $100,000 from an English mining company, with which to pay his troops. In vain the Mexican government objected to the demand of the company for compensation, that the wrong had been done by rebels to that government, which was not therefore liable. The British minister informed the Mexican executive, without giving time to lay the case before Congress, that the money must be paid, or the British admiral on the Jamaica station would instantly compel it. In this way the affair was soon satisfactorily settled.

The auspicious dawn of amicable and sympathetic relations between the two North American republics was overcast by contests between Mexican chieftains, contending for mastery, till those disposed to be the best friends have been made to appear the worst enemies of Mexico. From Yucatan to New Mexico, the Mexican populace were made to believe that Mexican sovereignty depends on hostility to the United States. General Almonte, in Washington, often declared that close alliance between his country and this is the obvious interest of both; that each needs what the other supplies; that instead of Mexico seeking across the Atlantic for what she wants, and selling to Europeans what she produces, the United States can better afford the one and take the other. Yet it would seem as if Santa Anna, Almonte, Herrera, and Paredes, gain, hold, and lose possession of their government, by declaring hostilities against ours; and that forbearance or hesitation, in that inhuman perversity, is fatal to whatever Mexican statesman ventures to avow or betray it. Yielding and succumbing, as Mexican authorities always have, to French and English retaliation, the animosity which actuates them towards the United States can be attributed only to the impunity with which the American government has left unredressed their outrages on its people.

Great European maritime powers, intermeddling to prevent the peaceable annexation of Texas to the United States, instigated Mexico to join in their aspersion, that the American government seeks, by unjust territorial aggrandizement, to increase an empire already extensive, and to enlarge it by force or fraud. The accusation is wholly unfounded. The successive acquisitions of Louisiana, Florida, and Texas, were the effects of natural and providential American progression, and much more imputable to European than American ambition.

The southern, and one of the most desirable provinces of Mexico, Yucatan, it is believed, would willingly become a member of this North American Union, in order to enjoy in peace and prosperity the advantages which a fine soil, climate, and people afford, but Mexican misgovernment denies. If either intrigue or force (excepting defensive and declared war) were elements of American republican aggrandizement, the northern provinces of Mexico, Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Chihuahua, Leon, and all New Mexico, from the Gulf to the parallel of 42 degrees, might be American territories, without welding them by blows to our confederacy. If the United States were not immovably set against all foreign encroachment by force or fraud; if their government would even encourage the advances of many neighboring colonies, anxious to be free States in a Union able to protect them, most of the fine islands of the West Indian archipelago might be parts of this confederacy.

Not a foot of ground has ever been added to this country by encroachment, intrigue, illegality, conquest, or violence. On the contrary, European pragmatical interference has stimulated our pacific statesmen to enlarge the area of free intercourse, by excluding colonial monopolies. And never, after acquiring territory by purchase, has the American government failed to invite all the nations of the world to partake of the same free trade, in perfect peace, which is the bountiful fountain of American advancement.

The purchase of Louisiana in 1803, of Florida in 1819, and the annexation of Texas in 1845, were not only bloodless, but inoffensive, however prodigious enlargement. No foreign power has any more reason to complain of them, than of the growth of thirteen colonies to twenty-eight States, by means of peace, industry, plenty and prosperity. Complaint might as well be made of the teeming fertility of American diversified soils, the genial influence of temperate climates, or the still more exuberant accomplishments of self-government. A distinguished governor of the British Canadian provinces, the Earl of Durham, explained this in a report to the British crown, full of just homage to the vivifying and immense spirit of unfettered freedom combined with equal law. More than seven or eight millions of the stagnant Mexican population have been added, by natural increase, to the people of these United States, since their difficulties with Mexico began. Fleets and armies have crossed the Atlantic from Europe to subjugate Mexico, while the United States have been soliciting justice in peace from her, as from all.

It may be estimated that, producing fifteen hundred millions of commodities every year, consuming but a thousand millions, and exporting to foreign countries less than one hundred and fifty millions, there is an annual surplus of three hundred and fifty millions of produce left, for which markets are wanted by this country. To increase markets, therefore, is a primary purpose of the American Union; and that is best done by extending the limits of home, where commerce and intercourse are perfectly free. More territories they do not want or covet, except to extend the dominion of freedom. Forcibly seizing none, they have, within the last forty years, peaceably acquired much, but all in peace with all mankind, and with marvellous development of the free and federal principles of a union of States.

During the same period, the conquering career of the great European powers which accuse the United States of a spirit of unjust aggrandizement, and instigate Mexico to adopt that prejudice, till she carry it even to brutal animosity and hostility against this country, need not be dwelt upon. It is flagrant throughout Europe, Asia, Africa, South, and even North America.

The Texas question has been too thoroughly discussed latterly to require repetition of the argument. But, as between Mexico and the United States, a short answer is due to the world, as part of this report, to the Mexican assertion of injustice by this country, in which assertion Mexico has been sustained by England and France. For this purpose we must go to the root of the controversy.

We have seen how Mexico was convulsed by revolutions raised by military leaders through a long succession of the most pernicious of all dynasties, military usurpations, from Bravo to Paredes. From one of these ephemeral chieftains, Santa Anna, and his attempt to subjugate his country, sprang the independence of Texas. The sovereignty of that province of Mexico began with the same resistance to oppression and injustice which roused Mexico against Spain, and the North American British colonies against their mother country. The original settlers of Massachusetts, Virginia, Carolina, and Pennsylvania, seeking quiet and happiness in new homes, were actuated by no other motives or sentiments than the first American settlers of Texas, when it was a Spanish or Mexican province, but almost uninhabited and uncultivated. Just as our forefathers established homes in North America, our brethren did in Texas, and rendered it a loyal, industrious, republican, and unoffending State of the Mexican union. The only difference of their condition from that of our ancestors was, that the Texans were never colonists, but inhabitants of a State as free as Massachusetts or Virginia, in union with other States by defined confederation. Santa Anna, a military usurper, having, by armed force, subdued the other sovereign Mexican States, attempted the conquest of Texas. His avowed purpose was to destroy the federal union, and compel submission to his centripetal and military power. The case was precisely the same as if a general at the head of the army of the United States attempted to put an end to the present constitutional union of these States, and on its ruins erect a military despotism. Texas expostulated, entreated, sent missionaries to the metropolis to plead her rights. They were imprisoned, their remonstrance disregarded, their claim was treated with contumelious repudiation. It is a gross error to suppose that Texas revolted from Mexico; and equally erroneous, as asserted by some of the most respected statesmen of the United States, that, by uniting with Texas, the United States made war with Mexico. This was the fatal misrepresentation propagated, till Mexico rejected all discussion of right, and appealed to arms alone for decision.

A Mexican usurper trampled on the constitution by which Texas was bound in federal compact to union with several other emancipated Spanish provinces, and attempted by arms to conquer Texas into submission. The world, and particularly this country, should understand that Texas did much less in assertion of her right to free confederated government than the United States did when they threw off the European yoke. The Mexican confederacy was, indeed, commonly called Mexico; but it was a federal union of several sovereign States, one of which (Texas) was no more bound by the constitution, or by any right to submit to a military centralisation of the whole, than any of these United States is bound to submit to military consolidation or usurpation. The Spanish province of Texas was never part of Mexico, otherwise than by consent, as a sovereign State, to a limited union of several States. The Mexican union comprised nineteen sovereign States, called the United Mexican States—united in 1824 under a federal constitution resembling that of the United States, which was taken for a model.

From that union Texas never departed, but remained always constant to all its laws. An usurper, sword in hand, attempted to drive her from it, and, in attempting the conquest of Texas, was himself overthrown. By revolt from Spain the Mexican States freed themselves, as the original thirteen of these United States did from England. But by that emancipation Texas no more became subordinate to Mexico than Virginia to Rhode Island, or Massachusetts to Georgia. Every State recovered sovereignty, and parted with only so much of it as perfect union required. The State of Texas had an unquestionable right, at first, to become one of these northern United States instead of one of the United Mexican States—as Texas preferred doing.

In 1824, the fourth year of Mexican independence, and second of Mexican union, a federal constitution was deliberately formed and promulgated, declaring the government to be republican, representative, popular, and federal. Not till 1827 did Texas join that union.

After some years of national existence under that constitution, in 1834 a military usurper overthrew it, drove the federal Congress from their seats, and upon the ruins of the Mexican confederation set up a military despotism. Texas, a sovereign and distant State, resisted this usurpation; not, at first, by arms, but by such appeals to the reason and forbearance of unjust assumption as the North American colonies, from 1765 to 1776, addressed to their mother country; but with better right, for Mexico was no mother country to Texas, nor Texas any colony or subordinate State to Mexico. The Texan people were most of them North Americans, men who habitually appeal to reason before they fly to arms. In November, 1835, they published a manifesto of their principles and feelings, which is a monument of their unquestionable right, and of the equally indubitable wrong of Mexico.

The usurper disregarded all right but that of the strongest. He invaded Texas with an army, which he surrendered in April, 1836, at San Jacinto, and was, with magnanimous clemency both there and here, allowed to return to his capital, acknowledging Texan independence by treaty.

Just before, in March, 1836, Texas issued her declaration of independence, declaring that the federal republican constitution of their country, which they had sworn to support, had no longer a substantial existence; that the whole nature of their government had been forcibly changed, without their consent, from a restrictive federative republic, composed of sovereign States, to a consolidated, central, and military despotism, to which they owed no allegiance.

From that time forth Texas was a free and sovereign State, by all acknowledged principles of public law, and every standard of modern national sovereignty. As Naples, Spain, Portugal, changed their governments and rulers, we recognised them all. No representative government attempts to distinguish between de jure and de facto government. From the time when President Washington exchanged diplomatic ministers with the worst of the rulers of French revolutionary ascendency, till now, these United States have known but one rule of sovereignty. Our government, by act of Congress, the governments of England and France, and lately, under English influence it is supposed, the government of Mexico, acknowledged the perfect sovereignty of the republic of Texas; and it is impossible, either in fact or in law, to question the right of that republic to condescend to become a State in this.

Thus it has been briefly explained that the peaceable annexation of Texas to the United States affords no pretext for Mexican hostilities. The Mexican government would scarcely have alleged it, but for the instigation of others, and at length, by direct and unequivocal renunciation to the government of Texas, acknowledged its independence. That this may have been done at the instance of others, and on condition that Texas should not become one of these United States, makes no difference in the unquestionable fact that Mexico herself, like the United States, England, and France, acknowledged Texas as an independent and sovereign State.

Having disposed of the Texas question, which is the only pretext set up by Mexico for war with this country, further reasons will be shown for our going to war.

As American commerce and merchants have been great sufferers by Mexican wrongs, general misapprehension prevails that our causes of complaint are only commercial and individual. But that is quite a mistake. The national indignities have been such as the United States never sustained from any other government—such as one government has scarcely ever inflicted on another; and such as, by all the laws of nations, justify war: indeed, the commercial wrongs do so. The right of a nation, all publicists agree, is a perfect right, of refusal to submit to pecuniary injustice. A right to use force to obtain justice is among the duties of a government to its own citizens, and its perfect right against all other nations. Our wrongs, however, are much more than dishonored debts, frequently and solemnly acknowledged to be due for gross injuries and personal outrages, besides property withheld. The national insults by Mexico to the United States are probably without example. Of the six public ministers commissioned by this country to that as our representatives, (Mr. Poinsett, Mr. Butler, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Shannon, and Mr. Slidell,) no less than four (Mr. Poinsett, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Shannon, and Mr. Slidell) have been rudely rejected and expelled by the Mexican government from their territories. Of the nine Mexican ministers to the United States, (Messieurs Zozaya, Torrens, Obregon, Tornel, Montoya, Castillo y Lanzas, Gorostiza, Martinez, and Almonte,) at least three (Messieurs Tornel, Gorostiza, and Almonte) abruptly left this country, threatening war. Mr. Tornel and Mr. Castillo y Lanzas have, in Mexico, on all occasions, signalized their animosity against us. Mr. Gorostiza, before he left the United States, published an indecent and inflammatory appeal to our people, characterized by a late Secretary of State (Mr. Forsyth) as an endeavor to provoke a rupture with the United States, anticipating by an ex parte publication the correspondenee of the American Secretary of State, accusing the American government of want of faith—an impudent violation of diplomatic courtesy and propriety, not to say common decency, designed to produce an effect on European cabinets. General Almonte's protest and menacing demand of passports, on the 6th of March, 1845, (two days after President Polk was inaugurated,) must be fresh in universal recollection, together with Mr. Secretary Buchanan's mild, conciliatory, and forbearing answer.

From first to last, the instructions and deportment of American ministers to Mexico have been amicable, while those of Mexico to the United States have been violent. Mr. Thompson has just published a volume of kind recollections of Mexico. Mr. Almonte went home to be war minister against us.

To these instances of gross national offence several more may be added.

Several seamen of the national sloop-of-war Natchez were seized and imprisoned at Vera Cruz, barbarously treated in prison, and Mr. Burroughs, the American consul, threatened with imprisonment for interfering in their behalf. His official letter to the American minister, Mr. Ellis, stated that the seamen were barbarously attacked by Mexican soldiery and fishermen—an overwhelming force, armed with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets—two severely wounded, the other six all more or less injured, imprisoned, refused to be given up, and the sloop-of-war compelled to put to sea without them. An American citizen, interfering for these seamen, was shot down by the guard.

The consul's official letter said that, "If the government of the United States can bear all that has transpired in the way of aggression and outrage on its flag and citizens, I wish no longer to have my life jeopardized by a residence in this country; and I do contend that, unless some decisive measures be adopted by our government, in justice to the rights and liberties of her citizens in Mexico, our lives can scarcely be preserved."

On the 14th of April, 1836, Mr. Forsyth, Secretary of State, in an official letter to Mr. Ellis, American minister in Mexico, thus complains of another outrage on Mr. Wm. A. Slacum, an officer of the navy of the United States, arrested while bearer of public despatches in Mexico:

"The accompanying papers show that a flagrant violation of the acknowledged principle of the law of nations has been perpetrated, under the very eyes of the Mexican government, by taking from the custody of Mr. Wm. A. Slacum, protected by a courier's passport from this department, public despatches of this government addressed to Mr. Butler, and by detaining, fining, and otherwise maltreating him. The President is of opinion that the outrage is such as to warrant a demand of immediate and ample satisfaction. He therefore directs that you will forthwith demand and insist upon the immediate repayment of the fine, and the infliction of exemplary punishment upon all concerned in the transaction."

On the 28th of November, 1832, Mr. Butler, the American minister in Mexico, in an official despatch to Francisco Fogoago, Mexican Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, repeated "the particulars attending the outrage committed by the governor of the castle of Perote on Mr. Thomas Savage, a citizen of the United States, charged with official despatches from this legation addressed to the Department of State of the United States, and of which he was robbed whilst detained by the governor of the castle under pretext of being examined, although the messenger, Mr. Savage, had a passport of safe conduct from the supreme government of Mexico, verifying his character."

In 1837, the American schooners Julius Cæsar, Champion, and Louisiana, laden with lawful goods, on their passage from New Orleans bound for Texas, were captured on the high seas, without the territorial jurisdiction of Mexico, by a squadron of national Mexican vessels of war, put in charge of prize crews and ordered into Matamoras, the captors first having pillaged the cargoes, and abused, beat, and confined in irons the crews and passengers (including women and children) found on board them—the severity of which was greatly increased by the authorities on shore after they were landed. Two of the schooners were run on shore by the captors, and the third (the Louisiana) was recaptured by the American sloop-of-war Natchez, (after being also run on shore and her cargo destroyed thereby.)

The commander of the Natchez, believing that the seizure of the three schooners by the Mexican squadron was illegal, demanded the restoration of the two sent into port and run on shore, from the commanding officer of the squadron, commander of the Mexican brig-of-war General Urrea; and, on his refusal to restore them, the Natchez took the General Urrea and sent her into Pensacola. The government of the United States released the General Urrea, and the Mexican government released American vessels seized, in port, under its order; but no restoration of the two schooners took place, nor was any indemnity made to their owners, nor for the cargo destroyed while in the possession of the Mexican captors. Two of the schooners were condemned under municipal laws of Mexico, which it was pretended they had violated. Subsequently, the Mexican government acknowledged the illegality of the capture of the three schooners.

The provisions of the convention of 1839 included these cases; and, accordingly, indemnity was claimed before the board of commissioners provided under it. The Mexican commissioners, acting under instructions from their government, contended that the claim for the three schooners was regarded by the two governments as a diplomatic case—not to be acted on by the board. It was then submitted to the umpire, under the joint seals of the Mexican and American commissioners. The umpire left the claim (with very many others) undecided; and the Mexican commissioners abstracted all the original proofs, which were the property of the claimants, and carried them away, in defiance of the remonstrance of the American commissioners, the protest of the claimants, and the demand of the Secretary of State.

On the 18th of February, 1832, Mr. Livingston, Secretary of State, wrote to Mr. Butler, American minister at Mexico, that, on the first day of "February, 1832, the Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs directed the ministers of that republic in foreign countries to make the communication to the government near which they resided, advising them that General Santa Anna was fitting out an armed vessel without any authority from the Mexican government, and giving notice that it would not be responsible for any acts of aggression that he might commit. This vessel, sailing under Santa Anna's flag, committed an act of piracy by plundering an American schooner; and the commander of the United States armed schooner Grampus, being informed of the outrage, pursued and captured the Mexican vessel. She was carried to New Orleans and there regularly condemned as a piratical vessel, and the captain sentenced to two years imprisonment. Application was made by Mr. Montoya for a remission of the punishment. As the party which commissioned that vessel is now the dominant one, you may hear of the transaction in the shape of a complaint." That piratical vessel was called the Montezuma; she plundered the American schooner William A. Turner. James O'Flaherty, an American citizen, bought her; and near Sisal his schooner was seized, but finally restored, after ruinous expenses. On the next voyage to Matamoras she was seized again, and he imprisoned there, at Tabasco, and Campeachy. His claim for damages remains unsatisfied, after an award in his favor.

Discreditable volumes of these disgusting outrages, national and individual, might be added to this abridgement of some few of the most atrocious. Little informed as the American people are, still less other nations, of the monstrous injustice long borne from Mexico, a list of such instances, with short explanations and proofs, would be salutary intelligence, which this report, already voluminous, must omit, in order to resume the sequel of the proceedings of the government of the United States from the last account of them in 1841, down to the declaration of war at length forced upon it by Mexican hostilities.

It is undeniable that all the wrongs for which the United States have sought and obtained redress, either by war or in pecuniary compensation, from France, Algiers, Tripoli, Morocco, Naples, Denmark, Spain, Colombia, Chili, Peru, were much less galling or flagrant than those inflicted by Mexico. The injuries which provoked war with Great Britain alone equalled those of Mexico; and as matters of sheer injustice by no means, for England always pleaded reasons, plausible and persuasive, for her violations of American property and persons. Mexico has never mentioned but one, the annexation of Texas; and with how little reason that has been made the pretext for so much passion, plunder, and insult, we have explained.

Allowance is due, no doubt, for ex parte statements and inflamed accounts. But, making every allowance, the book of wrongs is an authentic and unquestionable history of such as one nation never before endured from another, if capable of self-vindication. We will not dwell on the invidious contrast, which must occur to every mind, of the weakness of the aggressor with the power of the aggrieved.

During President Tyler's administration of the chief magistracy, the complaints of his successive secretaries, Mr. Webster, Mr. Upshur, and Mr. Calhoun, continued in a strain of forbearance highly creditable, because from the strong. Then it was that the Texas controversy commenced, which would never probably have existed, or have been closed satisfactorily and speedily, were it not for the interference of other nations.

At one time, while the United States had a minister plenipotentiary constantly in Mexico, Mexico had no minister or diplomatic representative here. Mr. Secretary Webster's letter of July 8, 1842, to Mr. Thompson, states, that "on the 20th June a communication was received from Mr. De Bocanegra, Secretary of State and Foreign Relations of the government of Mexico, through the agency of Mr. Velasquez de Leon, at New York, who informed the department that he had been appointed chargé d'affaires of the Mexican republic to this government, although he had not presented his credentials." The angry correspondence which ensued between Mr. Webster and Mr. Bocanegra has been published and extensively disseminated. It would be useless to reproduce it in this report. The Mexican Secretary complained of supplies and armaments from the United States to Texas. The American Secretary, after full refutation of these charges, in his letter of July 13, 1842, to Mr. Thompson, the American minister in Mexico, directed him to state to Mr. De Bocanegra that "the President of the United States considers the language and tone of the letter of Mr. De Bocanegra of the 31st May, 1842, as derogatory to the character of the United States, and highly offensive, as it imputes to their government a direct breach of faith; and that he directs that no other answer be given to it than the declaration that the conduct of the government of the United States, in regard to the war between Mexico and Texas, having been always hitherto governed by a strict and impartial regard to its neutral obligations, will not be changed or altered in any respect or in any degree. If for this the government of Mexico shall see fit to change the relations at present existing between the two countries, the responsibility remains with herself."

The present administration of the United States came to the disastrous inheritance left by several preceding administrations, from whom it derived likewise the anxious desire uniformly manifested by every American administration to maintain peace and restore amity with Mexico, cost what they might. If pecuniary compensation had been the wish of the Mexican government, in adjusting the boundary of Texas, President Polk was as ready to settle all difficulties by this means as President Jefferson was to pay France for Louisiana, or President Monroe to pay Spain for Florida. Peace, at almost any price—peace at all hazards—peace at any cost short of national dishonor, was the earnest desire of the American government. France now holds Algeria, and England India, by force employed to punish much less offence than the United States were willing not only to submit to, but even to pay for, rather than make war on Mexico, though the conquest of that country is not considered difficult.

In the history thus presented of our relations with Mexico during a quarter of a century, an impartial world can discern no manifestation of any principle of action, or of any feeling unbecoming a people knowing its own strength, but averse to any resort to force while the faintest hope remained that justice would be attained by any other means.

When the present administration assumed the reigns of government, all these grounds of complaint existed in full force. Our citizens who had been plundered of their property and maltreated in their persons, were urgent in their demands that some efficacious measures should be adopted to vindicate their rights. They pointed to the numerous assurances which they had received from the official organs of the government, that protection would be afforded them against outrage, and compensation be secured to them for wrongs perpetrated. They referred to the various occasions in which the same language had been held towards Mexico herself, and she was told that while we still looked to her own sense of justice to redress the injuries which had been committed, yet the obligations which this government owed to its citizens were of paramount authority, and could no longer permit of procrastination. The national faith, it was urged, was pledged, and the national honor implicated by such language, and the immediate sufferers insisted that these high obligations should now be redeemed.

The President not only felt himself thus impelled by those who declared themselves aggrieved by a long succession of enormities practised upon them under the authority of Mexico, but the attitude which that nation had herself assumed involved the subject in new difficulties and embarrassments. In a manner far from being justified by even her own estimate of the avowed cause, Mexico had recalled her minister from this country. closed her consular offices, and notified the representative of the United States to her government that the deplomatic intercourse between the two powers was closed. No greater indignity can be offered by one government to another, than a declaration that the conduct of the offending party has been such as to cancel all obligations on the other side; that no explanation will be accepted, no atonement received; and that thenceforward no faith, or confidence, or communication between them can exist.

Nor was this all. From every department of the Mexican government the conduct and acts of the United States were denounced in the most offensive language. Their language, copious in terms of reproach and resentment, seemed inadequate to the full expression of their feelings. Proclamations were issued of the most denunciatory and inflammatory character, and all the worst passions of a brutalized and ferocious populace were systematically stimulated by public functionaries. Armies were levied, enormous loans raised, for the avowed purpose of carrying on a war against the United States.

It was not consistent with the duties of his office for the President to pass all this by entirely unnoticed. He, however, assiduously avoided any act or a single word calculated to foment these hostile feelings. While, therefore, he assembled in the Gulf of Mexico a squadron to resist any hostile movement, and assembled, at the request of Texas, troops in the neighborhood of the frontier menaced with attack, he directed the respective commanders of these forces to abstain from all acts of aggression, and only to repel attack. These orders were faithfully and scrupulously obeyed. The most respectful deference was exhibited towards the government and people of Mexico.

These military preparations were exclusively of a precautionary character, and were designed only for defensive purposes. It could not, however, escape the observation of the President that this position of the parties could not be continued indefinitely. It was necessarily attended with many of the inconveniences and much of the expense of actual war. Commercial intercourse between the two countries was at an end. Still, overtures for amicable settlement of the matter in controversy were perseveringly made. The wrongs which Mexico had perpetrated were of a character demanding reparation. The fact that they had been committed had been conceded by treaties, and, in a still larger proportion and with more definiteness as to amount, had been judicially examined and settled. The antagonistic claims of Mexico had assumed no definite character, except in one particular. No one subject has ever yet been made the ground of complaint by her, with the single exception of Texas. On this point the United States, while fully satisfied, and therefore asserting that they had not overstepped any line drawn by public law or the most rigid rules of justice or equity, had uniformly offered to make Texas a subject of negotiation, and of liberal and friendly adjustment.

The injuries perpetrated by Mexico were, however, of a very different character. Their existence was admitted; the atrocity of them was enormous; the character of them was settled; atonement in general and in particular had been promised. Individual citizens of the United States had vested interests in them. The claims of many were perfected by judgment, and the obligation to pay them was consummated by a distinct treaty agreement to that effect. Others had only not attained the same conclusive character, in consequence of Mexico having, in violation of every principle of natural justice and distinct obligation, eluded a decision upon them. The claims upon Mexico were unquestionable and unquestioned; the right of the United States to demand payment, and the obligation of Mexico to pay it, rested upon no uncertain ground, these points having been settled by mutual agreement.

The reclamation made by Mexico upon the United States rested in assertion on the one side, and denial on the other. We had offered to make it the subject of amicable discussion, but to this Mexico insultingly refused to accede. No alternative was presented; we must acknowledge the wrong, and proffer instant reparation and full atonement. The proper position of the parties was reversed. Her perfect obligations were disregarded; her disputed claims were to be unconditionally yielded.

Such was the perplexing attitude which the respective parties occupied; caused, not by any intrinsic difficulty in any question directly involved, but by the extraordinary and anomalous position which Mexico assumed. When a nation interdicts all the accustomed channels of intercourse, and threatens to avenge real or factitious causes of complaint by actual war, yet remains in a state of positive inaction, it is difficult to address her.

The President, however, through a confidential channel, sought to learn the real designs and wishes of our neighbor. He would not furnish her with any pretext for complaint by appealing himself directly to government. He abstained from placing her in the predicament of being compelled either to avow her resolution to hold no further intercourse with us, or openly to retrace her steps. With delicacy and courtesy the President sought, through a confidential channel, to ascertain the views of Mexico. Having received official information that a mission of peace would be received by her government, he withdrew the squadron from before Vera Cruz, and despatched an envoy extraordinary, with ample powers to adjust all the pending differences.

Scarcely, however, had Mr. Slidell reached the Mexican territory, before a fresh revolution broke out. A large body of the army declared against the existing government, and the avowed grounds upon which its overthrow was demanded was, that it had omitted to carry on the war for the recovery of Texas, and had reopened diplomatic relations with the United States.

With such declarations of the reasons of the movement and the ends to be accomplished, it was vain to hope from the new administration any amicable feeling or desire to renew friendly intercourse with this country. Mr. Slidell was not received or acknowledged after a stay of six weeks in the Mexican capital, but constrained to retire to Jalapa, a city more convenient to the coast, in contemplation of return to the United States.

This committee appeal with pleasure, not only to the transaction which President Polk set on foot for preventing conflict with Mexico, by sending a minister there to make peace, but to every sentiment of his annual message at the opening of this session of Congress, to the instructions of his Secretaries of War, the Navy, and the Department of State, to the military, naval, and diplomatic officers of the United States, to all the proceedings and correspondence of every one of those functionaries, for the conviction, which no just mind can resist, that peace was to the last the anxious desire of the American government, and that, at almost any cost, it was earnest in endeavors to prevent war, and not to provoke it.

Mr. Black, the American consul at the city of Mexico, was instructed by Mr. Buchanan, the Secretary of State, in September, 1845, in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, intrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments. The desire of the President was so strong to terminate the unfortunate state of our relations with that republic, that, without waiting till the Mexican government, which had suspended the diplomatic relations between the two countries, should ask that they may be restored, he consented to waive all ceremony and take the initiative.

On the 10th October, 1845, Mr. Black received the Secretary of State's letter of the 17th September; next day, the 11th October, made the communication to Mr. Peña y Peña, the Mexican Secretary of State, and forthwith arranged with him for an exchange of notes, dated accordingly the 13th and 15th October, 1845, by which it was settled, with appearances of cordial agreement, that the Mexican government would receive a minister from the United States in the capital of Mexico, with full powers from his government to settle the dispute in a peaceable manner, the Mexican secretary declaring that Mexico did not repel with contumely the measure of reason and peace to which it was invited by its adversary. By request of the Mexican government the American squadron was withdrawn from the vicinage of Vera Cruz, and, without imputing the vilest perfidy to the President, (Herrera,) there is no reason to doubt that he sincerely accepted the offer of peace so sincerely made by the President of the United States. Mr. Peña y Peña, indeed, intimated to Mr. Black his apprehension of the feelings and opinions of the people, which he said they must endeavor to reconcile; and that a strong opposition was daily calling the attention of the public to, and scrutinizing and condemning every act of the government, and that the government endeavored to give them as little pretext as possible.

There was also an unusual intimation of the kind of person they wanted as American minister, but nothing to excite suspicion of their sincerity. The American proposal was, an envoy with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute. The Mexican acceptance was, one commissioned with full powers to settle the dispute in a peaceful, reasonable, and honorable manner. The mere change of one letter in these terms could not excite a suspicion of complaint, first, that Mr. Slidell arrived too soon; secondly, that he had full powers to settle all disputes; and, thirdly, that his nomination had not been confirmed by the Senate.

On the 29th November, 1845, Mr. Slidell landed in Mexico, to which the Secretary of the Department of State, Mr. Peña y Peña, immediately objected, desiring that he would not go to the capital, or even disembark at that time, as his appearance at the capital might prove destructive to the government and defeat the whole affair. The Mexican government, Mr. Peña y Peña said, was taken by surprise; asked what Mr. Slidell had come for, and who he could be; the government did not expect an envoy from the United States till January, as they were not prepared to receive him.

This trepidation but too palpably betrayed that peace with the United States on any terms depended not on negotiation, or reason, or Mexican government, but on the intestine factions of Mexico, fomented by rival military usurpers to exasperation, only to be appeased by war. Paredes supplanted Herrera, as Herrera superseded Santa Anna, by enlisting the ferocious passions of a semi-barbarous people.

On the 6th of December, 1845, Mr. Slidell reached the city of Mexico, and on the 8th of December officially announced his arrival to Mr. Peña y Peña, with a copy of his letter of credence and Mr. Buchanan's official communication to the Mexican Secretary of State. Receiving no answer, he repeated his annunciation the 15th December. Meantime, on the 11th December, the council of Mexico resolved, for nine equally futile reasons, not to receive Mr. Slidell.

On the 16th December, 1845, Mr. Peña y Peña answered Mr. Slidell's notes, that the delay in his reception had arisen from difficulties occasioned by the nature of his credentials, as compared with the proposition made by the United States to treat peacefully upon the affairs of Texas. On the 20th December, 1845, Mr. Slidell's mission was annulled by an official note from Mr. Peña y Peña, requiring him to produce special powers ad hoc for the settlement of the Texas question, expressly and exclusively, before he could be recognised as minister plenipotentiary; as otherwise the honor, dignity, and interests of the Mexican republic would be put in jeopardy.

On the 20th January Mr. Slidell retired to Jalapa, a town between the city of Mexico and the seaport, Vera Cruz.

On the 29th December, 1845, the presidency of General Herrera was superseded by that of General Paredes, which aggravated the difficulties of Mr. Slidell's mission by another military usurpation, having hostility to the United States for countersign and watchword. The coincidence is remarkable between the American messenger of peace's arrival in Mexico and the overthrow, by military usurpation, of the government which invited his coming It was a disaster for the mission to be apprehended, and which might have been anticipated.

On the 1st March, 1846, Mr. Slidell, from Jalapa, repeated to another Mexican Secretary of State, Mr. Castillo y Lanzas, the proffer of peace rejected by his predecessor, Mr. Peña y Peña, wishing, by exhausting every honorable means of conciliation, to demonstrate to the civilized world that, if its peace should be disturbed, the responsibility must fall on Mexico alone. The President is sincerely desirous, Mr. Slidell added, to preserve that peace; but the state of quasi hostility which now exists on the part of Mexico is incompatible with the dignity and interests of the United States; and it is for the Mexican government to decide whether it shall give place to friendly negotiation, or lead to an open rupture.

On the 12th of March, 1846, Mr. Buchanan instructed Mr. Slidell, by the President's direction, not to leave the republic of Mexico until he made a formal demand to be received by the new government—the governments of Paredes and Herrera not being deemed "so identical that the refusal of the one to receive you ought to be considered conclusive evidence that such would be the determination of the other."

On the 12th of March, 1846, (by remarkable coincidence,) Mr. Castillo y Lanzas answered Mr. Slidell's overture of the first of that month, again rejecting him, and again repeating the sole cause of Mexican complaints—the only cause—Texas; for, in all these proceedings, no other cause of complaint was ever alleged. On the 17th March, 1846, Mr. Slidell replied, in a letter remarkable for the strength of its argument and moderation of its temper. On the 21st March, 1846, his passport was sent to him by the Mexican Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Soon afterwards he left Jalapa for Vera Cruz, whence he embarked and returned to the United States.

Explanation of this policy is to be found in General Paredes's war manifesto, issued at the city of Mexico the 23d April, 1846, and the appearance of the Mexican army on the Rio Grande. The Mexican manifesto bears all the intrinsic evidence of the war, which all these extrinsic transactions conspired to proclaim.

President Paredes had sent orders (his manifesto declared) to the general on the northern frontier, to act in hostility against the army in hostility against them. From the 23d April, 1846, therefore, war was declared at the capital by a manifesto to the world, and waged eight hundred miles off. The standard was raised, said the manifesto, on which Mexicans would behold the illustrious names of Hidalgo and Iturbide summoning Mexico to conquer, or cease to be. Should wanton and foolish hostilities realize the latter alternative, the catastrophe will not be sought by the United States, nor can they be answerable for it.

The conflict is in no respect imputable to this country; neither its causes, commencement, or consequences. The Texas question, after the acts of annexation by the United States and Texas, was no longer a subject for doubt or hesitation by the Executive of the United States, bound to carry their laws into effect. Texas became a State of this Union, and the American government had to deal with that State as it would with any other. President Paredes's manifesto insists that Texas was Mexican ground last December, when the last missionary of peace from the United States, Mr. Slidell, landed in Mexico. The American army, sent by the President to defend Texas from Mexican invasion, was as offensively on Mexican territory, according to President Paredes, at Corpus Christi, or would be at Austin, as if at Matamoras. In fact, from Mr. Gorostiza's appeal to the American people to resist their government in 1836, to Mr. Almonte's declaration of war at Washington in 1845, Texas or her boundaries never were subjects of negotiation with the United States. Mexico made no question of limits or of purchase; would listen to none; would not suffer Texas to be matter of argument at all; but, disdaining all discussion, she threw the sword into the scale at once, and insisted on trial by battle alone—war; not for a boundary, but the whole: she would fight, and for the whole. The issue of right and reason, which the United States importuned her to accept, Mexico thrust aside for that of might and force; preferring invasion to indemnity, and war to peace. The Mexican Executive left the republic of the United States no alternative but war, as the only means of peace. Mexico would hear nothing from the United States but at the cannon's mouth.

To the rest of the world, to futurity, and to our own countrymen, we are able to show, that as these odious hostilities have not been provoked by our government or people, so neither were they begun where our forces had no right to be, nor begun by them anywhere; but that Mexico struck the first blow, and struck it on American ground.

The provisional and precarious government of President Paredes was resolved on war while hardly double dealing about it with Mr. Slidell in January, February, and March. On the 13th January, 1846, when the American government had information of the perilous state and quarrelsome temper of that of Mexico, the Secretary of War ordered General Taylor to advance and occupy, with the troops under his command, positions on or near the east bank of the Rio del Norte, presuming that Point Isabel would be considered by the general an eligible position. That point, or some one near it, and points opposite Matamoras and Mier, and in the vicinity of Laredo, were suggested for consideration. But the general was expressly ordered not to treat Mexico as an enemy, nor even to enforce a right to the free navigation of the river, though deemed common to both nations. The orders to General Taylor and Commodore Conner bring conviction that the President anxiously avoided the dread responsibility of provoking war.

Whether the territory between the Nueces and the Bravo was American ground, the President had no right or power to determine. Several acts of Congress had made it his duty to consider it American. All his predecessors, from the purchase of Louisiana in 1803, deemed the Bravo the boundary between the United States and Mexico. The Texas declaration of independence, and a Texan law in 1836, expressly asserted it. Treaties between Texas and Mexico, likewise as expressly. The Mexican general Woll's orders, at his headquarters of Mier, June 20, 1844, were equally explicit to that effect.

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH,
"Mier, June 20, 1844.

"I, Adrian Woll, general of brigade, &c., make known:

"1. The armistice agreed on with the department of Texas having expired, and the war being, in consequence, recommenced against the inhabitants of that department, all communication with it ceases.

"2. Every individual, of whatever condition, who may contravene provisions of the preceding article, shall be regarded as a traitor, and shall receive the punishment prescribed in article 45, title 10, treatise 8, of the articles of war.

"3. Every individual who may be found at the distance of one league from the left bank of the Rio Bravo will be regarded as a favorer and accomplice of the usurpers of that part of the national territory, and as a traitor to his country; and, after a summary military trial, shall receive the said punishment.

"4. Every individual who may be comprehended within the provisions of the preceding article, and may be rash enough to fly at the sight of any force belonging to the supreme government, shall be pursued until taken, or put to death.

"5. In consideration of the situation of the towns of Laredo and Santa Rita de Ampudia, as well as of all the farm-houses beyond the Rio Bravo, in which remain all the interests of the inhabitants of the line committed to my charge, I have this day received, from the supreme government, orders to determine the manner by which those interests are to be protected; but, until the determination of the supreme government be received, I warn all those who are beyond the limits here prescribed to bring them within the line, or to abandon them, as those who disobey this order will infallibly suffer the punishment here established.

"ADRIAN WOLL."

As a question for negotiation, the case would be different from one of defence from invasion. The President was bound to protect whatever was claimed as American ground. In 1794, General Wayne, by President Washington's orders, ravaged the Indian possessions on our western frontier, (now Ohio,) and burnt the residence of Colonel McKee, the British agent. When the commander of the British fort, on disputed territory, complained of Wayne's violence, his answer was, that, if necessary, he would subdue the British troops and fort. In 1813, General Wilkinson, by order of President Madison, pursuant to a resolution of Congress, forcibly seized the Spanish fort where the city of Mobile now stands, then disputed territory, claimed by the United States as Louisiana, but held by Spain as Florida. President Polk had no constitutional right to stop short of the Bravo; and, in truth, the province of Texas extended to that river by territorial configuration, which nature itself has rendered the limitary demarcation of that region.

The published correspondence between the War Department and Gen. Taylor is all proof that, like the President, his prudent lieutenant at the head of the small army of occupation was earnestly resolved against any aggression.

On the 28th of May, 1845, the Secretary of War addressed a communication to General Taylor, then at Fort Jesup, Louisiana, directing him to place the forces under his command, and such as might subsequently be assigned to him, in a position where they could most promptly and efficiently act in defence of Texas, in case it should become necessary or proper to employ them for that purpose. "As soon as the Texan Congress shall have given its consent to annexation, and a convention shall assemble and accept the terms offered in the resolutions of Congress, Texas will then be regarded by the executive government here so far a part of the United States as to be entitled from this government to defence and protection from foreign invasion and Indian incursions. The troops under your command will be placed and kept in readiness to perform this duty." Until such consent should be formally given, General T. was instructed not to enter Texas except in pursuit of Indians invading that republic from the territory of the United States, and with the approbation of the Texan authorities.

On the 15th of June, 1845, a communication was addressed to General Taylor by Mr. Bancroft, then acting Secretary of War, informing him that on the 4th of July then ensuing, or very soon after, the convention of the people of Texas would probably accept the proposition of annexation tendered by the Congress of the United States, and instructing him, (Gen. Taylor,) in anticipation of this event, to advance to the mouth of the Sabine, or to such other point on the Gulf of Mexico as he might judge most convenient for an embarcation at the proper time for the western frontier of Texas. In this despatch the Secretary uses the following language: "The point of your ultimate destination is the western frontier of Texas, where you will select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande del Norte, such a site as will consist with the health of the troops, and will be best adapted to repel invasion, and to protect what, in the event of annexation, will be our western border. You will limit yourself to the defence of the territory of Texas, unless Mexico shall declare war against the United States."

As was anticipated, the convention of Texas, on the 4th of July, 1845, by a unanimous vote, accepted the terms of annexation offered by the Congress of the United States.

On the 8th of the same month, the Secretary of War addressed to Gen. Taylor the following order:

"This department is informed that Mexico has some military establishments on the east side of the Rio Grande, which are, and for some time have been, in the actual occupancy of her troops. In carrying out the instructions heretofore received, you will be careful to avoid any acts of aggression, unless an actual state of war should exist. The Mexican forces at the posts in their possession, and which have been so, will not be disturbed as long as the relations of peace between the United States and Mexico continue."

On the 20th of the same month, General Taylor replied, acknowledging the receipt of the above instructions, and adding:

"Those instructions will be closely obeyed, and the department may rest assured that I will take no step to interrupt the friendly relations between the United States and Mexico. I am gratified at receiving these instructions, as they confirm my views, previously communicated, in regard to the proper line to be occupied at present by our troops."

This despatch was dated at New Orleans. About the same time, Gen. T. received a letter from Mr. Donelson, our minister in Texas, informing him of the unanimous act of the Texan convention, accepting the terms of annexation proffered by Congress. On the next day after receiving this information he left New Orleans by steamboat, with a portion of his troops, for western Texas, agreeably to previous instructions, and arrived at St. Joseph's island (Aransas inlet) July 25th, and soon after established his quarters at Corpus Christi, on the west side of the river Nueces, near its mouth.

On the 30th of the same month, the Secretary of War addressed him as follows:

"He (the President) has not the requisite information in regard to the country to enable him to give any positive directions as to the position you ought to take, or the movements which it may be expedient to make. These must be governed by circumstances. While avoiding—as you have been instructed to do—all aggressive measures towards Mexico, as long as the relations of peace exist between that republic and the United States, you are expected to occupy, protect, and defend the territory of Texas, to the extent that it has been occupied by the people of Texas. The Rio Grande is claimed to be the boundary between the two countries, and up to this boundary you are to extend your protection, only excepting any posts on the eastern side thereof which are in the actual occupancy of Mexican forces, or Mexican settlements, over which the republic of Texas did not exercise jurisdiction at the period of annexation, or shortly before that event. It is expected that, in selecting the establishment for your troops, you will approach as near the boundary-line—the Rio Grande—as prudence will dictate. With this view, the President desires that your position, for a part of your forces at least, should be west of the river Nueces."

In the last-mentioned particular, General Taylor anticipated the wishes of the department; having occupied Corpus Christi, on the west bank of the Nueces, before the despatch (of which the above is an extract) reached him. In acknowledging its receipt, he says, August 15th: "I am gratified to find that my measures, thus far, have met the approbation of the government and general-in-chief, and particularly to find that I have but anticipated the wishes of the President in taking up a position west of the Nueces."

Under date of August 23d, the Secretary of War addressed General Taylor as follows:

"The information hitherto received as to the intentions of Mexico, and the measures she may adopt, does not enable the administration here to give you more explicit instructions in regard to your movements than those which have been already forwarded to you. There is reason to believe that Mexico is making efforts to assemble a large army on the frontier of Texas, for the purpose of entering its territory, and holding forcible possession of it. Of their movements you are doubtless advised, and we trust have taken, or early will take, prompt and efficient steps to meet and repel any such hostile incursion. Should Mexico assemble a large body of troops on the Rio Grande, and cross it with a considerable force, such a movement must be regarded as an invasion of the United States, and the commencement of hostilities. You will of course use all the authority which has been, or may be given to you, to meet such a state of things. Texas must be protected from hostile invasion; and for that purpose you will of course employ, to the utmost extent, all the means you possess or can command."

On the 4th of October, 1845, General Taylor writes to the War Department as follows:

"It will be recollected that the instructions of June 15, issued by Mr. Bancroft, then acting Secretary of War, directed me to 'select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande, such a site as will consist with the health of the troops, and will be best adapted to repel invasion,' &c. Brasos Santiago is the nearest entrance to the mouth of the Rio Grande; and Point Isabel, within that entrance, and twenty-one miles from Matamoras, would have fulfilled more completely than any other position the conditions imposed by the Secretary. But we had no artillery, no engineer force or appliances, and but a moderate amount of infantry; and the occupation of Point Isabel, under these circumstances, and with at least the possibility of resistance from the Mexicans, might have compromised the safety of the command. I therefore determined to take up the next accessible position in the rear, which is the mouth of the Nueces river. * *

"Our position thus far has, I think, been the best possible; but, now that the entire force will soon be concentrated, it may well be a question whether the views of government will be best carried out by our remaining at this point. It is with great deference that I make any suggestions on topics which may become matter of delicate negotiation. But if our government, in settling the question of boundary, makes the line of the Rio Grande an ultimatum, I cannot doubt that the settlement will be greatly facilitated and hastened by our taking possession at once of one or two suitable points on or quite near that river. Our strength and state of preparation should be displayed in a manner not to be mistaken. However salutary may be the effect produced upon the border people by our presence here, we are too far from the frontier to impress the government of Mexico with our readiness to vindicate, by force of arms, if necessary, our title to the country as far as the Rio Grande. The 'army of occupation' will, in a few days, be concentrated at this point, in condition for vigorous and efficient service. Mexico having as yet made no positive declaration of war, or committed any overt act of hostilities, I do not feel at liberty, under my instructions, particularly those of July 8, to make a forward movement to the Rio Grande without authority from the War Department."

Under date of Corpus Christi, November 27th, General Taylor writes to the department that the intelligence from Mexico tends to modify in some degree the views expressed in the above extract. He says: "The position now occupied by the troops may perhaps be the best while negotiations are pending, or at any rate until a disposition shall be manifested by Mexico to protract them unreasonably. Under the supposition that such may be the view of the department, I shall make no movement from this point, except for the purpose of examining the country, until further instructions are received."

The news from Mexico to which General Taylor alludes, was to the effect that the Mexican government had accepted the proposal made by the government of the United States to arrange the existing difficulties by negotiation; but it failed of its object, in consequence of a revolution by General Paredes, then at the head of the army, who made this very consent a pretext for his movements. The manifesto adopted by the army of reserve, at St. Louis Potosi, on the 14th December last, when and where the revolution first manifested itself in form, justified the movement on the ground that the then existing administration (Herrera's) "had repeatedly thwarted the purpose of the army to move upon Texas, and at the same time allowed the army to be vilified for its inaction by official journals; that it had admitted a commissioner (meaning Mr. Slidell) with whom it was endeavoring to arrange for the loss of the integrity of the republic; that it had reduced the country almost to a state of anarchy, in the midst of which it existed without revenue, without power, and almost without will; that these evils demanded an immediate remedy, and that the administration confessed its total incompetency and powerlessness; that it had lost all respectability so necessary to a government, and had allowed a plenipotentiary of the United States to set foot in the country and reside in the capital with a view to bargain for the independence and nationality of the country, for which have been made so many sacrifices."

All this occurred while our army remained at Corpus Christi, and before the order was given for its march to the Rio Grande. The date of this order is January 13th, 1846—thirty days after the revolution broke out. The complaint that President Herrera had "repeatedly thwarted the purpose of the army to move upon Texas," evidently did not refer merely to the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, but to Texas generally. We see in all a rigid adherence to the defensive. Although our claim of territory extended to the Rio Grande, yet he had been specially enjoined not to assail any military stations of the Mexicans which might exist on this side of the river, and not to enforce the right of the common navigation of that river.

He strictly followed his instructions. Beyond the mere fact of taking a position immediately on the banks of the Rio Grande, as ordered by the government, General Taylor did act, and continued to act, rigidly on the defensive, avoiding all unnecessary provocation, until he was attacked by the Mexicans—first, in his encampment opposite Matamoras, and then on his march from Point Isabel to his encampment.

The Mexican declaration of war at the National Palace of Mexico, on the 23d of April, 1846, preceded by twenty days the act of Congress providing on the 13th of May, 1846, for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and Mexico. At that time Congress and the President were uninformed of the Mexican manifesto, intelligence of which did not reach Washington till the 20th of May; but unprovoked and inhuman acts of hostility on the east side of the Bravo were known throughout the United States, justifying, as they challenged, the message of the President of the 12th, and the act of Congress of the 13th May.

It having thus been shown that the war was long designed and prepared by Mexico, while the United States were entreating peace, and proffering almost any terms for it, and then begun on American soil, all that remains to be shown is that the first blow was also Mexican.

In President Paredes's manifesto of the 23d of April, 1846, he avows that he had sent orders to the general on the northern frontier to act in hostility to the army which is in hostility against us; to oppose war to the enemy which wars upon us. Our general, says this declaration of war, "acting according to established usages, and the decided instructions given by my government, summoned the general of the American forces to retire beyond the Nueces, and the summons has been disregarded." The God of battles is invoked; the world called to witness the valor of Mexican armies; and every sentiment of hostility is appealed to by this declaration of war. But, furthermore, it declared that American troops occupied Mexican territory at the very time when Mr. Slidell appeared there, which was in December, 1845, and that his mission itself was an additional insult to Mexico. The revolution of the 14th of December, 1845, which raised General Paredes on the overthrow of General Herrera, was proclaimed by Paredes as sanctioned by the people, waiting with impatience to rush forward to another war, to which they were called by the scandalous aggressions of a government calling itself our friend, but at the same time aiming to prostrate us. In another manifesto of Paredes to the people of Mexico, on entering their capital, he declared that he would ask their leave to march to the frontier to encounter the usurpers of their territory and enemies of their independence and prosperity. The promise of his advent was the recovery of Texas by force. The Mexican Minister of War, General Almonte, on the 6th of March, 1845, at Washington, had protested against the annexation of Texas, demanded his passports, abruptly left the United States, and the functions of our minister in Mexico were put an end to. General Almonte, the Secretary of War, and General Paredes, at Mexico, announced that he was "preparing for the Texas campaign." Accordingly, loans were raised and large bodies of troops moved to Texas. The public journals of Matamoras, the city of Mexico, and Vera Cruz, announced the war; all unattached officers of the Mexican troops were ordered to their army on the Bravo for the invasion of Texas; and it was said the Mexican war establishment was to be increased to sixty thousand men. General Arista, suspected of good will to this country, was superseded in command by General Ampudia on the Texas frontier, who arrived at Matamoras on the 11th of April, 1846, with 200 cavalry, followed by 2,000 men of his reinforcement not far behind, on the way to join the 2,000 soldiers already at Matamoras. As soon as he arrived there, he ordered, on the 12th of April, General Taylor to evacuate the posts he held, and all Americans, with their consul, to quit Matamoras. About the same time General Bravo repaired with reinforcements to Vera Cruz; the fort of St. Juan d'Ulloa was strengthened; the Mexican vessels were taken up the river Alvarado out of reach, and have since escaped to Havana; the public impost was diverted from prior appropriations and applied to war exigencies; and war for the recovery of Texas was so notorious, both by acts and threats, that Commodore Conner became acquainted with it at sea, and transferred his squadron from off Vera Cruz to Brazos Santiago; where he did not arrive, however, till several blows of hostility had been struck by the Mexican at the American army on the east of the Bravo.

In fact a military revolution, with revolutionary energy straining the sinews of war, called forth the armed force and the pecuniary means of a distracted and impoverished nation with feverish vigor, as Generals Paredes and Almonte had declared, for the recovery of Texas; and war was to all intents and purposes waged as well as declared.

General Taylor, with his army, left Corpus Christi for the Rio Grande, between the 8th and 11th of March, and arrived at his encampment opposite Matamoras March 28th. On his march he was met at two or three points, particularly on the banks of the Sal Colorado, or Colorado creek, by Mexican troops, but offered them no molestation. When, however, they threatened to dispute his passage by force of arms, he warned them that it would be at their peril. Not a Mexican was killed by our troops, or any of them, until Captain Thornton's command of 50 or 60 men (26th of April) was cut to pieces, twenty miles north of General Taylor's camp, having been decoyed into a chapparal, where were posted a body of Mexicans estimated at 2,500. Even on this occasion, we have seen no evidence that a single shot was fired by the Americans, or a single Mexican cut down, although, from the acknowledged bravery of Thornton and his men, their lives would have been dearly sold had they considered the two countries in a "state of war." Previously to this date, Colonel Cross, who rode out alone a mile or two from the American camp for the sake of exercise, was brutally murdered; and Lieutenant Porter, who went out in search of him, was fired upon, and himself and one of his men killed. So far as we have any evidence, not a Mexican was killed by the Americans, or any of them, until the 28th of April, when Captain Walker and 24 men of the Texan rangers, being on their way from Point Isabel to General

Taylor's camp opposite Matamoras, fell in with a large body of Mexicans, estimated at 1,500. No statement authorizes us to say positively which party fired first, though it would be very strange if 25 men should seek a combat with 1,500. The result, however, was, that a number of the Mexicans were killed, and six of Walker's men.

These facts, viewed in connexion with Ampudia's letter to General Taylor of April 12th, in which he requires him "in the peremptory term of twenty-four hours to break up his camp and retire to the other bank of the Nueces"—in failure of which, "arms, and arms alone, must decide the question"—prove beyond a doubt upon which party rests the responsibility of commencing actual warfare. After this formal declaration of the Mexican commander, if not before, it was obviously the duty of General Taylor to exercise unceasing vigilance, in order to guard against surprise, and also that he might seek reinforcements, if necessary, before his communication with Point Isabel should be cut off. Thornton's party was sent out in consequence of a rumor that a large body of Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande twenty miles or so above Matamoras. His object was solely to reconnoitre; and in following Mexican horsemen into the chapparal, without firing upon them, or in any way attempting to injure them, he committed no act which at all justified the bloody tragedy which the Mexicans enacted. Up to this time, not only had no Mexicans been killed by the Americans, but none had been taken prisoners; although opportunities to do so were of frequent occurrence. And even this act of positive war might have been overlooked, had it been disavowed by the Mexican commander, or been shown to be the result of accident or misapprehension; but none of these things were pretended. Subsequent events have proved that it was the first act of a war which had been projected by the Mexican government, and that the object of the Mexican forces in crossing the river was to capture or destroy the army of General Taylor, as is distinctly avowed by President Paredes in his manifesto of April 23d to the Mexican nation, in which he says: "I have sent orders to the general-in-chief on the northern frontier to act in hostility against the army which is in hostility against us; to oppose war to the enemy which wars upon us. * * * Our general, acting according to established usages, and the decided instructions given by my government, summoned the general-in-chief of the American forces to retire beyond the river Nueces, the ancient boundary of Texas, and the summons has been disregarded."

From the first seizures by the Mexican government of American persons and property, several years before the United States led the way for other nations to acknowledge their independence, till the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, 1846, Mexico was in every instance the aggressive wrongdoer. Yet, so inveterate is the peace policy, so invincible the pacific checks of our government—such are the obstacles to war by the United States—that, with thrice the population, and a hundred times the resources of Mexico, with nearly the whole regular force of this country collected in Texas, for its protection, Mexico invaded that State of this Union with twice our number of troops, waylaid and arrested them by battles at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma—heralded by confident predictions that the American army would be the easy conquest of their Mexican assailants. The courage and discipline of troops never emboldened by public patronage to perform military exploits, but, on the contrary, discouraged by a government always strongly averse to war and its instruments, nevertheless achieved, in the morasses and wilds of that distant frontier, victories won by deeds of heroism, which are presages of short and humane hostilities and generous pacification with Mexico.

The United States have long borne much, entreated much, and threatened too much, without enforcement. Mexico had learned to appreciate that the American Executive cannot make war, however it may be menaced. Whether, when President Jackson called on Congress for authority of reprisals, it would have been best to grant the power, is now mere speculation. It is certain that Mexico, by making war, has relieved the American government from perplexing hesitation, and enabled it to overcome national institutions and aversion. The constituted authorities of the United States are now forced to pause and parley no longer, but, by solemn declaration of war, to put all the energies of an armed people into action, for repelling hostilities and punishing invaders.

The President's message of the 12th, and act of Congress of the 13th of May, 1846, afford proof that a republican government, of peaceable institutions and predilections, representing a strenuous people, is capable of rapid action, when necessary to vindicate their rights and confront invaders. The small military force, allowed to exist as a standing army, bravely proved that more than thirty years of peace had not unnerved its vigor or impaired its discipline. A whole population emulous of rushing to the rescue of that army when supposed to be outnumbered or overpowered, quick to leave homes of ease and luxury for the front rank of distant warfare, with all its hardships and exposures, is a striking national spectacle for invidious or inimical disparagers of American republican government to contemplate and ponder. Long before the federal head could aid General Taylor, fifteen hundred or two thousand miles from the capital of this Union, the State authorities of Alabama, and Louisiana, and Texas, flew to his rescue. Large reinforcements of soldiery, with all kinds of supplies, hastened to his camp; and, if he had needed help, the sovereign States and people with alacrity afforded it, long before Congress could learn that the army of their troops was in peril. War was thus begun by Mexico, declared and waged by invasion of American soil, by massacre of American troops, and by attack of the American army; and the routed invaders were pursued with alacrity into Mexico, before the President or Congress could act on the exigency.

The armies and navy of the United States will no doubt be directed and disposed to wage war on the most humane and forbearing principles of civilized hostilities,—to make war, not as the means of ambition or for the sake of conquest, but as, when all pacific endeavors have been exhausted, and not till then, the only way to peace. Laws and usages of war, both by sea and land, have been enforced, which this country disowns, and will make war itself a method for reforming its abuses and abridging its ordinary duration. Transatlantic defamation will be refuted by the promptitude of American republican transactions, both civil and military, in the exigency of national conflict, and by forbearance to prosecute war for aggrandizement. As, in the order of overuling Providence, war has been forced upon this country, it will make the most of it to disabuse the world of the unfounded and unmerited charges against republican government, of incapacity for wars and lust of dominion. The United States desire permanent peace, free trade, and intimate intercourse with all mankind.

On this, the second occasion in their annals as a sovereign nation when war has been fastened on them, after many years of earnest striving to prevent it—the first, with the most formidable of modern empires; the second, with a semi-barbarous and distracted anarchy—the American government can never hesitate to put an end to hostilities and restore peace as soon as their adversary will allow it. Texas, and indemnity for wrongs confessed by several treaties, coasts and borders in tranquil possession, without transatlantic interference, are all we insist upon. It will be Mexican infatuation, should the contest become one of races, of borders, of conquest, and of territorial extension. It will be European wrong, should any transatlantic meddling aggravate an American continental quarrel, with which distant nations have nothing to do, and which, unless they interfere, cannot last long, nor materially change the condition of the United States or Mexico, except to improve both, by binding them together in alliance open to all.

The destiny of this country is to develope the useful arts in peace, not to live by war. But the great warring powers of another hemisphere may, if they will, render the United States a conquering nation. The energy and enterprise hitherto bestowed in reclaiming the wilderness and navigating the ocean, may be perverted to the use of deadly weapons, instead of the implements of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures. Long since, the United States sent their mariners across the Atlantic into the Mediterranean, to rid the world of the insufferable piracies of barbarians. They have now been forced into conflict with a semi-barbarous people nearer home, whom they have no desire to subjugate or colonise, whom they will only chastise and restrain, as all Christendom should wish, unless Mexico, stimulated from Europe, aggravates the struggle and provokes her ruin.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR,

IN COMPLIANCE

With a resolution of the Senate, communicating information as to the employment of any individual by the department, or under its sanction, to raise volunteers for the war with Mexico.

JULY 17, 1846.

Read, and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
July 17, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to forward the accompanying papers, which contain all the information in possession of this department, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, directing the Secretary of War "to report to the Senate whether any individual has been authorized by the department, or recommended by the department to the executive of any State to be authorized, to raise volunteers to serve in the war with Mexico," &c.

The authority under which this correspondence has obtained is derived, as is conceived, from the act of the 13th of May, which authorizes the President to call for and accept the services of volunteers, and was not designed to control the reservation in the 5th section of that act in regard to the appointment of the officers according to the laws of their respective States. In view of a similar practice which has heretofore prevailed in this department in calling for and accepting volunteers, I transmit herewith copies of two letters addressed by the Secretary of War, in 1837, to the governors of New York and Pennsylvania, asking that commissions may issue to certain individuals who had been instrumental in raising a volunteer force at the instance of the department, under the act of 23d May, 1836, which is similar in its provisions to the act of May 13th, 1846.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. GEORGE M. DALLAS,
Vice President of the United States,
and President of the Senate.

Washington, June 3, 1846.

Sir: It has been determined by the President that the public interest will be subserved by sending with, or to, Colonel Kearney, an additional force of about one thousand mounted men. So far as it was deemed proper, arrangements have been made here to raise and organize it. This force will consist of one regiment and a separate battalion, under the command of a lieutenant colonel. The honorable Sterling Price, now a member of Congress, has been highly recommended to the President, as in every respect qualified to be put at the head of the regiment, and D. D. Mitchell and William Gilpin to be field officers thereof. Thomas L. Price has been, in like manner, recommended to him for commandant of the separate battalion.

The President has agreed that if these gentlemen will organize this force, its services are to be accepted by him. Its destination will be the same as the force already called for and put under the command of Colonel Kearney. In the full confidence that this arrangement will meet with your approval, and you will co-operate in its organization, Mr. Price has determined to leave here to-morrow morning, for the purpose of uniting with you in carrying it out. Any modification that you and he may agree on as to the other field officers, will be concurred in by the President. He will bear this communication, and will explain more in detail the views of the government here. It is important that the additional force should closely follow that already called out.

In case Colonel Kearney should think it advisable to have a still larger force, he is authorized to make a requisition on you for it. If he do so, the President desires that you respond to it without waiting for orders from this place, and send on to him the number and description of volunteer force he may designate. Orders will be given, in anticipation of this arrangement being carried out, to the proper chiefs of staff here, to forward to this additional regiment and separate battalion the necessary arms, accoutrements, ammunition, &c., as well as the supply of the necessary means of transportation after they shall have arrived at the place of rendezvous. It is believed that all these supplies will be in readiness as soon as the troops can be assembled.

Fort Leavenworth or Independence is suggested as the place of rendezvous. The United States may not have rifles in that section of the country in sufficient number to arm these troops; and if that arm should be preferred to muskets, the men will take their own rifles with them.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency J. C. Edwards,
Governor of Missouri.

War Department,
Washington, May 27, 1846.

Sir: The inspecting officers of the volunteers from your State are authorized to receive companies if they do not come up to eighty privates, provided they contain sixty-four privates. This reduction of the privates will bring down the quota from your State some hundreds below the former estimate.

The honorable E. D. Baker has expressed a desire to the President and this department to enrol and organize a regiment, and he has been encouraged to undertake it. Should he succeed, it is desired, with your approval, that such a regiment should be received as one of the three called for; but if you have already made arrangements for the three, then it is proposed to accept and call into immediate service the one he may raise in addition to those embraced in the first call.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency THOMAS FORD,
Governor of Illinois, Springfield, Illinois.

[Extract.]

CONFIDENTIAL.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 2, 1846.

SIR: With this letter you will receive one from me addressed to you by direction of the President, desiring to be furnished with an additional force of about one thousand mounted men from the State of Missouri, to be organized into one regiment and a separate battalion.

* * * * * * * *

It is hoped that it may be so arranged that the Hon. S. Price may be the colonel of the regiment, and William Gilpin, esq., its lieutenant colonel, and that Thomas L. Price may have the command of the battalion as major or lieutenant colonel.

Though the President is far from wishing to dictate in this matter, yet he has been induced to believe that these gentlemen are admirably fitted to such a command, to be engaged in such an enterprise.

It is very desirable that there should be the utmost practicable despatch in organizing and sending on this force to join Colonel Kearney.

* * * * * * * *

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency JOHN C. EDWARDS,
Governor of Missouri.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 3, 1846.

The President having decided to accept the services of a regiment and a separate battalion of mounted men, should you and the other gentlemen named in my letter of this date to Governor Edwards be able to organize them without delay, you are respectfully requested to wait upon his excellency, deliver my letter, explain to him the wishes and views of the President in this matter, and obtain his approval and co-operation; both which, it is not doubted, he will promptly and cheerfully render in carrying out the arrangement. Among the patriotic citizens of Missouri who are willing, nay anxious to volunteer their services to the government in this emergency, some, from previous habits of life and knowledge of the country, may be better adapted than others to the peculiar service which will be required of them. It is important that those composing this force should be persons best fitted for that service.

You will perceive that Fort Leavenworth or Independence is designated as the place of rendezvous. The troops should be organized and moved forward on the expedition with all practicable despatch. They will be placed under the command of Colonel Kearney, who should be informed of the time when they will be in readiness, and be able to reach him at Santa Fe, or wherever he may be.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. STERLING PRICE.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 3, 1846.

SIR: Governor Yell has left here to-day for Arkansas, in the hope that he may be selected to command the regiment of mounted volunteers required from that State for immediate service in the war against Mexico. The President has conferred fully and freely with Governor Yell in regard to the service of this regiment; and on this account, as well as on that of his high estimate of his patriotism and ability to render valuable service to the country, he would be pleased to see him placed in the position he desires. Without wishing to interfere in this matter, the President has taken the liberty, through me, to make known to your excellency his wishes in this matter, trusting that you will ascribe the act to the proper motives.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency THOMAS S. DREW,
Governor of Arkansas, Little Rock, Arkansas.

WAR DEPARTMENT, November 10, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to inform your excellency that a corps of volunteers has been raised and organized in Philadelphia, who have tendered their services to this department, and that this tender has been accepted, in the confident expectation that you will issue commissions to the officers which is required by the law of the 23d of May, 1836, authorizing the employment of this description of troops, before the department can avail itself of their services. A list of the officers will be forwarded to you by the corps, upon which, as the presence of the troops in Florida at the earliest possible moment is important, I beg leave to ask your favorable action without delay.

JOEL R. POINSETT,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency JOSEPH RITNER,
Governor of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Pa.

WAR DEPARTMENT, November 11, 1837.

SIR: A volunteer company raised and organized in the city of New York has been accepted by this department for service in Florida, without a doubt of your willingness to commission the individuals selected by them for its officers, so soon as their names should be presented to you, which is required by the law of May 23, 1836, before the department can avail itself of the services of the company. It is of great importance that the company should be in the field at the earliest practicable period, and I have therefore the honor to request that you will be good enough to forward to Lieutenant Colonel Cutler, of the army, now in the city of New York, so soon as convenient, a captain's commission for Jacobus Benjamin Seiler, and one of a first lieutenant for Edward Gayner Lavers, who have been selected for those ranks by the company. An individual to act as second lieutenant has not yet been designated by them, but, for the reasons opposed to delay, which I have already mentioned, I beg leave to ask you to send to Colonel Cutler a commission in blank for a person of that rank, which the colonel will fill up upon his election, and report the name of the individual to you.

JOEL R. POINSETT,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency WILLIAM L. MARCY,
Governor of New York, Albany, New York.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 26, 1846.

SIR: The President having determined to send a regiment of volunteers around Cape Horn to the Pacific, to be employed in prosecuting hostilities in some province of Mexico, probably in Upper California, has authorized me to say that if you will organize one on the conditions hereinafter specified, and tender its services, it will be accepted.

It is proper it should be done with the approbation of the governor of New York.

The President expects, and indeed requires, that great care should be taken to have it composed of suitable persons: I mean persons of good habits, as far as practicable, of various pursuits, and such as would be likely to desire to remain, at the end of the war, either in Oregon or any territory in that region of the globe which may be then a part of the United States. The act of the 13th of May last authorizes the acceptance of volunteers for twelve months, or during the war with Mexico. The condition of the acceptance in this case must be a tender of services during the war, and it must be explicitly understood that they may be discharged without a claim for returning home wherever they may be serving at the termination of the war, provided it is in the then territory of the United States, or may be taken to the nearest or most convenient territory belonging to the United States, and then discharged.

The men must be apprized expressly that their term of service is for the war; that they are to be discharged as above specified, and that they are to be employed on a distant service. It is, however, very desirable that it should not be publicly known or proclaimed that they are to go to any particular province of Mexico.

On this point great caution is enjoined. The communications to the officers and men must go so far as to remove all just ground of complaint that they have been deceived in the nature and place of the service.

It is expected that the regiment will be in readiness to embark as early as the first of August next, if practicable. Steps will be immediately taken to provide for transportation, &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Colonel J. D. STEVENSON, New York city.

30th Congress, 1st Session. | [SENATE.] | Executive, No. 14.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

COMMUNICATING

A report from the Secretary of War, with information in relation to forced contributions in Mexico, called for by a resolution of the Senate.

January 24, 1848.

Read, and ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States :

In compliance with the request of the Senate in their resolution of the 13th instant, I herewith communicate a report from the Secretary of War, with the accompanying correspondence, containing the information called for, in relation to "forced contributions" in Mexico.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, January 24, 1848.

War Department,
Washington, January 21, 1848.

Sir : In compliance with your directions on referring to this department the resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, requesting to be furnished with "copies of the letter, referred to in his [your] message, of General Scott, of 20th May, 1847, and of the letter of General Taylor of 26th October, 1846, on the subject of 'forced contributions' in Mexico; and of all other correspondence on that subject (if any) not heretofore communicated," I transmit the following letters and extracts of letters, which contain all the information thereby required. The letter to General Taylor of the 22d September, 1846, and his reply of the 26th of October, were communicated to Congress at the last session, (Doc. Ho. Reps. No. 119,) but as the former goes more fully into the subject of forced contributions than any other communications from the department to the commanding generals, and as several of the accompanying letters have reference to that letter, it is included among the documents herewith transmitted.

The correspondence relative to the contributions at the Mexican ports in our possession, was annexed to the annual report from this department and is before Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To the President of the United States.

No. 1.

Extract from a letter addressed to Major General Z. Taylor, commanding army of occupation on the Rio Grande, dated

"War Department,
September 22, 1846.

"It is far from being certain that our military occupation of the enemy's country is not a blessing to the inhabitants in the vicinity. They are shielded from the burdens and exactions of their own authorities; protected in their persons and furnished with a most profitable market for most kinds of their property. A state of things so favorable to their interest may induce them to wish the continuance of hostilities.

"The instructions heretofore given, have required you to treat with great kindness the people, to respect private property, and to abstain from appropriating it to the public use without purchase at a fair price. In some respects, this is going far beyond the common requirements of civilized warfare. An invading army has the unquestionable right to draw its supplies from the enemy without paying for them, and to require contributions for its support. It may be proper, and good policy requires that discriminations should be made in imposing these burdens. Those who are friendly disposed, or contribute aid, should be treated with liberality; yet, the enemy may be made to feel the weight of the war, and thereby become interested to use their best efforts to bring about a state of peace.

"It is also but just, that a nation which is involved in a war, to obtain justice, or to maintain its just rights, should shift the burden of it, as far as practicable, from itself, by throwing it upon the enemy.

"Upon the liberal principles of civilized warfare, either of three modes may be pursued in relation to obtaining supplies from the enemy: First, To purchase them on such terms as the inhabitants of the country may choose to exact; Second, To pay a fair price without regard to the enhanced value resulting from the presence of a foreign army; and, Third, To require them as contributions, without paying or engaging to pay therefor.

"The last mode is the ordinary one, and you are instructed to adopt it, if in that way you are satisfied you can get abundant supplies for your forces; but should you apprehend a difficulty in that respect, then you will adopt the policy of paying the ordinary price without allowing to the owners the advantages of the enhancement of the price, resulting from the increased demand. Should you apprehend a deficiency under this last mode of dealing with the inhabitants, you will be obliged to submit to the exactions, provided by this mode you can supply your wants on better terms than by drawing what you may need from the United States. Should you attempt to supply your troops by contributions, or the appropriation of private property, you will be careful to exempt the property of all foreigners from any and all exactions whatsoever. The President hopes you will be able to derive from the enemy's country without expense to the United States, the supplies you may need, or a considerable part of them; but should you fail in this, you will procure them in the most economical manner."

No. 2.

HEAD-QUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, October 26, 1846.

SIR: In reply to so much of the communication of the Secretary of War, dated September 22, as relates to the mode of supplying the army, I beg leave to submit the following remarks:

It would have been impossible hitherto, as is so now, to sustain the army to any extent by forced contributions of money or supplies.

The country between the Rio Grande and Sierra Madre is poor; furnishing only corn and beef. These articles we obtain at moderate rates; but if a different system had been adopted, it is certain that they would not have been procured at all in sufficient quantities. The prompt payment in cash for the few articles of supply we have drawn from the country, has neutralized much of the unfriendly feeling with which we were regarded, and has contributed greatly to facilitate our operations. The people have it in their power at any time to destroy their crops, and would undoubtedly do so, rather than see them taken forcibly. Add to which, they would have no inducement to plant again. The prices that have been paid are reasonable, being in almost all cases the prices of the country.

Should the army, in its future operations, reach a portion of the country which may be made to supply the troops with advantage, I shall not fail to conform to the wishes and instructions of the department in this particular.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., Commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army, Washington, D. C.

No. 3.

Extract from a letter directed to Major General Patterson, dated,

"WAR DEPARTMENT, September 22d, 1846.

"Your attention is directed to that part of the despatch to General Taylor which relates to subsisting our troops, while in the enemy's country, by supplies to be procured from the inhabitants thereof. Should the representations which have been made of the friendly feelings of the people of Tamaulipas towards the United States, and of their disposition to withdraw from the Mexican government be realized, you will treat them with great kindness, and cherish friendly relations with them. But, should they manifest decidedly hostile feelings towards our people and government, you will act on the same principles, in your treatment of them, which have been prescribed to General Taylor. This matter is left to your discretion, which will be influenced and controlled by circumstances.

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War."

No. 4.

War Department,
Washington, September 24th, 1846.

Sir: I herewith transmit to you a copy of a despatch, of the 22d instant, to Major General Taylor, and direct your attention, particularly, to that part of it which relates to obtaining supplies from the people of the invaded country. In a matter of this nature, much must be left to the discretion of the commanding general of the invading force, in regard to the application of the rules there laid down. Should you find the people of Chihuahua kindly disposed to the United States, you will, as a matter of course, avoid doing anything which may change their feelings towards us; but, if they treat us as enemies, we must do the same to them, strictly observing, on our part, at the same time, all the usages of warfare among civilized nations.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

John E. Wool,
Brigadier General.

No. 5.

Extract from a letter to Major General Winfield Scott, dated

War Department,
Washington, April 3, 1847.

* * * "As the Mexicans persist in protracting the war, it is expected that, in the further prosecution of it, you will exercise all the acknowledged rights of a belligerant, for the purpose of shifting the burden of it from ourselves upon them. The views of the government, in this respect, were presented to General Taylor in a despatch from this department of the 22d September, 1846, a copy of which, so far as relates to this subject, is herewith sent to you, with the direction that these views may be carried out under a discretion similar to that given to him. The enemy should be made to realize that there are other inducements to make them desire peace besides the loss of battles and the burden of their own military establishments. The right of an army operating in an enemy's country to seize supplies, to forage, and to occupy such buildings (private as well as public) as may be required for quarters, hospitals, storehouses, and other military purposes, without compensation therefor, cannot be questioned; and it is expected that you will not forego the exercise of this right to any extent compatible with the interest of the service in which you are engaged."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Extract from a letter of Major General Scott, dated

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Jalapa, April 28, 1847.

"SIR: My present efforts, with very insufficient trains, are to get up to this place from Vera Cruz while we may—say, in the next two weeks—as many essential supplies as practicable, such as clothing, ammunition, medicines, salt, &c., &c. Breadstuffs, beef, mutton, sugar, coffee, rice, beans, and forage, we may hope to find, though not in convenient places or in great abundance, on our line of operations. For these we must pay, or they will be withheld, concealed, or destroyed by the owners, whose national hatred of us remains unabated. I shall continue to do all in my power to conquer that hatred, but cannot as yet promise myself success; and if I cannot enforce the utmost economy in the use of such supplies, by causing them to be collected and regularly issued by the proper departments of the staff, we shall further exasperate and ruin the country and starve ourselves. A rigid discipline—exact obedience to orders—is, then, the first great want of this army. Of valor and patriotism, there is no deficiency."

SIR:

"If it be expected at Washington, as is now apprehended, that this army is to support itself by forced contributions levied upon the country, we may ruin and exasperate the inhabitants and starve ourselves; for it is certain they would sooner remove or destroy the products of their farms than allow them to fall into our hands without compensation. Not a ration for a man or horse would be brought in, except by the bayonet; which would oblige the troops to spread themselves out many leagues to the right and left, in search of subsistence, and to stop all military operations."

* * "We are still much embarrassed by the want of money. But little can be obtained on draught this side of the capital, and we have not heard of the arrival of a dollar at Vera Cruz for this army. The attempt to subsist it by living at free quarters, or on forced contributions, would be the end of military operations." * * *

No. 9.

Extract from a letter to Major General Winfield Scott, commanding United States army, Mexico, dated

WAR DEPARTMENT,
September 1, 1847.

"The obstinate persistance of the Mexicans in refusing to treat, their utter disregard of the rules of civilized warfare, and the large expenditures which we are compelled to make, have impressed on the President the firm conviction that those rights of exacting contribution from the enemy, which are conferred on a belligerant by the acknowledged law of nations, should be exercised. Your remarks in your despatch, No. 28, dated at Jalapa, May 20th, 1847, have been carefully observed. Your circumstances are since materially changed, and if, as we doubt not, you have triumphantly entered the city of Mexico, the President directs me again to call your attention to the despatch of this department of the 3d of April last, a copy of which is here enclosed. The property holders of Mexico have no claim to find in the market afforded by sale to our army an actual pecuniary benefit resulting from the war. They must be made to feel its evils; and it is earnestly hoped and expected that you will not find in your present circumstances a necessity to adhere to your opinion, expressed in your despatch referred to, that a resort to forced contributions will exasperate and ruin the inhabitants, and starve the army. Contributions may be exacted from cities or States, or wealthy individuals, and payment made for provisions and other supplies brought to the camp or collected in kind. It is not improbable that men of wealth and means may profess to belong mainly to the peace party; and it may be apprehended that they will be driven from their pacific position by coercive proceedings. But, however such an effect may be apprehended, it is more probable that their exertions to promote a termination of the war will be made more serious and efficient when they feel the oppressive evils of the state of war. Judging from the cruelties and atrocities which are reported, in different parts of Mexico, to have been inflicted by the Mexicans; whenever an opportunity presents itself, on a single soldier or a weaker party, there is no hope of their reciprocating kind, generous, or humane exercise of the rights of war on our part; and without retaliating such disgraceful atrocities in kind, every dictate of duty to ourselves requires that we shall not abstain from the exercise of our right of exactions from the enemy. The mode and extent of exercising this right is, and must be, left to your discretion; but it is earnestly hoped that you will put the system into operation to the utmost practicable extent. The safety and subsistence of the troops under your command will of course not be placed in jeopardy by the desire to enforce this system, if you find that in its exercise such result will follow.

J. Y. MASON,
Acting Secretary of War."

No. 10.

Extracts from a letter to Major General Winfield Scott, dated

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 6, 1847.

"It is quite evident that the authorities of Mexico would not present and insist upon, as a basis for peace, terms which could not be entertained for a moment by us without national dishonor, were they not encouraged to continue the war by that portion of the population, as well as others, upon which the burdens of the war ought to fall, and upon which, in the further prosecution of it, they must be made to fall, as the only means now left of bringing it to a close. We have hitherto been far more forbearing than is customary in exercising the extreme, and even some of the ordinary, rights of belligerents; it is now evident that our leniency has not been appreciated, nor rciprocated; but, on the contrary, has been repaid with bad faith, and barbarity, and is only met by a blind obstinacy and a reckless determination to prolong the conflict.

"However unwilling we may be to modify our humane policy, a change now seems to be required even by the considerations of humanity. We must take the best measures, within the clearly admitted course of civilized warfare, to beget a disposition in the people of Mexico to come to an adjustment upon fair and honorable terms. It should be borne in mind that the people of Mexico, indulging, as it is evident they do, the most hostile feelings, are not less parties to the war than the Mexican army, and, as a means of peace, they must be made to feel its evils."

* * * * * *

"Permit me to invite your attention to the despatch from this department of the 1st ultimo, (a copy of which is herewith sent,) and urge the suggestions therein contained upon your particular consideration. The burden of sustaining our forces in Mexico must be thrown to the utmost extent upon the people of that country. Its resources should be resorted to in every manner consistent with the usages of civilized war for that purpose, and it is hoped that your situation is such as will warrant you in making this resort, at least, to the extent required for the support of our army. The men of means who have willingly contributed aid to support the Mexican army should be forced to contribute to the support of ours.

W. L. MARCY,

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 11, 1847.

SIR: I have been directed by the President to transmit to you the copy of a late despatch sent to General Scott, and to direct your attention to that part of it which relates to levying contributions, and the treatment of guerillas. These suggestions are to be regarded as indicative of the policy which the government is disposed to have pursued on these subjects. It is conceived, however, that there may be reasons for not adopting it in its full rigor; and the views of the government are not put in the shape of positive instructions. The course to be adopted is still left to the discretion of the commanding general, he being, from position and full knowledge, better able to determine the effects of the policy recommended upon our interests in Mexico.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your ob't servant,

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 17, 1847.

SIR: I herewith transmit to you an order made by the President, dated the 16th instant, requiring the collection of an export duty on gold and silver; and, wherever it is practicable, all internal taxes, of every description, whether upon persons or property, exacted by the government of Mexico, or by any department, town or city thereof, to be collected by our military officers in possession, except transit duty, referred to in said order. You will take proper measures and give the necessary directions to carry this order into effect to the utmost practicable extent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY, *Secretary of War.

P. S.—Copies of the order of the President, of the above letter to you, have been sent to the commanding officers of Vera Cruz, Tampico and Matamoras, with directions to cause the order, so far as it falls within their province to execute, to be carried into immediate effect.

The President entertains a strong hope that by the operation of the foregoing order, and by carrying out the previous instructions in relation to levying contributions and deriving supplies from the resources of the country, without submitting to exactions, the treasury of the United States will be, to a very considerable extent, relieved from the burden of the war.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
November 16, 1847.

SIR: With a view to augment the military contributions now collected by the Departments of War and of the Navy, under your order of the 31st of March last, I recommend that the export duty, exacted before the war by the government of Mexico, be now collected at the port of exportation by the same officers of the army or navy of the United States in the Mexican ports in our possession, who are authorized to collect the import duties, abolishing, however, the prohibition of export established in certain cases by the Mexican government, as also all interior transit duties, dispensing also with the necessity of any certificate of having paid any duty to the Mexican government.

The export duty would then be as follows: on

Gold coined or wrought	Three per cent.
Silver coined	Six per cent.
Silver wrought with or without certificate of having paid any duty to the Mexican government	Seven per cent.
Silver refined or pure, wrought in ingots with or without certificate of having paid the Mexican government duty	Seven per cent.
Gold unwrought or in a state of ore or dust	Three per cent.
Silver unwrought or in a state of ore	Seven per cent.

Where gold or silver, in any form, is taken from any interior

* The above letter, thus far, was communicated with other orders relating to contributions, embraced in the last annual report.

Mexican city in our military possession, the export duty must be paid there, to the officer of the United States commanding, and his certificate of such pre-payment must be produced at the Mexican port of exportation, otherwise a double duty will be collected on the arrival of such gold or silver at the Mexican port of exportation. Whenever it is practicable, all internal taxes of every description, whether upon persons or property, exacted by the government of Mexico or by any department, town, or city thereof, should be collected by our military officers in possession, and appropriated as a military contribution towards defraying the expenses of the war, excluding, however, all duties on the transit of goods from one department to another, which duties being prejudicial to revenue, and restrictive of the exchange of imports for exports, were abolished by your order of the 31st of March last.

Yours most respectfully,

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

To the PRESIDENT.

November 16. 1847.

The modifications and military contributions, as above recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, are approved by me, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will give the proper orders to carry them into effect.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Mexico, November 27, 1847.

SIR: * * * * * * *

* * * * * * * * *

* * * * *

I invite attention to the accompanying order, No. 358, respecting bullion and coins. I am engaged in collecting the statistics of finance in this country, for the period a little before the commencement of this war. It is possible that if we should be able to occupy the principal mining districts and sea-ports of Mexico, and keep the great highways clear of guerillas and other robbers, the per centage on the precious metals—coinage and exports—and duties on increased imports of foreign commodities, might amount to ten or even twelve millions a year; but on the approach of even Mexican troops, in periods of revolution, the miners always run away from their work and are rarely brought back in months. The same difficulty may be apprehended from the approach of our troops. Besides the mints, (some seven or eight,) by payments in advance, have, I learn, hired the privilege of coinage for a term of years, and they are mostly, if not entirely, in the hands of neutrals. And in respect to other internal sources of ordinary revenue, I suppose they cannot be made available towards the support of this army, except by the occupation of the State capitals and through the State authorities. To collect such revenue directly, and by means of agents of our own—Mexican or American—would require a host of civil employés, involving much extortion, waste and corruption. The superintendence of the latter system would be extremely repugnant to my habits and feelings. But, I repeat, I have but recently commenced the study of the subject. By the arrival of adequate reinforcements I hope to be better informed, and under a general system to be devised, to be able to collect, in the interior, at least, a part of the means necessary to support the occupation.

Mexico, November 25, 1847.

General Orders,
No. 358.

Under instructions from the government at home, requiring that this army shall, as soon as practicable, begin to raise within the country it occupies the means in whole, or in great part, of maintaining the expenses of the occupation, until the federal government of Mexico shall submit terms of peace which the United States may honorably accept, it is ordered that no uncoined bullion, bars or ingots, either of gold or silver, shall be shipped from any port of Mexico, until the further orders of the government at home shall be made known on the subject, so as to give time for said government to fix the rate of export duty on such bullion, and, perhaps, a smaller duty on gold and silver coins.

As the beginning of the change of system, intimated above, all rents for houses or quarters occupied by officers or troops of the army, in any city or village in Mexico, will cease as soon as contracts may permit, and absolutely from and after the end of this month, wherever this order shall be received in time; and, in future, necessary quarters, both for officers and troops, where the public buildings are insufficient, will first be demanded, as required, of the civil authorities of the several places occupied by the troops, so as to equalize the inconvenience imposed upon the inhabitants, and diminish the same as much as possible.

If the authorities fail to put the troops promptly in possession of such quarters, then the commanding officer in every such case, following out the same principle of giving the least distress practicable to the unoffending inhabitants, will cause the necessary buildings to be occupied.

Subsistence, forage and other necessaries, for the army, will be purchased and paid for as heretofore; and the injunctions and penalties of the martial law order, dated February 19, 1847, originally published at Tampico, and republished several times since, with additions, will, as from the first, be strictly enforced, as also, in general, all the obligations of good morals and the most exact discipline.

By command of Major General Scott:

No. 15.

Memoirs on the revenues of the Mexican Republic.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War, as a paper from which I expect to derive many valuable suggestions in levying the means in Mexico for the support of the occupation.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Received at the War Department, January 6, 1848.

According to the last report on Mexican revenues, belonging to 1844, and presented to the Congress by Louis de la Rosa, in 1845, the revenues of the Mexican Republic were divided into seven different branches, and amounted to $25,905,348 2 11⅞, as follows:

In the statement of general revenues, which this report begins with, we say that the revenues would appear to have amounted, in the year 1844, to .... $25,905,348 2 11⅞ but it is not the case, for we find that from said amount the following are to be deducted:

Details No. 3, bis A	$623,439	7	6
Details No. 3, bis B	281,227	3	0
Details No. 5, bis C	378,820	0	0
Details No. 6, bis D	6,240,747	7	5
Details No. 7, bis E	2,497,649	3	1
The revenue in 1844 has, therefore, amounted to				15,790,044	4	7⅞

These amounts are to be deducted, because the first one is not a revenue, it being noted merely "pour memoire;" the second and third, because, being dedicated to certain payments, they have never entered the treasury; the fourth, because it is the produce of loans which have been paid out of the custom-houses revenues, and the fifth, because it has to be debited again. We have entered into these details to give an idea of the very singular way of keeping accounts which has been adopted in Mexico. We do not, however, admit this way of making accounts, for it would be impossible to know the exact amount of revenues collected; and we make the account thus:

The revenue amounted to		$25,905,348 2 11⅞
The only amounts which we will admit ought to be deducted are the following:
Details No. 3, bis. imaginary income	$623,439 7 6
Details No. 6, already paid out of the custom-houses revenues	6,240,747 7 5
Details No. 7, credited and not debited	2,497,649 3 1
Thus the real total revenues, in 1844, have been net		16,543,511 4 11⅞

We do not admit that the two sums, of $281,227 3 0 and of $378,820, are to be deducted from the revenues; for, although, they being assigned to the payment of special credits, they have never entered the treasury, but have been paid direct to the creditors. Withal it cannot be denied that they have been raised in the country, and form, therefore, part of the revenues.

If a comparison is made between the net produce of revenues in 1844, and an average of those collected during a period of 14 years, which amounts to $17,726,171, we think it fair to infer that the annual revenues may be estimated at no less than $16,000,000.

The net produce of the custom-houses during a period of 14 years amount to $70,359,798 6 4½, averaging $6,396,345. It is, therefore, clear that no source of revenue has been so productive as that derived from foreign commerce and the duties to which it is subjected. But the national treasury has never received more than one-half, or perhaps more than one-third, of the duties which might have been collected under a better system of imports administered by well selected and well behaved officers; here contraband is the bane both of trade and revenue, and foreign merchants are to be pitied where their success depends, not upon what may be called the science of commerce, but adroitness in the arts of evasion, or what may be called "fiscal chicanery." By looking over the reports of the different ministers of finances, from 1822 downwards, we find them all bewailing the enormous smuggling that prevailed every where, and the almost universal corruption of their own functionaries; but, at the same time, promising a better state of things through the active and efficient measures contemplated by the executive and the legislature of the time. Yet the evil seems to have grown from year to year, drawing fresh vigor from the measures taken by government for its annihilation. Proofs of what we state are to be found in every report, and in the admissions of all the ministers who have successfully administered the financial affairs of this country. Let us say that the same depredatory system is to be traced in all the branches of the public revenues, and thus we arrive at this conclusion: "that the public revenues are by no means as large as they ought to be."

The foregoing information having proved that the revenues of Mexico cannot be estimated at less than 16 to 17,000,000 per annum, we shall examine now what they might amount to in case a better administration and collection of them should be organized, on account of the occupation of the country by the armies of the United States. A few preliminary observations must be made before we can give the division and probable produce of revenues.

The government of the United States proposes that their forces should occupy the Mexican republic, and raise in the country the means to meet the expenses of the occupation. To obtain this object, we would suggest the convenience of said resources being raised so as to interfere as little as possible with the existing financial interests of foreign as well as of native residents; for, if any measure, calculated to involve the ruin of part or the whole of them, should be taken, there is little or no doubt that the results would be as injurious to the United States as to those of the country; for it is evident that the destiny of both interests, in the case of the occupation, is to link together. We believe that what we advance, besides being fully justified by a sound policy, will also be the means of facilitating the organization of a financial system, and ultimately lead to the increase of revenue. A long knowledge of the men and things of this country has also convinced us that it has only the name of a republic; for the institutions, the language, the custom of its inhabitants, and the state of their society, are certainly not republican; and it may be fairly asserted that they have never known what a republican government was. We mention this not out of any party spirit, for we desire to see the country prosperous, without caring by what system of government such a result may be obtained, but because it leads to show that a great many imposts which, in the United States, would be looked upon as vexatious, and thereby would become of difficult collection, can be raised in this country without the least trouble. We have made the foregoing observations with the object of justifying our recommendation to suppress or keep some of the imposts which have hitherto been collected in this country. We shall now proceed to examine the different branches of the revenue, and what their probable produce might be under a good and faithful administration, putting as a first condition that the whole country is peacefully occupied and protection given to all.

1. Import revenues collected in the seaports and frontier custom-houses.

These revenues will be the amount of import duties levied on foreign goods introduced by the following ports in the Mexican gulf, viz: Matamoras, Tampico, Tuspan, Vera Cruz, Alvarado, Tobasco, Laguna de Terminas; and on the Pacific, by Guaymas, Altata, Mazatlan, San Blas, Acapulco, Manzanillo, and the frontier custom-houses of Comitan and Tuxtla Chico. We agree in opinion with most people who have had the management of financial affairs, when we state that the amount of import duties under the new American tariff, which put the duties on the footing they had in contemplation, will not be less than $12,000,000 per annum, all collecting charges deducted.

2. Consumption duty to be collected in the seaports and frontier custom-houses, at the time that the goods are forwarded to the interior.

We shall not attempt to qualify as just, a measure which will oblige the inhabitant of the interior of the republic to pay a heavier duty on the article consumed by him, than the inhabitant of one of the seaports; we shall merely say, that a revenue must be raised; that internation duties have always been paid in this country; that they being not direct taxes, they have not been much felt by the inhabitants; that it would be difficult to find a substitute less vexatious; and, finally, that our views being to suppress altogether all interior custom-houses, the inhabitants of the interior will find themselves on a much better footing than they have ever been under any of the Mexican governments, both on account of the quantum of said duties, and on account of the suppression of interior custom-houses. We would fix these duties at 20 per cent. on the amount of the import duties, payable at the time that the goods are sent to the interior, in bills at short sight on Mexico. These duties would give a net revenue of $2,400,000.

3. Direct taxes.

These taxes began to be imposed at the time that the Mexican ports in the gulf were blockaded by a French squadron in 1838, with the object of creating interior revenues independent of those collected in the seaports. The pretext which was taken to create these new imposts was, that in the case of an occupation of her seaports, the republic might count upon these new revenues; but the reality was to increase the revenues. The novelty of these imposts, the want of good statistics in this country, and the bad collection of them, have been the cause that their produce has been much less than it ought to be. We would divide these taxes in the following way:

3 per 1,000 on the value of houses in cities, and of rural property, yearly.

Direct taxes on industrial establishments, at the actual rates.

Do on professions and trades, at the actual rates.

Do on objects of "luxe," at the actual rates.

Commercial patents, (license tax on merchants,) at the actual rates.

1 per cent. on all sales of houses or rural property.

1 per cent. on all inheritances.

These taxes properly administered and collected, would produce at the lowest calculation $3,000,000.

4. Duties on gold and silver produced.

The production of precious metals in this country amounts now, according to the best information which we have on the subject, to no less than $20,000,000 annually. We would advise that the duty which they have always paid should continue to be raised, at the rate of 3 per cent. of their value, which would thus produce $600,000.

Another duty of one rial per marc, valued at 8 $ 2, which is equivalent to about 1½ per cent., was also levied upon the production of the mines. We find that this duty of 1½ per cent., was paid to the college of Mineria, for the interest of a large sum of money taken by government during the wars of the independence, and for the purpose of sustaining the college. The college, as well as the amount of money taken by government, are the property of the mines, who, by means of subscriptions, built this magnificent edifice, and endowed Mexico with a college where the exact sciences are taught. From the circumstance of this property being private property, and its destination that of instruction, we would advise that the rial of Mineria should continue to be levied and applied to the same purposes as heretofore.

5. "Melting and assay dues."

Both under the Spanish and Mexican governments, gold and silver were ordered to be brought to certain public offices to be melted into bars, assayed, and marked, so as to prevent fraud. We would suggest that the same should continue to be done, not so much on account of revenue as on account of the guaranty of fair dealing offered to the public. $20,000,000 represent about 2,000,000 marcs, which will form about 16,500 bars of 135 marcs each.

Charging $3 for the melting of 100 marcs, 2,200,000 marcs would produce		$66,000 0 0
The assay duty is $1 per bar of pure silver, and $1 4 per bar of silver containing gold. Supposing, that of the 16,500 bars, 4,000 were of silver with gold, at $1 4	$6,000
12,500 were of pure silver, at $1	12,500
The produce would be		18,500 0 0
The melting and assay duties would produce		84,500 0 0
Deducting expenses		34,500 0 0
The net produce would be		50,000 0 0

We are in our estimate below the amount of the produce of this duty in 1843 and 1844, for the average is 119,113 net. We would be at a loss to account for such a considerable difference, if in his report, Don Luis de la Rosa did not say, that in some places the 3 per cent. duty on silver had been added to the assay and melting dues.

6. Exportation duties on gold and silver.

The exportation of gold and silver in bars has been prohibited in this country by all the tariffs that have been in force, either under the Spanish or Mexican governments; and although licenses of exportation have every now and then been granted, the prohibition has been the rule, and the exportation the exception, until the Mexican government having rented all their mints but two to foreign companies, has taken the solemn engagement by articles of their contracts, not to give any more licenses of exportation; as it may easily be supposed, this engagement of giving no new licenses of exportation has been the principal basis on which the companies have relied to make their contracts, and the principal inducement for them to advance the rent as they have done. We are not able to form an idea of what may be the policy of the United States respecting neutral interests in Mexico, in case the country should be occupied by them, but we have too high an opinion of the justice of their government to admit for a moment the possibility of such interests being sacrificed.and ruined, when no direct benefit could be derived from such a measure for the United States, and when on the contrary it might be injurious to them, as we shall try to explain. One of the principal objects which the American government must have in view to obtain resources from this country, is to facilitate the circulation of specie; prohibiting the exportation of gold or silver in bars, as it has been the case heretofore, to have them coined, is undoubtedly the best means to obtain it. We must not lose sight of a very important circumstance which is, that a bar of gold or silver is a dead, unproductive capital, until it is converted into current specie for circulation, and that all the time it lays in the chest of a banker or a merchant, waiting for a convoy to be exported, it occasions a loss to the public wealth. In a country where communications are so difficult, the loss that we speak of is of no small importance. Keeping up the prohibitory system interferes with no existing interests here; allowing exportation, on the contrary, interferes with large neutral interests. The amount of duties is the same in one case as in the other; it would therefore not be a wise policy that which, instead of adopting a measure calculated to create sympathies, would enforce one calculated to have the contrary effect, when no direct benefit could be derived from it. We, therefore, for all these motives, recommend that the exportation of gold or silver in bars shall continue to be strictly prohibited.

The duties on silver coined has been, since 1843, divided into circulation and export duties. The first was 4 per cent. levied on the specie going from the interior to the seaports, and the other was 6 per cent levied on the specie exported. The circulation duty was a very impolitic measure, as it materially interfered with the circulation of specie; and the raising of the export duty from 3½ to 6 per cent. encouraged contraband to such an extent that the revenues suffered seriously from it.

We would advise to suppress altogether the circulation duty, and reduce the export duty to 5 per cent., which, on $20,000,000 would amount to $1,000,000.

7. Rents administered for account of government.

The principal of these rents is the monopoly of the tobacco; and we by all means, would advice to have the monopoly to continue. The gross proceeds of that rent were in 1844, the sum of $4,966,651 2 5; the expenses including collecting and administration charges, amounted to $3,222,678 3 5; and the net proceeds were $1,743,972 7 3.

Every body knows that this rent is one of the surest and most productive of the country; but, it is well known that it is badly administered, and the following information gives us the proof of it.

The average accounts of five years, from 1795 to 1799, give the following results:

The gross produce was		$7,540,617 3 6
The charges were,
Salaries of administrations...	$796,148 2 0
Expenses of administrations..	345,472 6 6
Purchase of the tobacco, paper, &c..................	1,392,519 6 0
Manufacturing expenses.....	1,078,583 2 0
The net produce was, under the Spanish government..................................		$3,927,893 30

The consumption of tobacco is greater now than it was then; and therefore, this enormous diminution cannot be attributed to anything else but bad management. Persons well versed in the matter have repeatedly assured us, that the annual revenue of the tobacco cannot be estimated at less than $3,000,000.

We value the other rents at the following amounts:

Rent of stamp paper (net)	$250,000
Rent of playing cards..................................	25,000
Post office revenues....................................	150,000
National lottery..	100,000

We repeat, that the valuations which we have given of the probable produce of the different revenues of Mexico, are based on the total occupation of the country, and on the sine qua non condition that the management, administration, and collecting of said revenues shall be confided to intelligent, trustworthy functionaries; in which case, our estimate will, in all probabilities, be found too low.

We recapitulate the several revenues.

No. 1.	Import duties	$12,000,000
2.	Internation duties (on interior consumption of imports)	2,400,000
3.	Direct taxes..	3,000,000
4.	Duties on production of gold and silver.......	600,000

5. Melting and assay dues		50,000
6. Exportation duties on gold and silver coined		1,000,000
7. Rent of the tobacco	$3,000,000
" of stamp paper	250,000
" of playing cards manufactured	25,000
" of post office	150,000
" of national lottery	100,000	3,525,000
Total estimate of net revenues		$22,575,000

MESSAGE

FROM

THE PRESIDENT,

COMMUNICATING

A report from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information in relation to General Orders, No. 376, issued by General Scott.

January 31, 1848.

Read, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of War, containing the information called for in the resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, in relation to General Orders, No. 376, issued by General Scott at head-quarters, Mexico, bearing date the 15th December last.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, January 31, 1848.

War Department, January 31, 1848.

Sir: In compliance with your direction to be furnished with all the information in this department, to enable you to answer the resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, requesting to be informed "whether the General Orders, No. 376, issued by General Scott at head-quarters, Mexico, bearing date 15th December last, were issued under instructions from the Secretary of War, and if so, to lay said instructions before the Senate; and also any opinion of General Scott in regard to the necessary military means to carry said instructions into effect, which may be on file, if, in his opinion, the same may be communicated consistently with the public interests," I have the honor to state, that since the reference of the resolution to me, an order of the number and date specified in the resolution of the Senate has been received at this department, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

No particular instructions have been given to Major General Scott for issuing the order referred to, but it is presumed that he has taken that step in consequence of the general instructions given to him on the subject of levying contributions, and of making the resources of the enemy's country available, as far as may be within the rules of civilized warfare, for the maintenance of our troops in Mexico, and defraying the expenses incident to the present state of hostilities. These instructions, being such as were embraced in the call of the Senate, by its resolution of the 13th instant, were laid before you with my report of the 21st instant on that resolution. It is presumed that another copy of them is not now required.

As to "any opinion of General Scott in regard to the necessary military means to carry said instructions into effect," I have to state that there is no opinion of his in the department, nor has any been received from him, having direct reference to the subject; but there are, however, in his despatch of the 18th September last, some suggestions as to the military means required for carrying on the war, having an incidental reference to rendering the resources of Mexico available towards defraying the expenses of the war. The paragraphs in that despatch on the subject are herewith transmitted; the remainder of the despatch accompanies my annual report and has been already transmitted to Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To the PRESIDENT.

GENERAL ORDERS, No 376.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Mexico, December 15, 1847.

1. This army is about to spread itself over and to occupy the republic of Mexico, until the latter shall sue for peace, on terms acceptable to the government of the United States.

2. On the occupation of the principal point or points in any state, the payment to the federal government of this republic of all taxes or dues, of whatever name or kind, heretofore—say, in the year 1844—payable to, or collected by that government is absolutely prohibited, as all such taxes or dues will be demanded of the proper civil authorities for the support of the army of occupation.

3. The state and federal district of Mexico, being already so occupied, as well as the States of Vera Cruz, Puebla and Tamaulipas, the usual taxes or dues, heretofore contributed by the same to the federal government, will be considered as due and payable to this army, from the beginning of the present month, and will early be demanded of the civil authorities of the said states and district, under rules and penalties which shall be duly announced and enforced.

4. Other states of this republic, as the Californias, New Mexico, Chihuahua, Coahuila, New Leon, &c., &c., already occupied by the forces of the United States, though not under the immediate orders of the general-in-chief, will conform to the prescriptions of this order, except in such state or states, where a diffierent system has been adopted with the sanction of the government at Washington.

5. The internal taxes or dues, referred to, are: 1, Direct taxes; 2. Duties on the production of gold and silver; 3. Melting and assaying dues; 4. The tobacco rent; 5. The rent of stamped paper; 6. The rent on the manufacture of playing cards, and 7. The rent of post offices.

6. The rent of national lotteries is abolished—lotteries being hereby prohibited.

7. Import and export duties, at the ports of the republic, will remain as fixed by the government of the United States—except that the exportation of gold and silver in bars or ingots (plata y oro en pasta) is prohibited until the further instructions of that government on the subject.

8. All imported articles, goods or commodities which have once paid, or given sufficient security for the payment of duties to the United States, at any port of entry of the republic, shall not again be burdened with any tax or duty, in any part of this republic occupied by the forces of the United States.

9. The levying of duties on the transit of animals, goods or commodities, whether of foreign or domestic growth, from one state of this republic to another, or on entering or leaving the gate of any city, within the republic, will, from and after the beginning of the ensuing year, be prohibited as far as the United States' forces may have the power to enforce the prohibition. Other and equitable means, to a moderate extent, must be resorted to by the several state and city authorities, for the necessary support of their respective governments.

10. The tobacco, playing card, and stamped paper rents, will be placed, for three, six or twelve months, under contract with the highest bidders, respectively, for the several states—the state and federal district of Mexico being considered as one. Accordingly, offers or bids, for those rents, within each state, or any one of them, are invited. They will be sent in as early as possible, sealed, to the head-quarters of commanders of departments, except for the federal district and state of Mexico. For the two latter, the offers or bids will be addressed to the general-in-chief.

11. Further details for the execution of the foregoing system of government and revenue will soon be given in general orders.

By command of Major-General Scott:

H. L. SCOTT,
A. A. A. G.

Extract from General Scott's despatch of September 18, 1847.

"If overtures from that quarter, be not received by him, [our minister,] before the end of October, we may, in point of time, not be half through this war. To meet that case, I suppose it to be my professional duty to submit the following suggestions:

1. "Premising that I have no official information as to the number of troops ordered to join me, and that have landed at Vera Cruz, since the march hence, (July 14,) of Brigadier General Pierce's detachment, but assuming from rumor, the force now in route, at 6,500, and that 4,000 more are soon to follow, I may say, that with such re-inforcements, we can hold this capital, (garrisoned by 7,500,) against any external attack combined with an internal insurrection, and have an ample surplus force to occupy Puebla, Perote, Jalapa, the National Bridge, the Paso de Obejas, Santa Fe, and Vera Cruz.

"As a modification of this plan, it may be added, that with a total of 30,000 men, the principal mining district of the country may also be occupied, and a secure transit and rent given to gold and silver bullion, which, paying the customary per centage, combined with duties on imports, would cover a considerable part of the expenses of occupation.

2. "Augment this army to 50,000 men, to enable it to occupy at the same time, nearly all the state capitals, and other principal cities; to drive guerrilla and other robbing parties from the great highways of trade; to seize, into our hands, all the ordinary revenues of the country, internal as well as external, for the support of the occupation, and to keep the central government in constant motion and alarm until constrained to sue for peace.

3. "Withdraw our army from the interior of the country; occupy the strong points in the new boundaries, the United States may intend to hold permanently, and in the act of retiring, blow up the citadel in this capital, the fortresses of Chapultepec, Perote, San Juan de Ulloa, and the walls of Vera Cruz, (unless it be preferred to garrison the last two,) destroy all iron guns we have captured, and carry off those of brass, together with all ordnance stores of value. (The only cannon foundry in the republic, we have already destroyed.)

"A strict blockade of all Mexican ports, not garrisoned by our troops, would of course be essential to the object of either of those plans,—the conquest of a peace."

Proposition submitted by Mr. Trist.

The United States of America and the United Mexican States, desirous of terminating the war which has unhappily subsisted between the two republics, and of restoring peace, friendship, and good understanding between them, have, for that purpose, appointed their respective plenipotentiaries, that is to say: the President of the United States has appointed Nicholas P. Trist, &c., &c., and —— ——, who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article 1. There shall be a firm and universal peace between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, and between their respective countries, territories, cities, towns, and people, without exception of places or persons. All hostilities, both by sea and land, shall definitively cease so soon as the ratifications of this treaty shall have been exchanged by the parties.

Article 2. All prisoners of war taken on either side, as well by land as by sea, shall be restored as soon as practicable after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty. (Besides, it is agreed that if any Mexican citizens should be prisoners of the Cumanches, or of any tribes of Indians within the limits of the United States, the government of the United States will endeavor to obtain their return to their homes, according to the treaties existing with those Indians.)

Article 3. So soon as the present treaty shall have been duly ratified by the United Mexican States, this fact shall be made known with the least possible delay to the military and naval commanders of both parties, whereupon a suspension of hostilities shall take place, both by land and by sea, as well on the part of the military and naval forces of the United States, as on the part of those of the United Mexican States; and the said suspension of hostilities shall be inviolably observed on both sides. Immediately after the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty all the forts, territories, places, and possessions whatsoever, taken by the United States from the United Mexican States during the war, except such as are embraced within the limits of the United States, as defined by the fourth article of this treaty, shall be restored without delay, and without causing any destruction or carrying away any of the artillery or other public property originally captured in the said forts or places, and which shall remain therein upon the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty. And, in like manner, all the forts, territories, places, and possessions whatsoever, taken by the United Mexican States from the United States during the war, and also all such forts, territories, places, and possessions embraced within the limits of the United States under the fourth article of this treaty, shall be restored, evacuated, and delivered over to the United States without delay, and without causing any destruction, or carrying away any of the artillery, or other public property, from the said forts or places, and which shall remain therein upon the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty.

Article 4. The boundary line between the two republics shall commence in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande; from thence up the middle of that river to the point where it strikes the southern line of New Mexico; thence westwardly along the southern boundary of New Mexico, to the southwestern corner of the same; thence northward along the western line of New Mexico, until it intersects the first branch of the river Gila, or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said line nearest to such branch; and thence in a direct line to the same, and down the middle of said branch and of the said river, until it empties into the Rio Colorado; thence down the middle of the Colorado and the middle of the Gulf of California, to the Pacific ocean.

ARTICLE 5. In consideration of the extension of the boundaries of the United States, as defined by the last preceding article,. and by the stipulations which will appear in article No. 8, the United States abandon, forever, all claims against the United States of Mexico, on account of the expenses of the war, the United States agree to pay to the United. Mexican States, at the city of Vera Cruz, the sum of——— dollars, in five equal instalments, each of ——— dollars; the first instalment to be paid immediately after this treaty shall have been duly ratified by the government of the United Mexican States.

ARTICLE 6. As a further consideration [of article No. 4] for the extension of the boundaries of the United States, as defined by the fourth article of this treaty, the United States agree to assume and pay to the claimants all the instalments now due, or hereafter to become due, under the convention between the two republics, concluded at the city of Mexico, on the 30th day of January, 1843, "further to provide for the payment of awards in favor of claimants under the convention between the United States and the Mexican republic, of the 11th April, 1839;" and the United States also agree to assume and pay, to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, all claims of citizens of the United States, not heretofore decided against the government of the United Mexican States, which may have arisen previous to the 13th of May, 1846, and shall be found to be justly due, by a board of commissioners, to be established by the government of the United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive; provided, that in deciding upon the validity of these claims, the board shall be guided and governed by the principles and rules of decision prescribed by the first and fifth articles of the unratified convention, concluded at the city of Mexico, on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1843; and, in no case, shall an award be made in favor of any claim not embraced by these principles and rules. And the United States do hereby forever discharge the United Mexican States from all liability for any of the said claims, whether the same shall be rejected or allowed by the said board of commissioners.

ARTICLE 7. If, in the opinion of the said board of commissioners, or of the claimants, any books, records, or documents in the possession or power of the government of the United Mexican States, shall be deemed necessary to the just decision of any of said claims, the commissioners, or the claimants through them, shall, within such period as Congress may designate, make a demand in writing for the same, addressed to the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs, to be transmitted by the Secretary of State of the United States; and the Mexican government engages, at the earliest possible moment after the receipt of such demand, to cause any of the said books, records, or documents in their possession or power, which shall be specified to be transmitted to the said Secretary of State, who shall immediately deliver them over to the said board of commissioners: provided, that no such demand shall be made at the instance of any claimant, until the facts which it is expected to prove by such books, records, or documents shall first have been stated under oath or affirmation.

Article 8. The government of the United Mexican States hereby grant and guaranty, forever, to the government and citizens of the United States, the right to transport across the isthmus of Tehuantepec, from sea to sea, by any modes of communication now existing, whether by land or water, free of any toll or charges whatever, all and any articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of any foreign country, belonging to the said government or citizens; and also the right of free passage over the same to all citizens of the United States. And the government of the United Mexican States also grant and guaranty to the government and citizens of the United States the same right of passage for their merchandise and articles aforesaid, as well as for such citizens, over any railroad or canal which may hereafter be constructed across the said isthmus by the government of the United Mexican States, or by its authority, paying no more than fair and reasonable tolls for the same; and no higher tolls and charges shall be levied and collected upon any of the before-mentioned articles and merchandise belonging to the government or citizens of the United States, or upon the persons of such citizens, for passing over the said railroad or canal, than shall be levied and collected upon like articles and merchandise belonging to the government or citizens of Mexico, being the growth, produce, and manufacture of Mexico, or of any foreign country, or upon the persons of such citizens; and none of the said articles whatever, belonging to the government or citizens of the United States, thus passing in transit over the said isthmus, from sea to sea, either by the existing modes of communication, or over any railroad or canal which may hereafter be constructed, in either direction, for the purpose of being transported to any port of the United States, or of any foreign country, shall be liable to any import or export duty whatever. The two governments hereby engage, with as little delay as possible, mutually to agree upon such regulations as may be necessary to prevent fraud and smuggling in consequence of the right of passage thus granted and perpetually guarantied to the government and citizens of the United States.

Article 9.—All goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall, during the war, have been imported into any of the ports or places of either party, whilst in the military occupation of the other, by the citizens of either, or by the citizens or subjects of any neutral power, shall be permitted to remain exempt from confiscation, or from any tax or duty upon the sale or exchange of the same, or upon the withdrawal of the said property from the country; and the owners thereof shall be permitted to sell and dispose of the said property in the same manner, in all respects whatever, as if it had been imported into the country in time of peace, and had paid the duties under the laws of either party, respectively.

Article 10. The treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, concluded at the city of Mexico, on the 3d day of April, A. D. 1831, between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, and every article thereof, with the exception of the additional article, are hereby revived for the period of eight years from the day of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, with the same force and virtue as if they made part of the context of the same; it being understood that each of the contracting parties reserves to itself the right, at any time after the said period of eight years shall have expired, to terminate the same by giving one year's notice of such intention to the other party.

Article 11. This treaty shall be approved and ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the President of the United Mexican States, with the previous approbation of their General Congress; and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington, within six months from the date of the signature hereof, or sooner, if practicable.

In faith whereof, we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

Done in duplicate at the day of , A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven.

Mr. Trist to Mr. Buchanan.—Extracts.

Head-quarters of U. S. Army,
Tacubaya, September 4, 1847.

Sir: The conference between the Mexican commissioners and myself, on the 2d instant, resulted in my saying that if they would submit to me a formal proposition to establish as the boundary between the two republics the one defined in the accompanying paper, (Enclosure No. 1,) I would transmit it to Washington, and would propose to General Scott to consent to the continuation of the armistice until the answer of our government should be received, the calculation being that this would require from forty to forty-five days, sending expresses both to Tampico and Vera Cruz.

* * * * * * * * *

Should my offer be accepted, this will go by quadruplicate; two by Vera Cruz, and two by Tampico, under the security afforded by double passports.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. P. TRIST.

Hon. JAMES BUCHANAN,
Secretary of State.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

The boundary line between the two republics shall commence at a point in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite to the middle of the southernmost inlet into Corpus Christi bay; thence through the middle of said inlet, and through the middle of said bay, to the middle of the mouth of the river Nueces; thence up the middle of said river to the southernmost extremity of Yoke Lake or Laguna de las Yuntas, where the said river leaves the said lake, after running through the same; thence, by a line due west, to the middle of the Rio Puerco; and thence up the middle of said river to the parallel of latitude six geographical miles north of the fort at the Paso del Norte on the Rio Bravo; thence due west along the said parallel to the point where it intersects the western boundary of New Mexico; thence northwardly along the said boundary until it first intersects a branch of the river Gila; (or if it should not intersect any branch of that river, then to the point on the said boundary nearest to the first branch thereof, and from that point in a direct line to such branch;) thence down the middle of said branch, and of the said river Gila, until it empties into the Rio Colorado, and down or up the middle of the Colorado, as the case may require, to the thirty-third parallel of latitude; and thence due west along the said parallel into the Pacific ocean. And it is hereby agreed and stipulated, that the territory comprehended between the Rio Bravo and the above defined boundary, from its commencement in the Gulf of Mexico up to the point where it crosses the said Rio Bravo, shall forever remain a neutral ground between the two republics, and shall not be settled upon by the citizens of either; no person shall be allowed hereafter to settle or establish himself within the said territory for any purpose, or under any pretext whatever; and all contraventions of this prohibition may be treated by the government of either republic in the way prescribed by its laws respecting persons establishing themselves, in defiance of its authority, within its own proper and exclusive territory.

The Mexican Commissioners to Mr. Trist.

[Translation.]

House of Alfara, on the Chapultepec Causeway,
September 6, 1847.

The undersigned, commissioned by the government of the Mexican republic to concert with your excellency an arrangement for peace, on placing in your hands the counter-projét which they have framed conformably to the last instructions of their government, think proper to accompany it with the observations contained in this note, which will tend to place in a clearer light the pacific disposition of Mexico in the contest which unfortunately separates both countries. The 4th article of the projét which your excellency was pleased to deliver to us on the 27th of August last, and which has been the subject of our latter conferences, relates to the cession, on the part of Mexico, 1st, of the State of Texas; 2d, of the territory on this side of the limits of that State, extending to the left bank of the Bravo and to the southern frontier of New Mexico; 3d, of all New Mexico; 4th, of the two Californias.

The existing war has been undertaken solely on account of the territory of the State of Texas, respecting which, the North American republic presents as its title the act of the said State by which it was annexed to the North American confederation, after having proclaimed its independence of Mexico. The Mexican republic offering (as we have informed your excellency) to consent, for a proper indemnification, to the pretensions of the government of Washington to the territory of Texas, the cause of the war has disappeared, and the war itself ought to cease, since there is no warrant for its continuance. To the other territories mentioned in the 4th article of your excellency's draught, no right has heretofore been asserted by the republic of North America, nor do we believe it possible for it to assert any. Consequently, it could not acquire them except by the right of conquest, or by the title which will result from the cession or sale which Mexico might now make. But, as we are persuaded, that the republic of Washington will not only absolutely repel, but will hold in abhorrence the first of these titles, and as, on the other hand, it would be a new thing, and contrary to every idea of justice, to make war upon a people for no other reason than because it refused to sell territory which its neighbor sought to buy, we expect, from the justice of the government and people of North America, that the ample modification which we have to propose to the cession of territory, (beyond that of the State of Texas,) contemplated by the said article 4, will not be a motive to persist in a war which the worthy general of the North American troops has justly styled as unnatural.

In our conferences, we have informed your excellency that Mexico cannot cede the belt which lies between the left bank of the Bravo and the right of the Nueces. The reason entertained for this, is not alone the full certainty that such territory never belonged to the State of Texas, nor is it founded on the great value, in the abstract, which is placed upon it. It is because that belt, together with the Bravo, forms the natural barrier for Mexico, both in a military and a commercial sense; and the barrier of no State ought to be sought, and no State can consent to abandon its barrier. But, in order to remove all cause for trouble hereafter, the government of Mexico engages not to found new settlements or establish colonies in the space between the two rivers; so that, remaining in its present uninhabited condition, it may serve as a safeguard equally to both republics. Pursuant to our instructions, the preservation of this territory is a condition sine qua non of peace. Sentiments of honor and delicacy (which your excellency's noble character will know how worthily to estimate) even more than a calculation of interests, prevent our government from consenting to the dismemberment of New Mexico. Upon this point we deem it superfluous to add any thing to that which we had the honor to explain to you orally in our conferences.

The cession of Lower California, which would be of little advantage to the republic of North America, offers great embarrassments to Mexico, considering the position of that peninsula opposite to our coast of Sonora, from which it is separated by the narrow gulf of Cortes. Your excellency has appreciated our remarks on this point, and we have been gratified to see that you have yielded to them. The preservation of Lower California would be enough to make it indispensable to keep a part of Upper California; for, otherwise, that peninsula would be without any communication by land with the rest of the republic, which is always a great embarrassment, especially for a power like Mexico, which is not maritime. The grant which is offered by our government (for the proper equivalent) of that part of Upper California which extends from the 37th degree upwards, not only allows to the United States the acquisition of an excellent coast, of fertile lands, and also of untouched mines, but also presents to it the advantage of extending to that limit its Oregon possessions. The wisdom of the government of Washington, and the praiseworthy industry of the American people, will know how to draw rich fruits from the important acquisition which we now offer.

In the 8th article of your excellency's draught, the grant of a free passage across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec to the South Sea is sought in favor of the North American citizens. We have orally explained to your excellency that some years since the government of the republic granted to a private contractor a privilege, with reference to this object, which was soon transferred, with the sanction of the same government, to English subjects, of whose rights Mexico cannot dispose. Therefore, your excellency will not wonder that upon this point we do not accede to the desires of your government.

We have entered into this plain statement of the motives which the republic has, for not agreeing to alienate all the territory asked of it beyond the State of Texas, because we desire that the North American government and people may be persuaded that our partial refusal does not proceed from feelings of aversion created by the antecedents in this war, or by the sufferings which it has inflicted upon Mexico, but rests upon considerations dictated by reason and justice, which would operate at any time with reference to the most friendly nation, although our relations of friendship with her might be of the closest character. The other changes which your excellency will find in our counter draught are of minor moment, and we believe that there will be no serious objection to them. The subject contained in the 12th article has before now been mentioned in your excellency's country. We flatter ourselves, from the integrity of your government, that it will not refuse to contract an engagement so conformable to honor, and that good harmony in which two neighboring people ought to live.

The peace between both countries will be established with greater solidity if a friendly power, (England,) which has so nobly offered its good offices to Mexico and the United States, in the present contest, will now offer to grant its guaranty for the faithful fulfilment of the treaty which may be concluded. The Mexican government understands that it would be very proper to solicit this guaranty.

Our government directs us to recommend to your excellency, that you will be pleased to communicate your decision upon the counter-draught, which we have the honor to present to you, within three days.

The good and salutary work can, in our opinion, reach a happy end, if each of the contending parties resolves to abandon some of its original pretensions. This has always been the case; and no nation ever hesitated, at such a juncture, to make great sacrifices to extinguish the destructive flame of war. Mexico and the United States have special reasons thus to act. We must confess, not without a blush, that we are exhibiting to mankind the scandal of two Christian nations, of two republics, in the presence of all the monarchies, mutually doing to one another all the harm we can by disputes about boundaries, when we have an excess of land to people and to cultivate, in the beautiful hemisphere where Providence caused us to be born. We venture to commend these considerations to your excellency, before you come to a definite decision upon our propositions.

We consequently do ourselves the honor to offer you our devotion and respect.

JOSE J. DE HERRERA,
BERNARDO CONTO,
IGNACIO MORA Y VILLAMIL,
MIGUEL ATRISTAIN.

To his Excellency Don Nicholas Trist,
Deputed with full powers by the government of the United States to the government of the Mexican republic.

COUNTER-PROJECT.

1st. There shall be firm and universal peace between the United States of America and the Mexican republic, and their respective territories, cities, towns, and villages, not excepting persons or places.

2d. All the prisoners of war made on either side, whether by sea or land, shall be released immediately after the signing of the present treaty. It is also agreed, that if any Mexicans are now captives in the power of any Indian tribe within the limits ceded by the 4th article to the United States, the government of said United States shall exact their release, and that they be restored to liberty and to their homes in Mexico.

3d. Immediately after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, all the forts, places, and possessions, which may have been taken or occupied during this present war, within the limits fixed by the 4th article for this republic, shall be restored to the Mexican republic. In like manner shall be restored the artillery, arms, and ammunition that were in the castles and strongholds when they fell into the power of the troops of the United States. With respect to the artillery taken outside of said castles and fortified places, that which is still in the power of the United States troops, shall be returned to Mexico at the date of the signing of the present treaty.

4th. The dividing line between the two republics shall commence in the gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite the southern mouth of the bay of Corpus Christi, shall run in a straight line from within the said bay to the mouth of the river Nueces; thence through the middle of that river in all its course to its source; from the source of the river Nueces shall be traced a straight line until it meets the present frontier of New Mexico, on the east-southeast side; it shall then follow the present boundary of New Mexico on the east, north, and west, until this last touches the 37th degree; which will serve as limit for both republics, from the point in which it touches the said frontier of the west of New Mexico to the Pacific ocean. The government of Mexico promises not to found any new settlements or establish colonies in the tract of land which remains between the river Nueces and the Bravo del Norte.

5th. As a just compensation for the extension of their old limits, which the United States acquire by the previous article, the government of said United States is bound to pay over to the republic of Mexico the sum of   , which shall be placed in the city of Mexico, at the disposal of the said government of the Mexican republic, in the act of exchanging the ratification of this treaty.

6th. The government of the United States is further bound, to take upon itself, and satisfy fully, the claimants to all the instalments [cantidades] which are due up to this time, and may become due in future, by reason of the claims now liquidated, and decided against the Mexican republic, agreeably to the conventions arranged between the two republics on the 11th of April, 1839, and 30th of January, 1843, in such manner that the Mexican republic shall have absolutely no further payment to make on account of the said claims.

7th. The government of the United States is also bound to take upon itself, and pay fully, all the claims of its own citizens, not yet decided, against the Mexican republic, whatever may be the title or motive from which they may proceed, or on which they are founded; so that, from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, the accounts of every kind that exist, or may be supposed to exist, between the government of Mexico and the citizens of the United States, remain settled definitively and forever.

8th. In order that the government of the United States may be able to satisfy, in observance of the previous article, the claims not yet decided of its citizens against the Mexican republic, there shall be established by the government of the said United States, a tribunal of commissioners, whose decisions shall be conclusive and definitive; provided, that on deciding upon the validity of any demand, it may be adjusted by the principles and rules which were established in the articles 1st and 5th of the convention, (not ratified,) which was concluded in Mexico on the 20th of November, 1843; and in no case shall a decision be given in favor of any claim which is not adjusted pursuant to the aforesaid rules. If the tribunal of commissioners deem it necessary for the just decision of any demand to examine books, registers, or documents, which are in the power of the Mexican government, the government of the United States shall make application for them, and either the originals or faithful copies shall be sent to it for the purpose of being, as they may, communicated to the said tribunal; it being understood that there shall not be made by the government of the United States, any application for the said books, registers, or documents, until it shall be specified in each case under oath, or with judicial sanction on the part of the claimant in the case, the facts sought to be proved, with such books, registers, or documents.

9th. All the temples, houses, and edifices, dedicated to the rites or exercises of the Catholic worship, in territories belonging hitherto to the Mexican republic, and which, by the 4th article of this treaty, will be within the limits of the United States, shall remain dedicated to the same rites and exercises of the Catholic religion, without any change, and under the special protection of the laws. The same shall be the case with all goods, moveable and immoveable, which within the said territories are dedicated to the support of the Catholic worship, or the support of schools, hospitals, and other establishments of charity or benevolence. Finally, the relations and communications of the Catholics, living in the same territories with their respective ecclesiastical authorities, shall be frank, free, and without any embarrassment, even though the said authorities have their residence within the limits which remain subject to the Mexican republic in this treaty; nor shall there be any new demarkation of ecclesiastical districts, except conformably to the laws of the Catholic church.

10th. The Mexicans residing in territory heretofore belonging to Mexico, and now in the limits of the United States, may at any time return to the Mexican republic, preserving in the said territory the property they possess, may transfer and convey its value wherever it suits them, without, on this account, being liable to the exaction by the United States of any kind of contribution, tax or impost. If the persons here treated of prefer to remain in the territories they now inhabit, they may preserve the title and rights of Mexican citizens, or at once acquire the title and rights of citizens of the United States if they wish it. But in all cases they and their property shall enjoy the most ample security.

11th. All the grants of lands made by Mexican authorities, in territories belonging heretofore to the republic, and by this treaty to be for the future within the limits of the United States, shall be valid and permanent, and shall be sustained and guarded forever by the government of the said United States.

12th. The republic of the United States promises solemnly not to permit hereafter the annexation of any district or territory comprehended in the limits which by the present treaty are assigned to the Mexican republic. This solemn agreement has the character of a condition from the territorial cessions which Mexico now makes to the republic of North America.

13th. All goods now in the Mexican ports occupied by the North American troops, shall pay the duties established by the tariff of the Mexican republic, provided they have not before paid duties to that republic; but they shall not incur the penalty of confiscation.

14th. The government of the United States shall satisfy, according to just terms, the claims of Mexican citizens for the injury sustained in their interests by the North American troops.

The present treaty shall be ratified, &c., &c.

Mr. Trist to the Mexican Commissioners.

TACUBAYA, September 7, 1847.

The undersigned, commissioner of the United States of America, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note, under date of yesterday, from their excellencies the commissioners on the part of Mexico, accompanying the counter-projét which they had been instructed to present.

The authority with which he is clothed being limited, so far as regards the boundary to be established between the two republics, to the conclusion of a treaty upon the basis of the ultimatum presented by him on the 2d instant, the undersigned finds himself, as was stated by him at their conference on yesterday, under the painful necessity of recognizing the absolute irreconcileableness which exists between the views of the two governments in this regard, and of considering these final instructions to their excellencies as putting an end to the negotiation which he has had the honor to conduct with them, and which has left on his mind a deep and lasting impression of the sincerity with which his earnest wish was reciprocated, that the restoration of peace might be the result.

Debarred as he is, from discussing with them the question of boundary, beyond the point now reached, he must limit himself to some remarks in reply to the observations to which his attention is invited, and which he is requested to consider fully before coming to a definitive determination with respect to their propositions.

Acknowledging their title to his utmost attention, not only on account of the gravity of the subject, but also because of the candor and frankness displayed throughout their intercourse, on the part of those by whom these observations are submitted, the undersigned, after considering them in the same spirit, finds himself compelled to say, that, plausible as they may at a first glance seem, they indicate to his mind an altogether erroneous view of the positions in which the two countries stand towards each other, and of the general question now pending between them.

It is perfectly true, as stated by their excellencies, that "the war now existing commenced with reference to the territory of the State of Texas," and it is likewise true, that the title by which this territory is claimed by the United States (or, to speak more properly, now constitutes an integral portion of the United States) consists in "the act of Texas," (concurrently with that of the American Congress) "whereby she became incorporated into the Union," as one of its sovereign members. But this is very far from warranting the conclusion which appears to their excellencies to flow from it, and on which are rested the reasonableness and justice of the propositions, which they have been instructed to make on the part of the Mexican government.

This conclusion is, that Mexico, by consenting, as she now offers to do, upon being properly indemnified, to accede to the claim of the United States to Texas, removes the cause of the war; and that, consequently, all title whereby it may be further prosecuted being now wanting, it should at once cease. Pursuing the same line of reasoning, it is further urged, with reference to the remainder of the territory comprehended within the boundary described in the project presented by the undersigned, that no right thereto having heretofore been alleged by the United States, consequently the only title by which it could be acquired must rest either upon conquest or upon purchase, with respect to the former of which titles, the confidence is expressed that it would be regarded with reprobation by the United States; whilst, in regard to the latter, it is remarked that it would be repugnant to every idea of justice, to wage war against a nation for no other reason than her refusal to sell territory which a neighbor desired to purchase.

To perceive clearly the utter fallacy of this whole view of the subject, it is necessary only to advert to a few leading facts belonging to the series of events, out of which has grown the state of things now existing between the two countries.

Composed chiefly of emigrants from the United States, who had been invited thither by Mexico under the guarantees for the security of life, liberty, and property afforded by the constitution of 1824—a constitution modelled upon that of their native land—the people of Texas, after the lapse of a few years, found themselves presented with the alternative of taking up arms in defence of their dearest rights, or submitting to the military usurpation and despotism by which the organic law of their adopted country had been subverted and replaced. As could not but be foreseen by all persons not entirely unacquainted with the national character formed under the influences of English principles of government, and of the developments which these have received on our side of the Atlantic, the former of these alternatives was the choice of the Texans. They resisted, and their resistance proved successful. Thus arose the republic of Texas.

After establishing a government, the security afforded by which to all that civilized man holds dear, presented the most striking contrast to the consequences of the subversion of the Mexican Constitution, as exhibited throughout the rest of the country, for whose happiness it had been established. After obtaining from the principal powers of the earth a recognition as one of the great family of nations, and after maintaining this position, through a period and under circumstances rendering manifest to the world that it was not to be shaken by Mexico, the new republic sought and obtained admission among the United States of America, as a member of their Union.

By this event she became entitled to be protected by the United States from invasion: their appropriate organ for the discharge of this obligation being the Executive of the General Government, as the functionary charged with the control and direction of their defensive force. But, of what consisted the territory of this new member of the Union, which, from the moment of her admission as such, it had thus become the duty of the President of the United States to employ the forces placed by the Constitution under his direction in protecting from invasion? In other words, where were her boundaries? To protect a State from invasion, means, to prevent the occupation of any portion of her territory by the armed force of any other state or nation. This obligation, therefore, manifestly implies the existence of limits to her territory—limits, the crossing of which by a foreign force constitutes an invasion. It necessarily results, from the very nature of things, that this duty of protection can have no existence, except concurrently with the existence of such limits. When considered with reference to this obligation, a territory without determinate limits is a contradiction in terms. It is of the very essence of the obligation, that the portion of the earth's surface to which it attaches shall be definite and determinate; it being otherwise impossible to say when it is invaded, and when it is not invaded.

Where, then, were the limits of this new member of the Union? As defined and asserted by herself, the territory of Texas extended to the Rio Bravo. Her right to insist upon this boundary was equally good, and identically the same, in all respects, as the right of Mexico to insist upon any other line of separation; and this right, agreeably to a principle of international law, too well established to admit of dispute or doubt, existed independently of the question as to what might or might not have been the true limits of Texas, whilst constituting a part of the Mexican republic. With reference to that period, their excellencies the commissioners assert, as "a matter of absolute certainty, that the country comprehended between the Nueces and the Bravo had never formed part of the State of Texas." But, supposing this to be true, it would not in any way affect the right of the Texan people, at the close of the war into which they had been forced as above stated, to insist upon such boundary as they might deem essential to their future security against the spirit manifested towards them by the government whose usurped power they had so successfully defended themselves against; whilst, not content with subverting the authority of the Constitution, it had sought to stifle and to extinguish forever, within the bounds of Texas especially, not only every spark of liberty, but every one of those great elements of civilization which that Constitution was designed to foster and to develop. In a word, the republic of Texas and the republic of Mexico had been for many years at war; and, as the condition to the cessation of this war, either party had the same right, identically, to demand and to insist upon the establishment of such boundary as in her judgment was the just and proper one. If Mexico, on her part, could assert as a fundamental axiom the one now put forward by her commissioners, that "no nation can rightfully be required, nor should any nation ever consent, to relinquish her natural frontier," and from this axiom deduce her right to insist upon possessing the territory between the Nueces and the Bravo, on the ground of the insufficiency of the latter river alone for her security, either in a military or in a commercial point of view, and that the river and the territory together were indispensable to her for this purpose; if this right appertained to Mexico, Texas, on the other hand, had an equal right to appeal to the same principle, and to point to the manifest self-contradiction involved in the deduction drawn from it; which, on the ground that the whole of a broad and angry torrent was insufficient for her security, gave to Mexico a wide extent of territory, as an additional bulwark, whilst it required that Texas should content herself with half the width of a comparatively narrow and sluggish stream.

Such, then, was the position of Texas, with regard to her boundary towards Mexico, at the time when she became admitted into the Union. According to the well settled doctrine of international law upon this subject, the line of demarcation between the two republics had become obliterated by the war; and the consent of both had become necessary to the re-establishment of that line, or the establishment of any other, as their common boundary. This being the state of things, Texas, asserting her right and her determination to insist upon the lower part of the Rio Bravo as a part of that boundary, obtained admission into the North American sisterhood. With respect to this point, however, the American Congress, through a scrupulous regard for any right which Mexico might have, or might suppose herself to have, to any portion of the territory embraced within the asserted limits of Texas, reserved to the United States the right to determine those limits by means of friendly negotiation with Mexico; this being, as has already been observed, the only way in which an international boundary, in the proper sense of the term, can be ascertained; for, although one of two conterminous nations may select for itself, and may maintain by force, the line which is to separate her territory from that of the other; yet, a boundary between them can never be said to exist, except in virtue of the consent and recognition of both. Without such an agreement between them, neither of two nations whose territories touch each other can be said to have a boundary.

Such was the state of the case between Texas and Mexico at the time of the admission of the former into the American Union; and such it necessarily continued to be after that event, with this single difference—that the question between Mexico and Texas had now become one between Mexico and the United States. No agreement or understanding had yet taken place between them—the Mexican government, on the contrary, still claiming to consider Texas as a rebellious province, over which it intended to re-establish its authority—it was, in the nature of things, impossible that the boundaries of this new member of the American Union should have become determined.

From this state of things resulted the obligation—equally imperative upon the United States and upon Mexico—to effect, as speedily as possible, that settlement of boundary which, by events now past recall, and manifestly to the whole world constituting "a fact fulfilled," had become a matter of absolute necessity between these two parties; as that, by virtue of which alone, either of the two could exercise authority over any portion of the country lying between the Rio Bravo and the Sabine, without the certainty of collision between the equal right and the equal obligation of each to defend its territory from invasion; for, as has already been stated, whilst Texas, on the one hand, asserted that these two rivers constituted her boundaries, the Mexican government, on the other hand, persisted in denying the separate existence of Texas as an independent State, and claimed the whole country embraced between those streams as still constituting a part of Mexico. Moreover, even on the supposition that the pretensions of the latter had been less irreconcileable with the fixed facts of the independence of Texas, and her incorporation into the Union; and if these fixed facts had received from Mexico the acknowledgment to which they were entitled from human reason, still, even on this supposition, the necessity for a settlement of the boundary would have been no less absolute than it has been shown that it was; for, until ascertained by a compact or agreement, definitive or provisional, between the United States and Mexico, the boundary between the two republics, when considered by the United States with reference to the national obligation to protect their territory from invasion, could be none other than that very boundary which had been asserted by Texas herself. From the very nature of things, it could not be otherwise: because, independently of the truth that a boundary between two conterminous nations cannot exist, except in virtue of their mutual consent, and that, consequently, it was impossible that this boundary should be determined by the United States alone—independently of this truth, the necessity here referred to resulted from the care taken by the United States, whilst in the very act of admitting Texas, to respect the territorial rights of Mexico—not, indeed, by denying, as her government persisted in doing, the existence of Texas as a sovereign and independent republic, but by recognizing the impossibility that, by the mere act of Texas alone, the line of demarcation between herself and Mexico should be determined. From this manifestation of regard for the rights of Mexico, it resulted that the Executive of the United States, their constitutional organ for fulfilling the obligation of protecting the country from invasion, was placed under the necessity either to disregard that obligation entirely with respect to Texas, or to consider it as co-extensive with the limits which she had herself asserted. Between these alternatives, no medium presented itself, except that the Executive should assume to decide what the proper limits of Texas were—a thing impossible on its part, without an usurpation of power, no less futile than flagrant; for, whilst on the one hand, it could not but leave the question of boundary precisely where it stood before, it would have involved at once a violation of the rights of Texas, a violation of the rights of Mexico, and a defiance of the authority of the legislative power of the Union; the determination of these limits having, by that authority, been referred to the concurrent action of the treaty-making power of the United States and of Mexico. This flagrant and three-fold usurpation, on the part of one branch of the government of the United States, constituted the only possible middle course between the alternatives above stated. And this state of things must continue, so long as the boundary of the newly admitted member of the Union should not be ascertained, either definitively or provisionally, by a treaty or convention be- the American and the Mexican governments.

Thus stood the case between the two republics. Here was a juncture in human affairs, presenting as a fixed fact—a fact which, manifestly to the whole world, has passed beyond human control—the absolute necessity of an immediate understanding and agreement between the two governments; whereby, if not definitively, at least provisionally, that boundary should be ascertained, by means of which alone their respective fields of duty could be distinguished—by means of which alone a collision, in the discharge of those duties, could be avoided. The existence of this necessity, and the fact that it had taken its place among those things which have passed beyond human control, were manifest to the whole world. And how was it met by Mexico? By a refusal to acknowledge it. To endeavors the most earnest, the most respectful, the most conciliatory, the most patient and persevering, to induce her to listen, she responded by a refusal to hear. The admission of Texas into the Union was denounced by the Mexican government, in terms that the undersigned will not recall, as an act of war; and its unalterable determination proclaimed, to wrest Texas, the whole of Texas, from the United States, by force of arms. Armies were embodied, and the resources of the country exhausted in preparations to carry this threat into execution; and, finally, the troops of the United States were attacked, and American blood was shed within that territory, which, as has been demonstrated, nothing but the amicable understanding which it had so earnestly but so vainly sought, could have absolved the government of the United States from the necessity of considering as a part of the country which it is under the most imperious and the most solemn of obligations to protect from invasion.

Thus did this war begin. It was commenced, not by the United States, to acquire Texas, but by Mexico, to subjugate Texas, after her national existence had become irrevocably blended and identified with that of the United States. This was the avowed purpose for which Mexico's "army of the north" was embodied and marched; and, for which, "the campaign of Texas" was opened. The ulterior destination of that army, as proclaimed by the press of the Mexican capital, echoing and re-echoing the manifestoes and the orders poured forth by the government, was, not the southern shore of the Rio Bravo, but the western shore of the Sabine. There was no mention then of the distinction between the territory proper to the State of Texas, and the territory proper to the State of Tamaulipas; nor of the "zone between the left bank of the Bravo and the right bank of the Nueces;" nor of the latter river as constituting a boundary of any sort, or for any purpose. The only limit to Mexican territory, recognized in the manifestoes referred to, was the Sabine; and upon the bank of that river was the army of Mexico to plant her flag.

Thus did the war begin. Had no such purpose as the subjugation of Texas been then avowed, or been then entertained, by the Mexican government; had the "army of the north" been formed solely for defensive purposes; even then, on this supposition, so highly favorable to Mexico, the cause of the war could be found in but one thing—the pertinacious refusal of her government to recognise the necessity which had arisen for that concurrent action of the two governments, by which alone either could be enabled to distinguish the territory which it was under the obligation to defend as its own, from that which it was bound to respect as its neighbor's.

When considered in connexion with the course pursued by the Mexican government, in refusing to recognise this necessity for an understanding, and for conjoint action with that of the United States, the mere presence of the force of the former upon the left bank of the Bravo, or any where within the asserted limits of Texas, constituted an invasion. Independently of any attack by those forces upon the troops of the United States, their crossing the Bravo amounted of itself to active war. This invasion was repelled; and the war thus forced upon the United States, became soon a war of invasion on their part: a war of invasion, but not of aggression; for they had remained passive until struck, and until the pertinacity of the Mexican government in maintaining its attitude of hostility, had made it manifest that no good consequences could result from further forbearance, and had precluded all doubt that the only hope of the restoration of peace between the two countries rested upon a vigorous prosecution of the war by the party assailed.

The results by which it has thus far been attended, it were needless here to dwell upon. It suffices to say, that the seaports of Mexico, together with the chief cities and strong places of a very considerable portion of her territory, are now in the possession of the forces of the United States; and this, under circumstances affording no prospect whatever that their hold upon them can be made to loosen. These are the circumstances under which the desire for peace, so steadfastly cherished and so constantly manifested by the United States, is now again repeated. In making this offer, upon the condition set forth in the projét submitted by the undersigned, the United States occupy a position very different from that supposed in the observations which have elicited these remarks.

In proposing to Mexico to agree to the establishment of the boundary defined in that projét, they do not present themselves as purchasers attempting to coerce a neighbor to the sale of her territory. They do, it is true, rely on the title by conquest; but not in the sense wherein alone this title has any odium attached to it, even according to the highest known standard of international morality. The title by conquest—understanding by conquest the forcible wresting of a country from its rightful owner without just and sufficient cause, and through the mere desire to possess it—this title by conquest is one which the Mexican government does nothing more than justice to the United States in supposing that it finds no favor in their eyes; but, if by conquest, be meant the retention of territory which a neighbor, by forcing you into a war, has compelled you to occupy, after every possible means has been exhausted by you to preserve peace and to avoid that necessity; if this be the sense attached to the words, then the title, by conquest, is one which any member of the great family of nations may appeal to in the certainty that it will be pronounced good by the tribunal to which they are alike amenable. From the judgment of that tribunal, upon the terms now offered to Mexico, the United States have nothing to apprehend. In the eyes of a candid world, when the excitement and the misconceptions of the hour shall have passed away, their conduct will appear in its true light; and the erroneousness of the view taken by Mexico of the position which they occupy towards her will be manifest. Instead of the covetous neighbor, seeking to extort from the weakness of another the sale of territory which she is averse to part with, they will be seen to have realized the character of a generous conqueror, freely proffering to restore possessions of inestimable value, acquired at a vast expenditure of blood and of treasure in the prosecution of a war into which he had been most reluctantly compelled; and who, whilst insisting, with respect to a portion of his conquests, upon his right to retain them, sought at once to reconcile the exercise of this right with the interests of the other party, and to render it as little grating as possible to his feelings by connecting with it an offer of that pecuniary relief which his exhausted condition so loudly called for, and which everything conspired to render vastly more important to his welfare than the recovery of remote and uninhabited districts, the loss of which would be as little felt as had been the merely nominal and purely sterile authority previously exercised over them.

In closing this correspondence, the undersigned, whilst most painfully alive to the consequences which cannot but attend the failure of the purpose for which they were placed in communication, experiences unfeigned satisfaction in giving utterance to the sentiments of personal esteem and confidence with which he has been inspired by the eminent citizens of Mexico who have acted as her organs in the negotiation. Barren, as unhappily it has proved in regard to the great object which has occupied them, it has at least served to impress deeply on his mind the conviction that, had the course of the Mexican government upon the Texan question been directed by the enlightened patriotism which this republic posseses among her sons, reason and candor and good feeling would have asserted their rightful predominance over the elements to whose baleful sway the calamities of the war are due.

No. 24.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

IN ANSWER

To a resolution of the Senate respecting duties laid on goods and merchandise exported by citizens of the United States to Mexico.

February 11, 1848.

Read, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant, requesting to be informed whether "any taxes, duties, or imports," have been "laid and collected upon goods and merchandise, belonging to citizens of the United States, exported by such citizens from the United States to Mexico; and, if so, what is the rate of such duties, and what amount has been collected; and, also, by what authority of law the same have been laid and collected;" I refer the Senate to my annual message of the 7th of December last, in which I informed Congress that orders had been given to our military and naval commanders in Mexico, to adopt the policy, as far as practicable, of levying military contributions upon the enemy for the support of our army.

As one of the modes adopted for levying such contributions, it was stated in that message that, "On the 31st of March last, I caused an order to be issued to our military and naval commanders to levy and collect a military contribution upon all vessels and merchandise which might enter any of the ports of Mexico in our military occupation, and to apply such contributions towards defraying the expenses of the war. By virtue of the right of conquest and the laws of war, the conqueror, consulting his own safety or convenience, may either exclude foreign commerce altogether from all such ports, or permit it upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. Before the principal ports of Mexico were blockaded by our navy, the revenue derived from import duties, under the laws of Mexico, was paid into the Mexican treasury. After these ports had fallen into our military possession, the blockade was raised, and commerce with them permitted upon prescribed terms and conditions. They were opened to the trade of all nations upon the payment of duties more moderate in their amount than those which had been previously levied by Mexico; and the revenue, which was formerly paid into the Mexican treasury, was directed to be collected by our military and naval officers, and applied to the use of our army and navy. Care was taken that the officers, soldiers and sailors, of our army and navy, should be exempted from the operations of the order; and as the merchandise imported, upon which the order operated, must be consumed by Mexican citizens, the contributions exacted were, in effect, the seizure of the public revenues of Mexico and the application of them to our own use. In directing this measure, the object was to compel the enemy to contribute, as far as practicable, towards the expenses of the war."

A copy of the order referred to, with the documents accompanying it, has been communicated to Congress.

The order operated upon the vessels and merchandise of all nations, whether belonging to citizens of the United States or to foreigners, arriving in any of the ports in Mexico in our military occupation. The contributions levied were a tax upon Mexican citizens, who were the consumers of the merchandise imported; but, for the permit or license granted by the order, all vessels and merchandise belonging to citizens of the United States were, necessarily, excluded from all commerce with Mexico from the commencement of the war. The coasts and ports of Mexico were ordered to be placed under blockade on the day Congress declared the war to exist; and, by the laws of nations, the blockade applied to the vessels of the United States as well as to the vessels of all other nations. Had no blockade been declared, or had any of our merchant vessels entered any of the ports of Mexico not blockaded, they would have been liable to be seized and condemned as lawful prize by the Mexican authorities. When the order was issued, it operated as a privilege to the vessels of the United States as well as to those of foreign countries to enter the ports held by our arms upon prescribed terms and conditions. It was altogether optional with citizens of the United States and foreigners to avail themselves of the privileges granted upon the terms prescribed.

Citizens of the United States and foreigners have availed themselves of these privileges.

No principle is better established than that a nation at war has the right of shifting the burden off itself and imposing it on the enemy by exacting military contributions. The mode of making such exactions must be left to the discretion of the conquerer, but it should be exercised in a manner conformable to the rules of civilized warfare.

The right to levy these contributions is essential to the successful prosecution of war in an enemy's country, and the practice of nations has been in accordance with this principle. It is as clearly necessary as the right to fight battles, and its exercise is often essential to the subsistence of the army.

Entertaining no doubt that the military right to exclude commerce altogether from the ports of the enemy in our military occupation included the minor right of admitting it under prescribed conditions, it became an important question, at the date of the order, whether there should be a discrimination between vessels and cargoes belonging to citizens of the United States and vessels and cargoes belonging to neutral nations.

Had the vessels and cargoes belonging to citizens of the United States been admitted without the payment of any duty, while a duty was levied on foreign vessels and cargoes, the object of the order would have been defeated. The whole commerce would have been conducted in American vessels, no contributions could have been collected, and the enemy would have been furnished with goods without the exaction from him of any contribution whatever, and would have been thus benefitted by our military occupation, instead of being made to feel the evils of the war. In order to levy these contributions, and to make them available for the support of the army, it became, therefore, absolutely necessary that they should be collected upon imports into Mexican ports, whether in vessels belonging to citizens of the United States or to foreigners.

It was deemed proper to extend the privilege to vessels and their cargoes belonging to neutral nations. It has been my policy, since the commencement of the war with Mexico, to act justly and liberally towards all neutral nations, and to afford to them no just cause of complaint; and we have seen the good consequences of this policy by the general satisfaction which it has given.

In answer to the inquiry contained in the resolution as to the rates of duties imposed, I refer you to the documents which accompanied my annual message of the 7th of December last, which contain the information.

From the accompanying reports of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, it will be seen that the contributions have been collected on all vessels and cargoes, whether American or foreign; but the returns to the departments do not show, with exactness, the amounts collected on American, as distinguishable from foreign vessels and merchandise.

War Department,
Washington, February 8, 1848.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this department of the resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant, requesting the President "to inform the Senate whether he has caused to be laid and collected any taxes, duties, or imposts, upon goods and merchandise belonging to citizens of the United States, exported by such citizens from the United States to Mexico; and, if so, what is the rate of such duties, and what amount has been collected; and also, by what authority of law the same have been laid and collected."

The returns received at this department do not furnish the information required by this resolution. Those from Vera Cruz are so far incomplete, that they do not state the ports whence the vessels come. Those from Tampico and Matamoras are more full in this particular, and it appears that most of the vessels arriving at these ports have been from the United States, and may be presumed to have been owned by our citizens. The names of the consignees would indicate the majority of them to be Mexicans, or other foreigners, but there are no means of ascertaining their citizenship, or the ownership of the goods received by them.

As no distinction with regard to ownership was made by the order imposing duties on goods imported into Mexican ports in our military possession, importers, citizens of the United States, have paid the same duties as have been exacted from all others; and for the rates thereof, I have the honor to refer to the documents on this subject communicated to you from this department, and laid before Congress at the commencement of the present session. The amounts collected, for the reasons above explained, cannot be stated.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To the PRESIDENT of the United States.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 9, 1848.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference to this department of the resolution of the Senate of the 1st instant, requesting that the President will inform the Senate "whether he has caused to be laid and collected any taxes, duties, or imposts, upon goods and merchandise belonging to citizens of the United States, exported by such citizens from the United States to Mexico; and, if so, what amount has been collected; and also, by what authority of law the same have been laid and collected."

I have the honor to report, that in no case of a Mexican port, which, by capture, is held by the naval forces of the United States, has the blockade which preceded the capture been unconditionally raised. But vessels, with their cargoes, have been admitted to entry, upon the conditions prescribed by the order of the 31st of March last, with the modifications subsequently adopted, and which were communicated to Congress with your last annual message, or on those prescribed by the orders of our military or naval officers of a prior date. Under this order, vessels, goods, and merchandise, belonging to citizens of the United States, offering for entry in such ports, have been subject to pay the prescribed duties before they could be permitted to land their goods for sale in Mexico, irrespective of the place from which such goods or merchandise may have been exported.

The returns received at the department do not show the place from which the goods may have been exported, but only the place from which the vessel last cleared, before entry; nor do they show the several portions of the cargoes on which duty has been charged, but the entire sum received from each vessel or cargo, under the heads of tonnage duty, or duty on cargo.

It is not, therefore, in my power to communicate the amount, if any, which may have been collected on goods or merchandise belonging to citizens of the United States, exported from the United States to Mexico. The entries in the returns from ports held by the naval forces, in almost every instance, seem to have been of vessels with cargoes from foreign ports, or other ports of Mexico, in our military possession.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

To the PRESIDENT.

30th Congress,
1st Session.

[SENATE.]

Executive,
No. 36.

REPORT

THE SECRETARY OF WAR,

SHOWING

The number of troops in the service of the United States in Mexico since the commencement of the war, the killed and wounded, &c.

April 10, 1848.
Read, and ordered to be printed.

War Department,
Washington, April 8, 1848.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the Senate of the 30th of December last, which is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War inform the Senate—

"First. What has been the whole number of volunteer troops called into the service of the United States since the 13th May, 1846.

"Second. Of the troops so called, what has been the whole number discharged from such service before their term of service had expired, and what the number mustered out of the service of the United States.

"Third. What has been the whole number of troops in Mexico, belonging to the regular army of the United States, since the 13th May, 1846.

"Fourth. What is the number of such troops now in Mexico.

"Fifth. What has been the whole number of officers and men belonging either to the regular army or the volunteers, who have been killed or died of wounds received in battle since the 7th of May, 1846.

"Sixth. What has been the whole number of officers and men of the regular army or volunteers wounded in battle since the 7th May, 1846, who have not died of their wounds."

The report of the Adjutant General, herewith transmitted, contains all the information required by the resolution, so far as it can be furnished from the files and records of this department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. George M. Dallas,
Vice President of the United States,
and President of the Senate.

The Adjutant General's report to the Secretary of War, April 5, 1848, relative to the regular and volunteer forces employed in the Mexican war, from the commencement of hostilities in May, 1846, to December, 1847.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Adjutant General's Office, Washington, April 5, 1848.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions, I herewith respectfully furnish the information called for by the resolutions of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, dated respectively the 20th and 30th of December, 1847, relative to the regular and volunteer forces which have been employed in the service of the United States since the commencement of hostilities with the republic of Mexico, May, 1846. The two resolutions refer to the same subject, and embrace nearly the same description of what may be termed army statistics; and it was found that the information furnished in answer to the one, met substantially the requirements of the other, the difference consisting chiefly in the greater scope of inquiry in one of the resolutions.

1. The accompanying tabular statements A, B, C, D, E, exhibit in detail the varied information required to be furnished, so far as can now be obtained from the rolls and returns, &c., received at the Adjutant General's office, and in the form necessary to meet fully the objects of inquiry, as well as the most useful and satisfactory. Reference to these tables presents the following results:

THE REGULAR ARMY.

2. Statement A shows, on the extreme right in the first line of figures, the strength of the army at the commencement of hostilities with the republic of Mexico, in April, 1846, 7,244; the force on the frontier of Texas, May, 1846, present and absent, 3,554, of which 131 were sick; troops sent to Mexico, including recruits, 23,136, of which 12,551 are of the old establishment, and 10,585 new regiments, which, with the force on the Rio Grande in May, 1846, makes the whole number of the regular army employed every where in the prosecution of the war, inclusive of December, 1847, about 26,690, besides a battalion of marines, (350.) Twenty-nine thousand men have been recruited since the 13th of May, 1846, and 23,556 sent to Mexico, which exceeds the number joined as reported on the rolls and returns, many of which are wanting. (See the table "remarks," paragraph 5.)

3. The statement shows that the regular force in Mexico, New Mexico, and California, was, in December, about 21,202; and since the 1st of January, 2,493 recruits have been sent to the army, which increases the regular troops in all Mexico, it is estimated, to about 23,695. The six companies stationed in the United States, (556,) and 1,200 recruits in depot and at rendezvous, (total 1,750,) carry up the regular army every where, on the rolls, to about 25,445.

4. Table B presents a detailed view of the number of officers and men of the regular army killed and wounded in battle, and died of wounds, from the first conflict of the reconnoitring party, under Captain Thornton, on the left bank of the Rio Grande, April 25, 1846, to the close of the campaign of 1847, in which the battles, and the regiments and corps engaged, are specified.

CASUALTIES.

5. Old establishment: Discharges, by expiration of service, 1,435; for disability, 887; by order and civil authority, 253: total, 2,575.

Deaths: Killed in battle, 45 officers, 434 men; died of wounds, 19 officers, 331 men: total killed and died of wounds, 64 officers, 765 men; ordinary deaths, 44 officers, 1,787 men: total deaths, 108 officers, 2,552 men. Aggregate, 2,660.

Wounded: In battle, 130 officers, 1,799 men: aggregate, 1,929.

Resignations: 32, in 1846 and 1847.

Desertions: 1,637, of which 9 are marines.

6. Additional regiments: Discharges, by expiration of service, 2; for disability, 248; by order and civil authority, 56: total, 306.

Deaths: Killed in battle, 6 officers, 62 men; died of wounds, 4 officers, 71 men: total killed and died of wounds, 10 officers, 133 men; ordinary deaths, 28 officers, 977 men: total deaths, 38 officers, 1,110 men: aggregate, 1,148.

Wounded: In battle, 41 officers, 427 men: aggregate, 468.

Resignations, 76; desertions, 445.

THE VOLUNTEER SERVICE.

7. Statement C exhibits in detail, by States, regiments, and corps, the whole number of volunteers mustered into the service from May, 1846; of which 15,911 are mounted men, 1,164 artillery, and 54,234 infantry, making an aggregate of 71,309, including 3,087 commissioned officers. From this number, it is proper to deduct the force not called out by authority of the War Department, nor called out under the act of May 13, 1846, and also the number mustered, but soon after discharged, as supernumerary. This class is embraced in the three and six months' men, and two regiments of twelve months' men from Ohio and Missouri, and one company from Iowa, amounting to 14,383; of which 2,774 were discharged a few days after being mustered into service, (except the company,) not being required to proceed to the seat of war. Deducting this class of volunteers from the aggregate mustered and paid, (71,309,) the force enrolled under the act of May 13, 1846, and under the 5th section of the act of March 3, 1847, which authorizes the President to accept the services of "individual volunteers" to fill vacancies, &c., is about 56,926 officers and men. But this number was further reduced by discharges, &c., before the battalions had left the United States; and it is probable that the number exceeded but little, if any, 50,000 men, when put en route for the army.

8. So far as can be ascertained from the latest returns received, it appears that the volunteer force for the war and for 12 months, (2,017,) now employed in Mexico, New Mexico, and California,

(25,260,) and the eleven companies (1,082) within the limits of the United States, the sick included, amounts to 1,456 officers and 24,886 men; aggregate, 26,342, being 7,589 less than the number of the same regiments and companies (war men) when first mustered into service. But this difference does not show the actual loss; first, because the greater number of the individual volunteers enrolled, (i. e., recruited,) among which there is much loss, had not joined their regiments at the date of the last returns, and were not of course taken up on the rolls, but they are included in the table, in the aggregate "received into service." And second, the casualties, i .e., discharges and deaths, (ordinary,) exhibited in the statement, must be considerably under the actual number, owing to the missing muster rolls yet due from many of the regiments, from which the information alone can be obtained.

9. Table D presents a detailed view of the volunteer officers and men killed and wounded in battle, and died of wounds, in which the several battles, the regiments engaged, and the States where raised, are specified, and may be regarded as supplemental to statement C, as table B is to statement A, with respect to the regular forces.

The following general statement presents a condensed view of the various objects of inquiry respecting the volunteer forces, seen in detail in the tabular statement C.

10. Three months' men: The strength when mustered into service was 1,390; and when discharged 1,269, being a loss of 121.

Discharges before the expiration of the term, 82, of which 3 were for disability.

Deaths, 18; ordinary, 8; killed in battle and died of wounds, 10.

Desertions, 22.

11. Six months' men, (but held only for three months, the legal term:) Strength when mustered into service, 11,150, and when discharged, 9,559; loss, 1,591.

Discharges, before the expiration of the term, 826, of which 370 were for disability.

Deaths, 127; ordinary, 107; killed in battle and died of wounds, 6; accidental, 14; desertions, 524.

12. Twelve months' men: Strength when mustered into service, 26,344, and when discharged, 18,724; loss, 7,620, (including loss or difference between original and present strength of 21 companies twelve months' men still in service, 2,017 strong at the last returns.)

Discharges, before the expiration of the term, 4,391; of which, 3,966 were for disability.

Deaths, 2,111; ordinary, 1,633; killed in battle, and died of wounds, 423; accidental, 55.

Desertions, 568.

13. Volunteers for the war.—There are now 31 regiments (or equal to as many) and 4 companies in service—the aggregate strength of which, when mustered under calls from the War Department, respectively dated June 26, 1846, (1 regiment,) November 16, 1846, (equal to 8 regiments and 5 companies,) April 19, 1847, (equal to 7 regiments and 2 companies,) August 26, 1847,

(5 regiments,) October 8, 1847, (2 regiments,) and at various other dates, (equal to 7 regiments and 7 companies,) was 31,914, being 2,626 less than if all the regiments and companies had been full, as authorized by law. Strength at the last returns—officers, 1,357; men, 22,968; aggregate, 24,325—reduced, by this date, probably, to less than 20,000.

Discharges, 1,339; of which, 1,084 were for disability.

Deaths, 1,691, to wit: ordinary, 1,481; killed in battle, and died of wounds, 171; accidental, 39.

Desertions, 1,770.

14. The casualties incident to the whole number of volunteers, under various periods of service, so far as can be ascertained from the rolls received, are as follows, viz:

Discharges, before the expiration of the term, 6,638; of which, 5,423 were for disability.

Deaths, 3,947, to wit: ordinary, 3,229; killed in battle, 47 officers and 419 men; died of wounds, 164, officers and men, as far as now ascertained; accidental, 108.

Wounded, 129 officers, 1,217 men.

Resignations, 275.

Desertions, 2,884.

15. Table E presents a detailed statement of the volunteers on the rolls for service in Mexico, New Mexico, and California, including eleven companies (1,082) within the United States, according to the latest returns, to wit: 5,527 horse, 297 artillery, 20,518 infantry—making a total of 24,886 men, and 1,456 commissioned officers—aggregate, 26,342; of which, 2,017 are twelve months volunteers. This view includes absent men recruited under the law of 1847, many of whom will never join; and, as is already remarked, it is believed that the actual strength of regiments and companies in the field does not exceed 20,000 men, including a numerous invalid list. The forces called out by regiments, and separate or independent companies, and now in service, equal 33 regiments and 1 battalion, and require not less than 15,000 men to complete the establishment.

16. General and staff officers provided for the volunteer troops.—The number of general and staff officers appointed for the volunteer forces, under the acts of July 5, 1838, June 18 and June 26, 1846, is 289; of which number, 11 are generals, 26 majors, 104 captains, 124 surgeons and assistant surgeons, and 24 additional paymasters. Thirty-seven of the persons appointed declined acceptance, 47 were discharged as supernumeraries, 44 resigned, 18 appointed in other corps, 15 died, and 128 are now in service.

* In the reports of the deaths of volunteers, of ordinary disease, officers are not discriminated.

18. The numbers reported under the heads "wounded" and "died of wounds," in each particular battle or affair, (tables B and D,) although correct as exhibited in the field reports of the generals forwarded immediately after the action, are liable to correction in the regimental returns and company rolls subsequently made up and forwarded to the department; thus, many reported in the first despatches as being "wounded," die of their wounds, perhaps, weeks after the action, and are so noted by the colonels and captains. This apparent discrepancy ought not to affect the aggregates; for, although the details of results vary at the different dates, both may have been correct. It is also proper to state that the discharges on account of disease or disability, and the number of ordinary deaths reported to the War Department, and exhibited in the table, must be much less than the actual numbers, inclusive of December 31, 1847, owing to the missing muster rolls and returns, and the failure of many of the special reports enjoined by the regulations, but not received from many of the commanders of regiments and posts; from which sources such precise information must, in part, be derived. When the casualties under these heads, during the first three months of 1848, shall have been reported, the losses will greatly exceed the number now exhibited.

19. It appears, from the latest returns and reports, that the whole land forces borne on the rolls, at home and in Mexico, may be computed as follows: Regular army about 25,445; volunteer troops, 26,470, (but supposed at this time not to exceed 20,000 men)—making an aggregate force of 51,915. But, I should remark, it would not be safe to count upon more than 45,000 men, and still less in the field, efficient for service.

This report has been delayed greatly beyond the period usually necessary to respond to any call for information derivable from the records of the Adjutant General's Office. But it has been unavoidable, and no time has been lost in careful and diligent examination of the multifarious rolls and returns, by the most experienced officers and clerks, for such results as were needful to answer the resolutions in the manner supposed to be the best and most satisfactory. Besides the continued pressure of other indispensable business of the office, a chief cause of delay in furnishing information of this description, is the exceedingly defective accountability of the personnel of the army in campaign, by regiments, corps, &c., enjoined by the 13th and 19th articles of war, and the general regulations, which I had occasion to mention in my annual report of November 30, 1847.* At the date of the Senate's resolution, but few of the returns had reached the Adjutant General's Office, and the greater part were not received until more than a month after.

Respectfully submitted.

R. JONES,
Adjutant General U. S. Army.

---

* It was stated that "the required returns, &c., have not been received from more than nine-tenths of the regiments (regulars and volunteers) for more than six months; and hence it is not practicable at this time to furnish the annual 'general return of the army' (or actual state) in the usual tabular form," &c.

Remarks accompanying statement A.

1. In this statement, (taken from the muster rolls and regimental returns,) due allowance must be made for the failure on the part of inexperienced officers, chiefly of the new regiments, to report all the casualties incident to the service, as well as for the failure of many of the rolls and returns, some of which, it is supposed, have been cut off by the enemy.

2. The view of the "army in Mexico, December 31, 1847, (2,) is an aggregate of all the regular troops in Mexico, New Mexico, and California, derived from the latest returns and rolls received, (some go back to October,) and is as accurate as the present sources of information will admit.

3. The statement of casualties in the old regiments commences with the breaking out of hostilities in April, 1846; that of the new regiments commences in March and April, 1847, during which months they began to be organized. The actual loss under the heads of "number discharged" and "ordinary deaths," is probably greater than exhibited in the statement, as the missing muster rolls due from many of the regiments from which the information can only be obtained will show, when received.

4. The number of recruits includes all who have been enlisted since May 1, 1846, to December 31, 1847, of whom 312 were assigned to companies stationed within the United States. Some were retained at the several rendezvous and depots of instruction, &c., 79 died, 792 rejected and discharged, and 1,806 deserted before being assigned to regiments. These losses are not included in the casualties exhibited in the table.

5. It is known that a large number of recruits which arrived at Vera Cruz and other places in Mexico, have never joined any regiment, and probably never will be properly accounted for. Among the numerous detachments put en route for the interior, many were killed or left sick and died en route and in hospital, and did not join their regiment. It is also known that several hundred recruits have been organized as separate companies, and not been incorporated with any regiment. From these various causes, probably not less than 1.500 recruits sent to Mexico, have never been reported in any general return received from the army, &c.

6. The numbers reported under the heads "died of wounds" and "wounded," in this statement, (A,) do not agree with the like casualties exhibited in the field reports of the commanders, forwarded immediately after the battles, which are liable to correction when subsequently reported in regimental returns and company rolls; thus, many reported in the first instance as "wounded," die of their wounds perhaps weeks after the action; and although the numbers vary at the different dates, they both may be correct. The aggregates ought to agree, but this cannot be the result now, because so many of the intermediate rolls and returns are missing.

Respectfully submitted.

R. JONES,
Adjutant General, U. S. army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Adjutant General's office, Washington, April 5, 1848.

Hon. W. L. MARCY, Secretary of War.

NOTES.

The number reported under the heads "wounded" and "died of wounds," (statements B and D,) showing the losses in each particular battle or affair, although correct as exhibited in the field reports of the commanders forwarded immediately after the action, are often liable to correction when subsequently reported in the regimental returns and company rolls: thus, many reported in the first despatches as being "wounded," die of their wounds perhaps weeks after the action, &c. This apparent discrepancy ought not to affect the aggregates, for, although the numbers vary at the different dates, both may be correct; but the results under these heads in the several statements do not agree, because so many of the intermediate muster rolls and returns are missing, &c.

THIRTIETH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

Ex. Doc. No 59.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE SECRETARY OF WAR AND GENERAL SCOTT.

MESSAGE

OF THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

The correspondence between the Secretary of War and Major General Scott, with the accompanying documents, in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th instant.

April 26, 1848.

Laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I communicate, herewith, a report of the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, submitted by him as embracing the papers and the correspondence between the Secretary of War and Major General Scott, called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th instant.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, April 25, 1848.

War Department, April 24, 1848.

Sir: Pursuant to your request, I herewith submit to you copies of all the correspondence and papers called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 17th instant. Among the papers herewith, are copies of the "memoranda," or projéts, of the 27th of October, and 12th, 16th, and the 21st of November, 1846. Though presented to, or laid before, the Secretary of War by Major General Scott while in this city, they were not considered as a part of the "correspondence" between them, and, consequently, were not embraced in the former resolution of the House. There being no "letters or despatches" of these dates, it is presumed that the last resolution has reference to these memoranda, or "memorials," as they are called in the accompanying letter from Major General Scott, of February 24, 1848, and are furnished together with the correspondence. In addition to these, I have also included a few other memoranda presented by him to me since the commencement of the war, being all of that character in this office. I have not included in these memoranda endorsements by Major General Scott on letters which passed through his hands, directed or referred to the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To the President
Of the United States.

Mexico, February 24, 1848.

Sir: On the 18th instant, I received your two letters, of the 13th ultimo, and, immediately issued the general order, No. 59, (a copy enclosed,) devolving the command of the army in Mexico upon Major General Butler.

As the officers detailed for the court of enquiry before which I am ordered to appear as a criminal, are not known to have arrived in the country, I avail myself of a moment's leisure to recall some of the neglects, disappointments, injuries and rebukes, which have been inflicted upon me by the War Department, since my departure from Washington, November 23, 1846.

To me, the business of re-crimination, however provoked, has ever been painful. In this summary I shall, therefore, indulge in no wantonness of language, but confine myself to naked historical facts, leaving conclusions to men of sense and candor.

In the hurry of preparation for Mexico, (only four days were allowed me at Washington—when twenty might have been most advantageously employed in the great bureaux—those of the chief engineers, chief of ordnance, chief quartermasters and chief commissary of subsistence,) I handed to you a written request that one of three of our accomplished captains, therein named, might be appointed assistant adjutant general, with the rank of major, for duty with me in the field, and there was a vacancy, at the time, for one. My request has never been attended to, and thus I have had no officer of the adjutant general's department with me in the campaign. Can another instance be cited of denying to a general-in-chief, in the field, at the head of a large army, or even a small one, the selection of his chief of the staff—that is, the chief in the department of orders and correspondence?

Early in the following January, I asked that a general court martial might be appointed, on the part of the President, for the trial of two officers (named by me) for conduct each had committed, that endangered, in a high degree, the success of the impending campaign; and I specially referred to the anomalous and fatal act of Congress, (May 29, 1830,) which prohibited me, as the "accuser or prosecutor," from ordering the court for the trial of the cases.

My application has never been noticed. This neglect alone ought early to have admonished me that I had no hope of support at Washington, in any attempt I might make (against certain officers) to maintain necessary discipline in the army I was about to lead into the field.

I left Washington highly flattered with the confidence and kindness the President had just shown me, in many long personal interviews on military matters. For more than two months my expressions of gratitude were daily and fervent, nor were they much less emphatic towards the head of the War Department. Proceeding with zeal and confidence in my most hazardous duties, I learned, January 27, at the Brazos San Jago, that an attempt was on foot to create a lieutenant general to take command in the field over me. Shocked and distressed, I allowed of no relaxation in my efforts to serve my country, resolved that, for the short time I was likely to remain in commission, to be > "True as the dial to the sun,

> Altho' it be not shined upon."

A yet greater outrage soon followed: failing to obtain an act for the citizen lieutenant general, a bill was pressed upon Congress to authorize the placing a junior major general, just appointed, (the same individual,) in command over all the old major generals then in front of the enemy!

I will not here trust myself to add a soldier's comment upon those attempts, but I may thank God that He did not allow them, or subsequent injuries, to break down, entirely, the spirit and abilities (such as they are) with which He had endowed me.

Foreseeing at Washington that, from the great demands of commerce at the moment, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to take up, perhaps at any price, a sufficient number of vessels at New Orleans and Mobile to transport the regiments of my expedition from the Rio Grande frontier to Vera Cruz, I endeavored to impress upon the War Department the necessity of sending out from the northern and eastern ports a certain number of large ships in ballast, in order that the expedition might not be delayed, and in view of "the fixed fact," the return of the vomito at Vera Cruz in the spring of the year, a delay of a few weeks was likely to prove a total defeat.

In a paper transmitted to me, headed "memorandum for the quartermaster general," marked "War Department, December 15, 1846," and signed by the secretary, which I received January 8, it is said: "Independently of this number of transports for troops and ordnance stores, [from the north] there will be required, say, five ships for the transportation of the [surf] boats now being prepared, besides which, ten vessels must be taken up and sent out in ballast, [for troops] unless stores can be put on board, to make up the number (40) required by the commanding general."

The date of this memorandum is December 15, more than three weeks after my requisition and departure from Washington. Of not one of the "ten vessels," in ballast, or with stores, (leaving room for troops,) have I heard up to this day. Relying upon them, confidently, the embarkation was delayed in whole or in part, at the Brazos and Tampico, from the 15th of January to the 9th of March, leaving, it was feared, not half the time needed for the reduction of Vera Cruz and its castle before the return of the yellow fever. But half the surf boats came at all, and of the seige train and ordnance stores, only about one-half had arrived when the Mexican flags were replaced by those of the United States on those formidable places. We succeeded at last in reaching the point of attack, in the midst of frightful northers, by means, in great part, of trading craft, small and hazardous, picked up accidently at the Brazos and Tampico, and when the army got ashore, its science and valor had to supply all deficiencies in heavy guns, mortars, and ordnance stores.

The first letter that I received from the department, after entering the captured city, contained an elaborate rebuke, (dated February 22,) for having ordered Colonel Harney, 2d dragoons, to remain in the command of the cavalry with Major General Taylor, so as to leave Major Sumner, of the same regiment, the senior of that arm, in my expedition. There was no great difference in the number of cavalry companies with the two armies.

This rebuke was written with a complacency that argued the highest professional experience in such matters, and could not have been more confident in its tone if dictated to the greenest general of the recent appointments. Yet, without the power of selecting commanders of particular corps, no general-in-chief would venture to take upon himself the conduct of a critical campaign. Such selections were always made by the father of his country, and the principal generals under him. So in the campaign of 1814, I myself sent away, against their wishes, three senior field officers, of as many regiments, who were infirm, uninstructed, and inefficient, in favor of three juniors, and with the subsequent approbation of Major General Brown, on his joining me, and the head of the War Department. Both were well acquainted with the customs of war, in like cases, at home and abroad, and without that energy on my part, it is highly probable that no American citizen would ever have cited the battles of the Niagara without a sigh for his country. I am happy, however, that before a word had been received from the department, and indeed before it could have had any knowledge of the question, I had decided to take with me the frank and gallant colonel, and hope soon to learn that he and very many other officers have been rewarded with brevets for their highly distinguished services in the campaign that followed.

It was in reference to the same rebuke that, in acknowledging your communication, I said, from Vera Cruz, April 5. "I might very well controvert the military principles so confidently laid down by the department, [in the letter of the 22d February,] but believing that the practice of the United States army, in the two wars with Great Britain, would have no weight in the particular case, I waive further reply; having, at the moment, no leisure and no inclination for controversy."

Alluding to the heavy disappointments, in respect to transports, seige train, and ordnance stores, then already experienced, I wrote to the department from Lobos, February 28: "Perhaps no expedition was ever so unaccountably delayed—by no want of foresight, arrangement, or energy on my part, as I dare affirm—and under circumstances the most critical to this entire army; for every body relied upon and knew, from the first, as well as I knew, it would be fatal to us to attempt military operations on this coast after, probably, the first week in April; and here we are at the end of February. Nevertheless this army is in heart; and crippled as I am in the means required and promised, I shall go forward, and expect to take Vera Cruz and its castle in time to escape, by pursuing the enemy, the pestilence of the coast."

The city and castle were captured March 29, and, with about one-fourth of the necessary means for a road train, (no fault of mine,) the retreat, in pursuit of the enemy, was vigorously commenced April 8. The battle of Cerro Gordo soon followed, and we occupied Jalapa and Perote, where we were obliged to wait for supplies from Vera Cruz. In those positions I was made to writhe under another cruel disappointment.

In my four memorials, to the department, on the further prosecution of the war against Mexico, written at Washington, and dated, respectively, October 27, November 12, 16, and 21, (it was only intimated to me in the night of November 18, that I might prepare myself for the field,) papers in which I demonstrated that Vera Cruz was the true base of operations, and that the enemy's capital could not, probably, be reached from the Rio Grande, I estimated that after taking that great seaport, "about 20,000 men," or "an army of more than 20,000 men may be needed; 1. To beat, in the field and in passes, any accumulated force in the way; 2. To garrison many important points in the rear, to secure a free communication with Vera Cruz; and 3. To make distant detachments, in order to gather in, without long halts, necessary subsistence." And that force, I supposed, including volunteers, and aided by land and money bounties, might be raised in time by adding ten or twelve new regiments of regulars, and filling up the ranks of the old.

A bill was introduced for raising ten additional regular regiments, and I certainly do not mean to charge the department with the whole delay in passing the bill through Congress. But it was passed, February 11, 1847, and under it, by early in April, some few thousand men had been already raised and organized. My distress may be conceived, by any soldier, on learning at Jalapa, April 27th, that the whole of that force had been sent, under Brigadier General Cadwalader, to the Rio Grande frontier.

In my letter to the department, written the day after, I said, I had expected that "detachments of the new regiments, would, as you had promised me, begin to arrive in this month, and continue to follow perhaps into June." "How many (volunteers) will re-engage under the act approved March 3, (only received two days ago,) I know not; probably but few. Hence, the greater my disappointment caused by sending the new troops to the Rio Grande; for, besides their keeping the road in our present rear open for many weeks, by marches in successive detachments, I had intended, as I advanced, to leave strong garrisons in this place, [Jalapa,] in Perote, and Puebla, and to keep at the head of the movement, a force equal to any probable opposition. It may now depend on the number of the old volunteers who may re-engage, and the number of new troops that may arrive from the Brazos, in time; as also, in some degree, upon the advance of Major General Taylor, whether I shall find this army in strength to leave the garrisons and to occupy the capital."

I may add, that only about fifty individuals of the old volunteers re-engaged under the provisions of the act of March 3; that the remainder were discharged May 4; that Major General Taylor made no movement in advance of Saltillo, and that the new regulars, including Cadwalader's brigade, only began to come up with me, at Puebla, in July, but not in sufficient numbers till August 6. The next day the army commenced its advance upon the capital with a little more than 10,000 effective men.

It is not extravagant to say that, if Brigadier General Cadwalader's forces had not been diverted from me, to the Rio Grande, where he was made to lose, without any benefit to Major General Taylor, much precious time, I might easily have taken this city in the month of June, and at one-fifth of the loss sustained in August and September. The enemy availed himself of my forced delay, at Puebla, to collect, to treble, to organize, and discipline his forces, as also to erect numerous and powerful defences with batteries. Nearly all those extraordinary preparations, for our reception, were made after the middle of June. And it is known that the news of the victory of Buena Vista reached Washington in time to countermand Cadwalader's orders for the Rio Grande, before his departure from New Orleans. Two rifle companies with him received the countermand there and joined me early.

I know that I had the misfortune to give offence to the department by expressing myself to the same effect, from Jalapa, May 6. In a report of that date, I said:

" The subject of that order (No. 135—old volunteers) has given me long and deep solicitude. To part with so large and so respectable a portion of this army in the middle of a country, which, though broken in its power, is not yet disposed to sue for peace; to provide for the return home of seven regiments, from this interior position, at a time when I find it quite difficult to provide transportation and supplies for the operating forces which remain; and all this without any prospect of succor or reinforcement, in perhaps, the next seven months—beyond some 300 army recruits—present novelties utterly unknown to any invading army before. With the addition of ten or twelve thousand new levies in April and May—asked for, and, until very recently, expected—or even with the addition of two or three thousand new troops, destined for this army, but suddenly, by the orders of the War Department, diverted to the Rio Grande frontier, I might, notwithstanding the unavoidable discharge of the old volunteers—seven regiments and two independent companies—advance with confidence upon the enemy's capital. I shall nevertheless advance; but whether beyond Puebla, will depend on intervening information and reflection. The general panic given to the enemy, at Cerro Gordo, still remaining, I think it probable that we shall go to Mexico, or, if the enemy recover from that, we must renew the consternation by another blow."

Thus, like Cortez, finding myself isolated and abandoned, and again like him, always afraid that the next ship or messenger might recall or farther cripple me, I resolved no longer to depend on Vera Cruz or home, but to render my little army "a self-sustaining machine"—as I informed everybody, including the head of the War Department—and advanced to Puebla.

It was in reference to the foregoing serious causes of complaint and others to be found in my reports at large—particularly in respect to money for the disbursing staff officers, clothing, and Mr. Trist, commissioner—that I concluded my report from Puebla, June 4, in these words:

"Considering the many cruel disappointments and mortification I have been made to feel since I left Washington, and the total want of support or sympathy on the part of the War Department, which I have so long experienced, I beg to be recalled from this army the moment it may be safe for any person to embark at Vera Cruz; which, I suppose, will be early in November. Probably all field operations will be over long before that time."

But my next report (July 25th) from Puebla, has, no doubt, in the end, been deemed more unpardonable by the department. In that paper, after speaking of the "happy change in my relations, both official and private, with Mr. Trist," I continued:

"Since about the 26th ultimo, [June,] our intercourse has been frequent and cordial, and I found him [Mr. T.] able, discreet, courteous, and amiable. At home, it so chanced, that we had had but the slightest possible acquaintance with each other. Hence, more or less of reciprocal prejudice, and of the existence of his feelings towards me, I knew (by private letters) before we met, that at least a part of the cabinet had a full intimation.

"Still, the pronounced misunderstanding between Mr. Trist and myself could not have occurred, but for other circumstances: 1. His being obliged to send forward your letter of Aprill 14th, instead of delivering it in person, with the explanatory papers which he desired to communicate; 2. His bad health in May and June, which, I am happy to say has now become good; and 3. The extreme mystification into which your letter—and particularly an interlineation—unavoidably threw me.

"So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that all I have heretofore written to the department about Mr. Trist, should be suppressed. I make this declaration as due to my present esteem for that gentlemen; but ask no favor, and desire none, at the hands of the department. Justice to myself, however tardy, I shall take care to have done. * * * * * *

"I do not acknowledge the justice of either of your rebukes contained in the letter of May 31, [in relation to Mr. Trist and the prisoners at Cerro Gordo,] and that I do not here triumphantly vindicate myself, is not from the want of will, means, or ability, but time.

"The first letter (dated February 22) received from you at Vera Cruz, contained a censure, and I am now rebuked for the unavoidable—nay, wise, if it had not been unavoidable—release on parole of the prisoners taken at Cerro Gordo; even before one word of commendation from government has reached this army on account of its gallant conduct in the capture of those prisoners. [No such commendation has yet been received, February, 1848.] So, in regular progression, I may—should the same army gallantly bear me into the city of Mexico, in the next six or seven weeks, which is probable, if we are not arrested by a peace or a truce—look to be dismissed from the service of my country! You will perceive that I am aware (as I have long been) of the dangers which hang over me at home; but I, too, am a citizen of the United States, and well know the obligations imposed, under all circumstances, by an enlightened patriotism.

"In respect to money, I beg again to report that the chief commissary (Captain Grayson) of this army has not received a dollar from the United States, since we landed at Vera Cruz, March 9. He now owes more than $200,000, and is obliged to purchase, on credit, at great disadvantages. The chief quartermaster (Captain Irwin) has received perhaps $60,000 dollars, and labors under like incumbrances. Both have sold drafts to small amounts, and borrowed largely of the pay department, which has received about half the money estimated for. Consequently the troops have some four months' pay due them. Our poverty, or the neglect of the disbursing departments at home, has been made known, to our shame, in the papers of the capital here, through a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Hunt, that was found on the person of the special messenger from Washington.

"The army is also suffering greatly from the want of necessary clothing, including blankets and great-coats. The new troops, (those who have last arrived,) as destitute as the others, were first told that they would find abundant supplies at New Orleans; next, at Vera Cruz, and finally here; whereas, we now have, perhaps, a thousand hands engaged in making shoes and (out of bad materials and at high cost) pantaloons. These articles, about 3,000 pairs of each, are absolutely necessary to cover the nakedness of the troops.

"February 28th, off Lobos, I wrote to Brigadier General Brooke, to direct the quartermaster at New Orleans to send to me large supplies of clothing. March 16 and 23, General Brooke replied that the quartermaster at New Orleans, had 'neither clothing nor shoes,' and that he was 'fearful that unless they have been sent out to you direct, you will be much disappointed.'

"Some small quantity of clothing, perhaps one-fifth of our wants, came to Vera Cruz, from some quarter, and followed us to Jalapa and this place."

I must here specially remark, that this report, No. 30, though forwarded the night of its date, (July 25,) seems to have miscarried. Perceiving, about November 27, that it was not acknowledged by the department, I caused a duplicate to be made, signed it, and sent it off by the same conveyance with my despatch No. 36, and the charges against Brevet Major General Worth, Major General Pillow, and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Duncan, together with the appeal against me, of the former. All these papers are acknowledged by the department in the same letter, January 13, that recalls me.

It was that budget of papers that caused the blow of power, so long suspended, to fall on a devoted head. The three arrested officers, and he who had endeavored to enforce a necessary discipline against them, are all to be placed together before the same court. The innocent and the guilty, the accuser and the accused, the judge and his prisoners, are dealt with alike. Most impartial justice! But there is a discrimination with a vengeance! While the parties are on trial—if the appealer is to be tried at all, which seems doubtful—two are restored to their corps—one of them with his brevet rank, and I am deprived of my command. There can be but one step more in the same direction; throw the rules and articles of war into the fire, and leave all ranks in the army free to engage in denunciations, and a general scramble for precedence, authority, and executive favor. The pronunciamento, on the part of my factious juniors, is most triumphant.

My recall—under the circumstances a severe punishment before trial, but to be followed by a trial here that may run into the autumn, and on matters I am but partially permitted to know by the department and my accusers—is very ingeniously placed on two grounds: 1. My own request, meaning that of June 4, (quoted above, and there was no other before the department,) which had been previously (July 12) acknowledged and rebukingly declined. 2. The arrest of Brevet Major General Worth, for writing to the department, "under the pretext and form of an appeal," an open letter, to be sent through me, in which I was grossly and falsely accused of "malice" and "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman," in the matter of the general order, No. 349, on the subject of puffing letters for the newspapers at home.

On that second point, the letter from the department of January 13 is more than ingenious; it is elaborate, subtle, and profound; a professional dissertation, with the rare merit of teaching principles, until now, wholly unknown to military codes and treatises, and of course to all mere soldiers, however great their experience in the field.

I have not, in this place, time to do more than hint at the fatal consequences of the novel doctrine in question. According to the department, any factious junior may, at his pleasure, in the midst of the enemy, using "the pretext and form of an appeal" against his commander, insult and outrage him to the grossest extent, though he be the general-in-chief, and charged with the conduct of the most critical operations, and that commander may not arrest the incipient mutineer until he shall have first laid down his own authority, and submitted himself to a trial, or wait, at least, until a distant period of leisure for a judicial examination of the appeal! And this is precisely the case under consideration. The department, in its eagerness to condemn me, could not take time to learn of the experienced that the general-in-chief who once submits to an outrage from a junior, must lay his account to suffer the like from all the vicious under him; at least, down to a rank that may be supposed without influence in high quarters beyond the army. But this would not be the whole mischief to the public service. Even the great mass of the spirited, intelligent, and well affected, among his brothers in arms, would soon reduce such commander to utter imbecility, by holding him in just scorn and contempt for his recreancy to himself and country. And are discipline and efficiency of no value in the field?

But it was not my request of June 4, nor report No. 30, (of July 25,) so largely quoted from above, nor yet the appeal of one pronunciado, that has at length brought down upon me this visitation, so clearly predicted. That appeal, no doubt, had its merits, considering it came from an erratic brother—a deserter from the other extreme—who, having just made his peace with the true faith, was bound to signalize apostacy by acceptable denunciations of one for whom, up to Vera Cruz, he had professed (and not without cause) the highest obligations. (It was there he learned from me that I was doomed at Washington, and straightway the apostate began to seek, through a quarrel, the means of turning that knowledge to his own benefit.) No, there was (recently) still another element associated in the work, kept, as far as practicable, out of the letter of recall; an influence proceeding from the other arrested general, who is quite willing that it should generally be understood (and who shall gainsay his significant acquiescence?) that all rewards and punishments in this army were, from the first, to follow his recommendations. This the more powerful of the pronunciados against No. 349 well knew, at the time, as I soon knew that he was justly obnoxious not only to the animadversions of that order, but to other censures of yet a much graver character.

In respect to this general, the letter of recall observes, parenthetically, but with an acumen worthy of more than "a hasty" notice, that some of my specifications of his misconduct "are hardly consistent with your [my] official reports and commendations."

Seemingly this is a most just rebuke. But, waiting for the trials, I will here briefly state, that unfortunately I followed that general's own reports, written and oral; that my confidence, lent him in advance, had been but very slightly shaken as early as the first week in October; that up to that time, from our entrance into this city, I had been at the desk, shut out from personal intercourse with my brother officers, and that it was not till after that confinement that facts, conduct, and motives, began to pour in upon me.

A word as to the 5th article of war. I can truly say that in this and other communications, I have not designed the slightest disrespect to the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States. No doubt he, like myself and all others, may fall into mistakes as to particular men; and I cannot, having myself been behind the curtain, admit the legal fiction that all acts of a secretary are the acts of the President. Yet, in my defensive statements, I have offered no wanton discourtesy to the head of the War Department, although that functionary is not in the enumeration of the above mentioned article.

Closing my correspondence with the department until after the approaching trial,

I have the honor to remain, respectfully, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

The Secretary of War to General Scott.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 21, 1848.

SIR: It would not be respectful to you to pass unnoticed your extraordinary letter of the 24th of February, nor just to myself to permit it to remain unanswered on the files of this department.

To attempt to dispel the delusions which you seem to have long pertinaciously cherished, and to correct the errors into which you have fallen, devolves upon me a duty which I must not decline; but in performing it I mean to be as cautious as you profess to have been, to abstain from any "wanton discourtesy," and I hope to be alike successful. Your prudent respect for the "5th article of war" has induced you to hold me ostensibly responsible for many things which, you are aware, are not fairly chargeable to me. The device you have adopted to assail the President, by aiming your blows at the Secretary of War, does more credit to your ingenuity as an accuser, than to your character as a soldier. A premeditated contrivance to avoid responsibility does not indicate an intention not to do wrong.

The general aspect of your letter discloses an evident design to create a belief that you were drawn forth from your quiet position in a bureau of this department, and assigned to the command of our armies in Mexico, for the purpose of being sacrificed; and that, to accomplish this end, "neglects, disappointments, injuries, and rebukes" were "inflicted" on you, and the necessary means of prosecuting the war with success withheld; or, in other words, that the government, after preferring you to any other of the gallant generals within the range of its choice, had labored to frustrate its own plans, to bring defeat upon its own armies, and involve itself in ruin and disgrace, for an object so unimportant in its bearing upon public affairs. A charge so entirely preposterous, so utterly repugnant to all the probabilities of human conduct, calls for no refutation.

For other purposes than to combat this fondly cherished chimera, it is proper that I should notice some of your specific allegations.

It is true that, after you were designated for the chief command of our armies, the President was desirous that your departure should not be unnecessarily delayed, but you were not restricted, as you allege, to "only four days," to make the necessary preparations at Washington. You were not ordered away until you had reported that these preparations were so far completed, that your presence here was no longer required. Then, instead of going directly to Mexico, you were permitted, at your own request, to take a circuitous route through New York, and there to remain a few days. You staid at New York nearly an entire week; and not until the 19th of December (twenty-six days after leaving Washington) did you reach New Orleans, where you would have arrived in seven days if you had been required to take the direct route. This solicited indulgence, by which your arrival at New Orleans was delayed nearly three weeks, is incompatible with your allegation that you were allowed "only four days at Washington, where twenty might have been most advantageously employed." This complaint has relation to facts within your own knowledge; error, therefore, is hardly reconcileable with any solicitude to be accurate. As this is your opening charge against the War Department, and may be regarded as indicative of those which follow, I shall make the refutation of it still more complete, for the purpose of showing with what recklessness you have performed the functions of an accuser, and how little reliance, in the present state of your feelings, can be placed on your memory. You are the witness by whom your allegation is to be disproved. On the day of your departure from Washington, you left with me a paper in your own handwriting, dated November 23d, 1846, with the following heading: "Notes, suggesting topics to be embraced in the Secretary's instructions to General S., drawn up (in haste) at the request of the former." From that paper I extract the following paragraph: "I [the Secretary of War] am pleased to learn from you [General Scott] that you have, in a very few days, already, through the general staff of the army here, laid a sufficient basis for the purposes with which you are charged, and that you now think it best to proceed at once to the southwest, in order to organize the largest number of troops that can be obtained in time for that most important expedition"—the expedition against Vera Cruz. Here is your own most explicit admission, that you represented to the Secretary of War, before leaving Washington, that arrangements were so far completed, that you thought it best to proceed at once to the army in Mexico, and yet you make it your opening charge against the Department, that you were forced away to Mexico before you had time for necessary preparations.

I present the next charge in your own language: "I handed to you a written request, that one of three of our accomplished captains, therein named, might be appointed assistant adjutant general, with the rank of major, for duty with me in the field, and there was a vacancy, at the time, for one. My request has never disrespect to the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States. WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington, April 21, 1848.

SIR: It would not be respectful to you to pass unnoticed your extraordinary letter of the 24th of February, nor just to myself to permit it to remain unanswered on the files of this department.

To attempt to dispel the delusions which you seem to have long pertinaciously cherished, and to correct the errors into which you have fallen, devolves upon me a duty which I must not decline; but in performing it I mean to be as cautious as you profess to have been, to abstain from any "wanton discourtesy," and I hope to be alike successful. The general aspect of your letter discloses an evident design to create a belief that you were drawn forth from your quiet position in a bureau of this department, and assigned to the command of our armies in Mexico, for the purpose of being sacrificed; and that, to accomplish this end, "neglects, disappointments, injuries, and rebukes" were "inflicted" on you, and the necessary means of prosecuting the war with success withheld; or, in other words, that the government, after preferring you to any other of the gallant generals within the range of its choice, had labored to frustrate its own plans, to bring defeat upon its own armies, and involve itself in ruin and disgrace, for an object so unimportant in its bearing upon public affairs. For other purposes than to combat this fondly cherished chimera, it is proper that I should notice some of your specific allegations.

It is true that, after you were designated for the chief command of our armies, the President was desirous that your departure should not be unnecessarily delayed, but you were not restricted, as you allege, to "only four days," to make the necessary preparations at Washington. You were not ordered away until you had reported that these preparations were so far completed, that your presence here was no longer required. This complaint has relation to facts within your own knowledge; error, therefore, is hardly reconcileable with any solicitude to be accurate. As this is your opening charge against the War Department, and may be regarded as indicative of those which follow, I shall make the refutation of it still more complete, for the purpose of showing with what recklessness you have performed the functions of an accuser, and how little reliance, in the present state of your feelings, can be placed on your memory. You are the witness by whom your allegation is to be disproved. On the day of your departure from Washington, you left with me a paper in your own handwriting, dated November 23d, 1846, with the following heading: "Notes, suggesting topics to be embraced in the Secretary's instructions to General S., drawn up (in haste) at the request of the former." From that paper I extract the following paragraph:

"I [the Secretary of War] am pleased to learn from you [General Scott] that you have, in a very few days, already, through the general staff of the army here, laid a sufficient basis for the purposes with which you are charged, and that you now think it best to proceed at once to the southwest, in order to organize the largest number of troops that can be obtained in time for that most important expedition"—the expedition against Vera Cruz. Here is your own most explicit admission, that you represented to the Secretary of War, before leaving Washington, that arrangements were so far completed, that you thought it best to proceed at once to the army in Mexico, and yet you make it your opening charge against the Department, that you were forced away to Mexico before you had time for necessary preparations.

I present the next charge in your own language: "I handed to you a written request, that one of three of our accomplished captains, therein named, might be appointed assistant adjutant general, with the rank of major, for duty with me in the field, and there was a vacancy, at the time, for one. My request has never been attended to; and thus I have had no officer of the adjutant general's department with me in the campaign. Can another instance be cited of denying to a general-in-chief, in the field, at the head of a large army, or even a small one, the selection of his chief of the staff—that is, the chief in the department of orders and correspondence?"

Were the case precisely as you have stated it to be, you have given too much prominence, as a matter of complaint, to the President's refusal to be controlled in the exercise of the appointing power by your wishes. Had there been a vacancy, such as you mention, for one of the "accomplished captains" you named, no one knows better than you do that your request could not have been acceded to, without departing from the uniform rule of selection for staff appointments—without violating the rights of several officers to regular promotion, and offering an indignity to all those who held the position of assistant adjutants general with the rank of captain. The rule of regular promotion in the staff is as inflexible, and has been as uniformly observed, as that in the line. It must appear surprising that you, who were so deeply "shocked and distressed" at the suggestion of appointing, by authority of Congress, a "citizen lieutenant general," or vesting the President with power to devolve the command of the army on a major general, without regard to priority in the date of his commission, should, in your first request after being assigned to command, ask the President to disregard the rights of, at least, four officers, as meritorious as the "three accomplished captains" named by you. The President's views on this subject undoubtedly differ from yours. His regard for the rights of officers is not graduated by their rank. Those of captains and major generals have equal value in his estimation, and an equal claim to his respect and protection. I cannot admit that it is a just ground of censure and rebuke against the "head of the War Department," that the President did not see fit, in order to gratify your feelings of favoritism, to disregard the claims, and violate the rights, of all the assistant adjutants general of the rank of captain then in commission.

But, so far as it is made a ground of complaint and reproof, this is not the worst aspect of the case. You are entirely mistaken in the assertion that there was then a vacancy in the adjutant general's staff, with the rank of major, to which either of the captains recommended by you could have been properly appointed. There was no such vacancy. To show the correctness of this statement, and to demonstrate your error, I appeal to the army register and the records of the adjutant general's office. Your mistake as to an obvious fact, lying within the range of matters with which you are presumed to be familiar, has excited less surprise than the declaration that, by the non-compliance with your request, you "have had no officer of the adjutant general's department with me [you] in the campaign." Every officer of that department, at least eight, were, as you well knew, subject to your command. When you arrived in Mexico there were with the army at least five assistant adjutants general, all at your service. That you chose to employ none of them at your head-quarters, and detached from other appropriate duties an officer to act as an assistant adjutant general, may well be regarded as a slight to the whole of that staff then with you in Mexico, and a cause of complaint; but certainly not a complaint to emanate from you against the War Department. Willing as I am to presume, though unable to conceive, that circumstances justified you in passing over all the assistant adjutants general then with the army, and in selecting an officer of the line to perform the duties of adjutant general at your head-quarters, I was much surprised to learn from you that, when General Worth sent to you one of these "accomplished captains," the first on your list, under the belief that you desired his services as an acting assistant adjutant general, you declined to employ him in that capacity; and I am still more surprised to perceive that you have made it a distinct ground of charge in your arraignment of the War Department, that you were not permitted to have him as an assistant adjutant general at your head-quarters. Had you selected him instead of another, as you might have done, you would have been bereft of all pretext for complaint. Though there was no vacancy in the adjutant general's staff of the grade of major, for which only you recommended the "accomplished captains," and to which only they were properly eligible, there was a vacancy in it of the rank of captain. For this position you recommended an officer in General Wool's staff, then on the Chihuahua expedition. This officer was subsequently appointed assistant adjutant general, with the rank of captain, as you desired, and has ever since been at the head-quarters of that general. Thus it will be perceived that your request, so far as it was proper and reasonable, was actually complied with.

The next specification in the catalogue of charges preferred against me is, that a court martial was not instituted by the President for the trial of General Marshall and Captain Montgomery on your charges against them. The offences imputed to them were certainly not of an aggravated character. The one, as was alleged, had been incautious in relation to a despatch, under circumstances that might admit of its coming to the knowledge of the enemy; and the other had not carried a despatch with as much expedition as you thought he might have done. As one was a general officer, a court to try him must have been composed of officers of high rank. Before the order for assembling it could have reached Mexico, it was foreseen that your command would be at Vera Cruz, and probably engaged in an active siege of that city. Officers could not, therefore, have been then sent from your column to Monterey or the Rio Grande, (where the court must have been held,) without great detriment to the public service. Had you been deprived of several officers of high rank, at that critical period, by the order of the President, it would have afforded a better pretence of complaint than any one in your extended catalogue. Had the court been composed of officers taken from General Taylor's command, it would have still further weakened his condition, already weak in consequence of the very large force you had withdrawn from him. Subsequent events have proved that it was most fortunate the President did not comply with your request, for had he done so, some of the officers highest in rank and most conspicuous at Buena Vista might, at that critical conjuncture, have been separated from their commands and engaged on a court at a distance from that glorious scene of action. It is not fanciful to suppose that their absence might have changed the fortune of that eventful day, and that, instead of rejoicing, as we now do, in a triumphant victory, among the most brilliant in the whole course of the war, we might have had to lament a most disastrous defeat, and the almost total loss of the whole force you had left to sustain that frontier.

No man has more reason than yourself to rejoice that no order emanated from Washington, though requested by you, which would have further impaired the efficiency of General Taylor's command in the crisis that then awaited him.

My letter of the 22d of February, conveying the President's views in regard to your order depriving Colonel Harney of his appropriate command, is severely arraigned by you as offensive, both in manner and matter.

The facts in relation to this case of alleged grievance are now before the public, and a brief allusion to them will place the transaction in its true light. Under your orders Colonel Harney had brought seven companies of his regiment, the 2d dragoons, from Monterey to the Brassos, to be under your immediate command; and two others, being all of the regiment in Mexico, were expected to follow within a few days. In the midst of his high hopes and ardent desire for active service, you took from him the command of his own regiment, devolved it on one of his junior officers, and ordered him back to General Taylor's line, to look for what was not inappropriately denominated "an imaginary command." Outraged in his feelings and injured in his rights, he respectfully remonstrated; his appeal to your sense of justice was unavailing. Neither to this gallant officer, nor to the President, did you assign any sufficient or even plausible reason for this extraordinary proceeding. The whole army, I believe, and the whole country, where the transaction became known, entertained but one opinion on the subject, and that was, that you had inflicted an injury and an outrage upon a brave and meritorious officer. Such an act, almost the first on your assuming command, boded disastrous consequences to the public service, and devolved upon the President the duty of interposing to protect the injured officer. This interposition you have made a grave matter of accusation against the head of the War Department, and have characterized it as a censure and a rebuke. It may imply both, and still, being merited, may leave you without a pretence for complaint. The President, after alluding to his duty to sustain the rights of the officers under your command, as well as your own rights, informed you that he did not discover in the case, as your had presented it, sufficient cause for such an order; that, in his opinion, Colonel Harney had a just cause to complain, and that he hoped the matter had been reconsidered by you, and the colonel restored to his appropriate command. Your own subsequent course in this case demonstrates the unreasonableness of your complaint, and vindicates the correctness of the President's proceedings. You had really rebuked and censured your own conduct, for even before you had received the President's views, you had, as he hoped you would, reconsidered the matter, become convinced of your error, reversed your own order, and restored Colonel Harney to his command; thus giving the strongest evidence in favor of the propriety and correctness of all the President had done in the case. I give you too much credit for steadiness of purpose, to suspect that you retraced your steps from mere caprice, or for any other cause than a conviction that you had fallen into error. After the matter had thus terminated, it appears unaccountable to me that you, who above all others should wish it to pass into oblivion, have again called attention to it by making it an item in your arraignment of the War Department.

You struggle in vain to vindicate your course in this case, by referring to your own acts in the campaign of 1814. You then sent away, as you allege, against their wishes, "three senior field officers, of as many regiments, who were infirm, uninstructed, and inefficient, in favor of three juniors, and with the subsequent 'approbation of Major General Brown and the head of the War Department." This precedent does not, in my judgment, change the aspect of the present case. Colonel Harney was not "infirm, uninstructed, and inefficient;" you did not assign, and in deference to the known opinion of the army and country, you did not venture to assign that reason for deposing him. I do not understand the force of your logical deduction, that, because you, on a former occasion, had deprived officers under you of their commands, for good and sufficient reasons, with subsequent approval, you may now, and at any time, do the same thing, without any reason whatever; and if the President interposes to correct the procedure, you have a just cause to complain of an indignity, and a right to arraign the War Department.

As your animadversion upon the tone of my letter is, probably, not a blow aimed at a much more conspicuous object, to be reached through me, I ought, perhaps, to pass it without notice. On revision of that letter, I cannot perceive that it is not entirely respectful in manner and language. The views of the President are therein confidently expressed, because they were confidently entertained. It seems to be admitted by you that, "if dictated to the greenest general of the recent appointments," the letter would not have been exceptionable. I was not aware that it was my duty to modify and graduate my style, so as to meet, according to your fastidious views, the various degrees of greenness and ripeness of the generals, to whom I am required to convey the orders of the President; and for any such defect in my official communications, I have no apology to offer.

In the same letter, wherein you complain of being censured for your course in relation to Colonel Harney, you say, "I am now rebuked for the unavoidable—nay wise, if it had not been unavoidable—release, on parole, of the prisoners taken at Cerro Gordo—even before one word of commendation from government had reached this army, on account of its gallant conduct in the capture of those prisoners." Accident alone, not any oversight or neglect on my part, has given you the apparent advantage of the aggravation, which you have artfully thrown into this charge. My letter commending yourself and the gallant army under your command, for the glorious achievement at Cerro Gordo, was written and sent to you on the 19th of May—eleven days before that which you are pleased to consider as containing a rebuke.

But I meet the main charge with a positive denial. You never were rebuked for discharging the prisoners taken at Cerro Gordo. This issue can be tried by the record. All that was ever said on the subject is contained in the following extract from my letter of the 31st of May.

"Your course hitherto, in relation to prisoners of war, both men and officers, in discharging them on parole, has been liberal and kind; but whether it ought to be still longer continued, or in some respects changed, has been under the consideration of the President, and he has directed me to communicate to you his views on the subject. He is not unaware of the great embarrassment their detention, or the sending of them to the United States, would occasion; but, so far as relates to the officers, he thinks they should be detained until duly exchanged. In that case, it will probably be found expedient to send them, or most of them, to the United States. You will not, therefore, except for special reasons in particular cases, discharge the officers, who may be taken prisoners, but detain them with you, or send them to the United States, as you shall deem most expedient."

If I understand the force of terms, there is nothing in this language which, by fair interpretation, can be made to express or imply a rebuke. I cannot conceive that any mind, other than one of a diseased sensitiveness, over anxious to discover causes for complaint and accusation, could imagine that anything like a rebuke was contained in this extract; yet on this unsubstantial basis alone rests the charge, over and over again presented, that you were rebuked by the War Department, for discharging the prisoners captured at Cerro Gordo. If, in a case where it was so easy to be right and so difficult to get wrong, you could fall into such an obvious mistake, what may not be expected from you in other matters, where your perverted feelings have a freer and a wider range?

Before considering your complaints, for not having been supplied with sufficient means for transportation for the expedition against Vera Cruz, I will notice your "four memorials" to the War Department, in which you demonstrated, as you state, that Vera Cruz was the true base of operations, and that the enemy's capital could not, probably, be reached from the Rio Grande."

I cannot discover the pertinency of your allusion to these four memorials, except it be to put forth a claim to the merit of originating the expedition against Vera Cruz, and of being the first to discover that the most practicable route to the city of Mexico was from that point on the Gulf; but your known abhorence for a "pruriency of fame not earned," ought to shield you from the suspicion of such an infirmity.

I am sure you are not ignorant of the fact—but, if you are, it is, nevertheless, true—that the expedition against Vera Cruz had been for some time under consideration; that great pains had been taken to get information, as to the defences of that city, the strength of the castle, and the difficulties which would attend the debarkation of troops; that maps had been procured and carefully examined; that persons who had resided there, and officers of the army and navy, had been consulted on the subject, and the enterprise actually resolved on before the date of your first memoir, and before you were thought of to conduct it.

As early as the 9th of July, 1846, within two months after the declaration of war, and before the main body of troops raised for its prosecution had reached the scene of operations, considerate attention had been given to that subject. On that day a letter, from this department to General Taylor, thus alludes to a movement from Vera Cruz into the interior of the enemy's country.

"If from all the information you may communicate to the department, as well as that derived from other sources, it should appear that the difficulties and obstacles to the conducting of a campaign, from the Rio Grande, the present base of your operations, for any considerable distance into the interior of Mexico, will be very great, the department will consider whether the main invasion should not ultimately take place from some point on the coast—say Tampico, or some other point in the vicinity of Vera Cruz. This suggestion is made with a view to call your attention to it, and to obtain from you such information as you may be able to impart. Should it be determined that the main army should invade Mexico at some other point than the Rio Grande—say the vicinity of Vera Cruz—a large and sufficient number of transport vessels could be placed at the mouth of the Rio Grande, by the time the healthy season sets in—say early in November. The main army, with all its munitions, could be transported, leaving a sufficient force behind to hold and occupy the Rio Grande, and all the towns and provinces which you may have conquered before that time. In the event of such being the plan of operations, your opinion is desired, what increased force, if any, will be required to carry it out with success. We learn that the army could be disembarked a few miles distant from Vera Cruz, and readily invest the town in its rear, without coming within the range of the guns of the fortress of San Juan d'Ulloa. The town could be readily taken by land, while the fortress, being invested by land and sea, and all communication cut off, must soon fall. From Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, there is a fine road, upon which the diligences or stage coaches run daily. The distance, from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, is not more than one third of that from the Rio Grande to the city of Mexico."

The subject was again brought into view, on the 13th of October, in the same year, and more particularly on the 22d of October, in letters addressed to General Taylor. At the last date, the plan had been so far matured that several officers of the staff and line were indicated for that service. This was nearly a month before it was determined to employ you with the army in any part of Mexico.

It was never contemplated here to strike at the city of Mexico, from the line occupied by General Taylor, or through any other except that from Vera Cruz. If the war was to be pushed to that extent, it required no elaborate demonstration; no profound military talent; nothing more than common sagacity and very slight reflection on the subject, to see the propriety and the necessity of making Vera Cruz the base of military operations.

An alleged deficiency of means to transport the troops in the expedition to Vera Cruz, seems to be most prominently presented and most confidently relied on to sustain your charge against the War Department, for neglecting this branch of its duties. I issued, it seems to be admitted, the proper order, so far as the means of transportation were to be drawn from the north, but the allegation is, that it was issued too late and was never executed. It was issued at least four days before you arrived at New Orleans, on your way to the army. If promptly executed, it was a reasonable calculation that the "ten vessels," alluded to in your letter, would have arrived in season to receive the troops, as soon as you could collect them, from their remote and scattered positions in the interior of Mexico, bring them to the sea coast, and prepare for their embarkation. Whether an order for ships to be sent out in ballast, issued the 15th of December, was or was not in season for the service they were designed for, depends upon the time when the expedition could be got ready to sail. To determine this, a regard must be paid to what you required to be done preparatory to the expedition, rather than what you may have said on that subject.

A reference to two or three of your requisitions will show that no rational hope could be entertained that the expedition would set forth before the middle or the last of February. You required, as one item of the outfit, one hundred and forty surf boats—all to be constructed after you left Washington. Though the department urged a less number, you insisted on all. You estimated the expense of each at $200, and thought, by putting the principal shipyards on the Atlantic coast in requisition, they might be constructed by the first of January. To show what reliance was to be placed on your calculation, I refer to the fact, that though due regard to economy was had in procuring these boats, each cost on an average $950—nearly fivefold your estimate. Conceding that you erred much less as to the time within which they could be constructed—nay, more, admitting they could have been ready by the first of January, and sooner you did not expect they could be made, by no reasonable calculation could they have reached the coast of Mexico before the first of February. The expedition could not go forth without them. In your letter to me, dated the 28th of February, off Lobos, you state that but a small part of the transports engaged at New Orleans, under your orders of the 28th December, had arrived, and "not one of the ten ordered by your memorandum of the 15th of that month, and the whole were due at the Brasos on the 15th of January." Having thus shown, by your own opinion, that under my order "the ten vessels" ought to have been at the Brasos at least fifteen days before the expedition could have been ready to sail, I have vindicated myself from your charge of having neglected my duty by not issuing that order at an earlier date. If issued earlier, it would have involved a largely increased expenditure for demurrage, and resulted in no public benefit.

But the graver part of this charge is, that none of these "ten vessels" ever arrived. "Relying," you say in the letter now under consideration, "upon them [the ten vessels] confidently, the embarkation was delayed in whole or in part at the Brasos and Tampico, from the 15th of January to the 9th of March, leaving, it was feared, not half the time needed for the reduction of Vera Cruz and its castle before the return of the yellow fever." To whomsoever the calamitous consequences of the non-arrival of these "ten vessels" and your "cruel disappointment" in relation to them are imputable, he has certainly involved himself in a serious responsibility. I hope to remove the whole of it from "the head of the War Department," and entertain some apprehensions that it will fall, in part, upon the commanding general of the expedition.

The execution of the most difficult branch of duties appertaining to a military expedition—providing for transportation—is by the distribution of the business in the War Department allotted to the quartermaster general. As an expedition against Vera Cruz had been resolved on sometime before you were assigned to take command of it, General Jesup had gone to New Orleans to be in the best position to make the necessary preparations for such an enterprise. From his great knowledge and long experience in military affairs, not only in his appropriate department, but as a commander in the field, the government thought it fortunate that you could have the advice and assistance of so able a counsellor.

Your suggestion that it might be necessary to send ships in ballast from the north for transports, was not neglected or unheeded by me. Whether it would be necessary or not, depended, according to your statement to me, upon the means of transportation which could be procured at New Orleans, &c. My first step was to write to the quartermaster general, then at that place, for information on that subject. In my letter to him of the 11th of December, I said: "It is expected that most of the vessels in the service of the quartermaster's department can be used as transports for the expedition. It will be necessary that the department here should know what portion of the transportation can be furnished by the ordinary means which the quartermaster's department has now under its control for the purposes of its expedition. I have to request that information on this point should be furnished without delay.

"Another point upon which the department desires information, is, what amount of means of transportation, for such an expedition, can be furnished at New Orleans, Mobile, and in that quarter.

"The expense of procuring transports from the Atlantic cities will be exorbitant. Freights is very high, and most of the good vessels are engaged for the ordinary purposes of commerce."

It is important to bear in mind that you saw this letter on your first arrival at New Orleans. In writing to me from that place, December 21st, you observe, "I have seen your letter (in the hands of Lieutenant Colonel Hunt) to the quartermaster general, dated the 11th." You could not mistake its object, because it was clearly expressed. I asked distinctly what means of transportation for the expedition can be furnished at New Orleans, &c., and referred to the expense and difficulty of procuring transports from the Atlantic cities. You could not, therefore, but know that my course, as to sending ships in ballast from the north, would be regulated by the quartermaster general's reply. While waiting for this information, and in order to prevent delay, and be sure not to deserve the imputation you now cast upon me, I issued the order of the 15th of December, to which you refer, knowing that it could be modified and conformed to the exigencies of the service according to the answer which I should receive from General Jesup. His reply is dated the 27th of December, and in it he says:

"Transportation can be provided here for all the troops that may be drawn from the army under the command of General Taylor, and for all the ordnance, ordnance stores, and other supplies, which may be drawn either from this depôt, [the Brasos,] or from New Orleans. The public transports, I mean those owned by the United States, that can be spared for the contemplated operations, it is estimated, will carry three thousand men, with all their supplies. Vessels can be chartered here on favorable terms for any additional transportation that may be required." This letter was submitted to, and read by, you, as appears from your endorsement thereon. After referring to some other matters in the letter, you conclude your endorsement as follows: "I recommend that Brevet Major General Jesup's suggestions be adopted." This fact shows that the letter received your particular attention.

When this letter, which you knew was forwarded to the department, was here received, showing that your apprehended difficulty in obtaining sufficient transportation at the south was unfounded, and that it could be provided in that quarter in great abundance on favorable terms, my order of the 15th of December, so far, and only so far, as it related to sending out vessels in ballast, was countermanded. It is strange indeed that, after you were made acquainted with the object of my inquiries and General Jesup's letter in reply to them, you should have looked for transport vessels in ballast from the Atlantic cities; and, still more strange, that their non-arrival should be the proof you rely on to convict me of having neglected my duty in this instance. If, in truth, you delayed the expedition nearly two months for these transports, I am blameless; the responsibility is in another quarter. It cannot be said that this statement, as to the sufficiency of transports to be obtained at the south, had an implied reference to what I had ordered from the Atlantic cities; for my order was then unknown to yourself and the quartermaster general. You first received a copy of it several days after the date of General Jesup's letter to me, and of your endorsement thereon. [See your letter to me of the 12th of January.] Resisted, as you were, by "head winds," enveloped in "frightful northers," and oppressed with complicated and perplexing duties in arranging and preparing the expedition against Vera Cruz, some temporary bewilderment may be excused; but to charge the War Department with your own misa prehensions and mistakes is inexcusable.

My reply to your accusations forces me to expose some of your misstatements of fact. You allege that the expedition, for the want of the "ten vessels," was delayed from the 15th of January to the 9th of March. You certainly mean to be understood that, on the 15th of January, your troops were ready to embark, and were delayed for want of these transports; but this was not so, and I am indebted to you for most abundant proof to establish your inaccuracy. The great body of your troops, for the expedition, was drawn from General Taylor's command at Monterey and in the interior of Mexico, and no part of them had reached either the Brazos or Tampico, the points of embarkation, on the 15th of January. In your letter, of the 12th of that month, to General Brooke, at New Orleans, you said: "I have now to state that it is probable the troops I have called for from General Taylor's immediate command, to embark here [the Brazos] and at Tampico, will not reach those points till late in the present month, [January,] say about the 25th." In a letter to me, of the 26th of January, you remark that General Butler responded to your call for the troops with the utmost promptitude, and that General Worth made an admirable movement: "the head of his division arrived with him at the mouth of the Rio Grande the day before yesterday," [24th January.] When the remainder came up, is not stated; yet one of your "naked historical facts" places the whole command at the points of embarkation, waiting for the "ten vessels" at least nine days before the actual arrival of any part of them. But, if they had been there, why should they have been detained for these vessels? In the same letter, written but two days after the arrival of the head of the first division, and probably before the other troops had come up, you say: "that the quartermaster general, Brevet Major General Jesup, at New Orleans, I find, has taken all proper measures, with judgment and promptitude, to provide everything depending on his department for the despatch and success of my expedition." If more was wanted, cumulative proof might be drawn from the same source—your own correspondence—to show, not only that this charge against me has no foundation in truth, but that you can have no apology for having preferred it.

After showing how unfortunate you have been in your specific charges, I may, with propriety, meet those of a general and sweeping character with a less particular detail of proofs to show their groundlessness.

Though the "ten vessels" were not, for the very sufficient reasons I have assigned, sent out in ballast from the Atlantic cities, yet a very large number were sent thence with stores, supplies, and troops to co-operate in the expedition. In General Jesup's letter to me, of the 17th instant, a copy of which is sent herewith, he states that fifty-three ships, barques, brigs, and schooners, were sent from the north, and the department actually furnished, at New Orleans, Brazos, and Tampico, for the army, before it took up the line of march into the interior, one hundred and sixty-three vessels.

I have alluded to the large number of surf-boats, and the great difficulty of procuring them, as the cause of the delay in their arrival. I have, also, a similar reason to offer in reply to your complaint for not having seasonably received the siege-train and ordnance supplies. The delay is to be ascribed to the enormously large outfit you required. If it was necessary, and despatch was used in procuring it, no one is in fault; if too large, you certainly should not regard, as a reprehensible delay, the time necessarily taken up in preparing it. To show that it was large, and required much time to procure it, I will select from many, a single item. You demanded from eighty to one hundred thousand ten-inch shells, and forty or fifty mortars of like calibre. This enormous quantity of shells—about four thousand tons—was mostly to be manufactured after you left Washington. All the furnaces in the country, willing to engage in the business, were set to work; but, with the utmost diligence and despatch, the supply of this one article, or even two-thirds of it, having to be manufactured and transported to the seaboard from the furnaces, (located, in most instances, in the interior of the country,) at a season of the year when water communications were obstructed by ice, could not be ready to be sent forward to you in many months after your departure from Washington. Had your requisitions been moderate, and, undoubtedly, more moderate ones would have sufficed, they could have been furnished at a much earlier period.

The memorandum which you left "for the siege train and ammunition therefor," was submitted to me by the ordnance department on the 26th of November, with an intimation that it could not be complied with in season for the expedition to go forward as early as you had contemplated. I endorsed upon it, "comply with the above as far as practicable;" and this order, I am satisfied, after full examination, was faithfully executed.

What could be done at Washington, was done promptly. You had with you the Quartermaster General, with all the means at the command of the War Department, and with unrestricted authority to do whatever you might require. He was under your supervision, and subject to your orders, able and willing to execute them; and you have never intimated that he, in any respect, failed in his duty, but, on the contrary, you have spoken in highly commendatory terms of his efficient services. I have already quoted your acknowledgment that he had "taken all proper measures, with judgment and promptitude, to provide everything depending on his department for the despatch and success of your expedition." In an issue of fact between you and the head of the War Department, his testimony, next to your own confessions, is the best that can be offered to correct your misstatements, and to refute your charges. In his letter to me of the 2d of January, 1847, he says: "General Scott left for the interior on the 29th ultimo, and I am taking active measures to have everything depending upon me ready for his operations. The quartermaster's department, I find, is called upon to do a great deal that should be done by other branches of the staff. So far as General Scott's operations go, I shall have everything done that is necessary, whether it belongs to my department or to other departments to do it." You had with you, and subject to your orders, not only the Quartermaster General, but officers of the other staff departments. They did not look to the War Department, but to yourself, for directions; and it was your duty, and not mine, to see that your requirements were complied with. That they were so, to the utmost practicable extent, I have no reason to doubt; but, if they were not, the fault, if any, is not with the War Department. You also gave the instructions in relation to providing the means of land transportation, and the officers charged with that duty were under your immediate control; and, if there is blame anywhere for any deficiency in this respect, it cannot be imputed to the War Department. Your whole correspondence with me, and the staff officers with you, shows that you very properly took upon yourself the whole charge of giving directions in this matter. In a letter to Captain Hetzel, senior quartermaster at the Brazos, speaking on the subject of the land transportation which may be needed after the descent on the enemy's coast, near Vera Cruz, you say: "I have already discussed and arranged with you the detail of the early land transportation train," &c. On the 19th of March you furnished General Jesup with your estimates and directions on this subject. The staff officers being with you, and under your orders, nothing further was, or properly could be, required or expected to emanate from Washington beyond the supply of funds; and, this being done, if you were disappointed in not realizing your expectations, you have not a colorable pretence for imputing blame to "the head of the War Department."

As a ground of complaint, and a matter of accusation, you refer to your deficiency of means to make the descent, and to capture the city of Vera Cruz and the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa, and assume that the extent of that deficiency was the difference between what you received and what you required. It would be quite as correct reasoning to say that what you had having proved sufficient for the purpose, the difference showed the extent of the errors in your estimates. The truth lies, perhaps, between the two extremes. You had less, probably, than you should have had, and you required much more than was necessary. That you did not have more, and, indeed, all you asked for, I have already shown, was not the fault of the War Department.

General Jesup was with you at Vera Cruz, saw your means, and is capable of forming an estimate of their sufficiency. He is, as his letter herewith shows, disposed to be just, and even generous to your fame. To his opinion on the subject, no well founded exception can be taken. He says, in reference to your complaints on account of a deficient supply of surf boats, siege train, and ordnance stores, "the result shows that he [General Scott] had surf boats and stores enough;" and of the delay of which you complain, he fully exonerates the War Department, and ascribes the whole to yourself and to unavoidable accidents.

The imputation that you were designedly crippled in your means, is a charge as preposterous as it is unfounded.

I am aware that the execution of some of the many arrangements for the Vera Cruz expedition was obstructed and delayed by accidents; but they were such as human sagacity could not forsee, or human agency control. They were not, however, more than a considerate mind, bringing into view all the vast difficulties of the case, would have expected. When your complaints on this subject were first received here, evincing, as they did, that you intended to hold the department responsible for every untoward event, the heads of the several bureaus were called on by me to show how they had executed the duties which had been confided to them, particularly in regard to matters referred to by you. The evidence they presented of having done all that was required, or could have been expected, convinced me, and I venture to say that, on a full examination, it will satisfy any mind open to conviction, that all your complaints, so far as they imputed blame to the War Department, or any of its branches, are unfounded. It will do much more—it will show that great industry, promptness, uncommon capacity, and extraordinary exertions, in relation to every thing connected with the war, have characterized the action of each of these subordinate departments. As a commendation justly merited by these several branches of the department, assailed, as they are, indirectly by you, I see no good reason for withholding my opinion, that an instance cannot be found where so much has been done, and well done, in so short a time, by any similar body of officers, under similar circumstances.

As you have, by implication, laid a heavy hand upon the bureau which is charged with the onerous duties of executing the laws and orders for raising and sending forward the recruits and levies, I feel bound to affirm that you have done to that branch of the public service the greatest injustice. No industry has been spared, no possible effort omitted to raise the forces which were authorized, and to send them to their destination within the briefest practicable period. The numerous orders, issued from the adjutant's general's office, and its voluminous correspondence on that subject, will sustain this assertion.

You have pressed with unwonted zeal the charge in relation to diverting the detachments of the new regiments under Gen. Cadwalader's command to the Brassos, and have indulged in the wildest speculations as to the sad consequences which attended this imputed error. Assuming that my orders diverted these troops, or any others, (an assertion which I shall controvert hereafter,) the circumstances justified the measure. The critical condition of General Taylor, according to all accounts received here at that time, is stated in my letter to you of the 22d of March. To show that the department acted properly, though it incurred your reproof, it is necessary to recall the facts as they then appeared here. They are presented in the following extract from that letter:

"The information which has just reached us, in the shape of rumors, as to the situation of General Taylor and the forces under his command, has excited the most painful apprehensions for their safety. It is almost certain that Santa Anna has precipitated the large army he had collected at San Luis de Potosi upon General Taylor, and it may be that the general has not been able to maintain the advanced position he had seen fit to take at Agua Nueva, but has been obliged to fall back on Monterey. It is equally certain that a Mexican force has been interposed between Monterey and the Rio Grande, and that it has interrupted the line of communication between the two places, and seized large supplies which were on the way to General Taylor's army.

"If the hostile force between the Rio Grande and General Taylor's army is as large as reports represent it, our troops now on that river may not be able to re-establish the line, nor will it, perhaps, be possible to place a force there sufficient for the purpose, in time to prevent disastrous consequences to our army, unless aid can be afforded from the troops under your immediate command.

"From one to two thousand of the new recruits for the ten regiments, from this quarter, will be on the way to the Brassos, in the course of three or four days. All the other forces will be directed to that point, and every effort made to relieve General Taylor from his critical situation. You will have been fully apprised, before this can reach you, of the condition of things in the valley of the Rio Grande and at the head-quarters of General Taylor, and have taken, I trust, such measures as the importance of the subject requires. I need not urge upon you the fatal consequences which would result from any serious disaster which might befal the army under General Taylor, nor do I doubt that you will do what is in your power to avert such a calamity."

The course pursued by the War Department on that occasion, which you convert into a charge, must, on revision, I think, commend itself to general approbation. Had it been indifferent to the alarming condition of General Taylor's army, and forborne to use, at the earliest moment, the most energetic measures to guard against the fatal consequences of its defeat, then too probable, it would have deserved an arraignment as severe as that which you have made against it, for having done its duty in that critical emergency. When you first received the reasons assigned for the course adopted here, they appear to have been satisfactory. In your despatch of the 28th of April you say: "Yesterday I learned by your letter of the 22d, and the adjutant general's of the 26th ultimo, that all the recruits of the regiments, some 3,000, raised, or likely to be raised, in time for this army, have been ordered to the Rio Grande." You did not then intimate the slightest dissatisfaction, not even a premonitory symptom of that deep distress with which, instantly on Mr. Trist's arrival in Mexico, you represent yourself to have been seized. It is a coincidence, not unworthy of notice, that the letter containing your first condemnatory remark on this subject, boats and stores enough;" and of the delay of which you complain, he fully exonerates the War Department, and ascribes the whole to yourself and to unavoidable accidents.

The imputation that you were designedly crippled in your means, is a charge as preposterous as it is unfounded.

I am aware that the execution of some of the many arrangements for the Vera Cruz expedition was obstructed and delayed by accidents; but they were such as human sagacity could not forsee, or human agency control. They were not, however, more than a considerate mind, bringing into view all the vast difficulties of the case, would have expected. When your complaints on this subject were first received here, evincing, as they did, that you intended to hold the department responsible for every untoward event, the heads of the several bureaus were called on by me to show how they had executed the duties which had been confided to them, particularly in regard to matters referred to by you. You did not then intimate the slightest dissatisfaction, not even a premonitory symptom of that deep distress with which, instantly on Mr. Trist's arrival in Mexico, you represent yourself to have been seized. It is a coincidence, not unworthy of notice, that the letter containing your first condemnatory remark on this subject, was written on the day of the date of Mr. Trist's first note to you, and only the day before your captious reply to it, and in both you assail the War Department. Your withering disappointment seems to have slumbered for ten days, and then to have been aroused by the appearance of Mr. Trist in Mexico, and your quarrel with him. If the order from the War Department had in fact "diverted" the forces with General Cadwalader, still it was fully justified by the threatening aspect of affairs on the Rio Grande; but I am quite sure that it did not divert them. No previous order from the department had designated any other place of rendezvous than the Brassos, for the troops that were to join your column. It was well understood, before you left Washington, that all the troops for both armies were to be sent to that place, and there to fall under your command. This arrangement was not, nor was it expected that it would be, here changed, until you had penetrated so far into the enemy's country as to render your communication with that place of general rendezvous difficult and dilatory.

You also complain that the order was not countermanded. If there had been such an order, and it had been countermanded, what would have been the consequence? The troops would have gone forward from the United States, under the former orders of the department, which would have taken them to the same place.

You allege that "the news of the victory of Buena Vista reached Washington in time to countermand Cadwalader's orders for the Rio Grande, before his departure from New Orleans." I notice this specification of neglect of duty, to show the extent to which you have carried your fault finding, and the industry with which you have searched for occasions to indulge it.

Your assumption is that the news of the victory of Buena Vista should have satisfied the War Department that Cadwalader's forces were not needed on the Rio Grande, and the omission to countermand, as soon as that news was received, the orders to send them there was a neglect deserving severe animadversion. How did you act under similar circumstances? With better means of information, as to the actual condition of the Rio Grande frontier after the victory of Buena Vista, you did not deem it prudent, after being forty-one days in possession of the news of that victory, to issue positive orders to remove a single man from that frontier; yet, you venture to censure me for not having sent the troops away the moment the news reached Washington.

You received information of that victory on or before the 14th of March, for on that day you proclaimed it in orders to your army. On the 25th of April, more than forty days thereafter, you issued an order to the commanding officer at the Brassos, to embark for Vera Cruz "such detachments of the new regiments as may have been ordered by the War Department to Point Isabel;" but you made it conditional, with reference to the safety of the line of the Rio Grande, and said to that officer that you relied upon his "sound judgment to determine on the spot, whether that line would not be too much exposed by the withdrawal of the troops in question." Thus it appears that you do not hesitate to impute neglect of duty to me, for not having adopted and acted on the conclusion that the line of the Rio Grande was safe the moment I heard of the victory of Buena Vista; but, when acting on the same subject, you dared not adopt that conclusion, although you had been in possession of the same information forty-one days. Your own conduct in this matter completely refutes this charge of yours against the War Department; it does more, it shows how rash and inconsiderate you have been in selecting topics for attack.

But the most serious consequences are attributed to the long delay of these troops at the Brassos. For your sake, I sincerely hope these consequences are much exaggerated, because I am quite confident it will be shown that you alone are responsible for the delay. The War Department did not—and it was proper that it should not—issue any order in regard to the movement of the troops after their arrival in Mexico. The order from the department, of the 30th of April, making a division of the new levies between the two columns, does not contradict this assertion, for these levies were then mostly within the United States; only portions of them had then reached Mexico. Until this order took effect, the troops at the Brassos, and, indeed, on the Rio Grande and with General Taylor, were under your entire and unrestricted command. As to this matter you were under no misapprehension, for, on the 25th of April, and before you were informed what had been done here to secure the Rio Grande line, you issued an order in relation to the troops at the Brassos. This place, you well knew, was the general rendezvous of the new levies from the United States; and before you sailed on your expedition to Vera Cruz, you were notified that the Mexican army were advancing upon General Taylor. To have assumed that you had not left at the Brassos, with a view to meet any probably contingency, orders for the proper disposition of the troops which were or might be sent there, would have implied an opinion that you wanted suitable qualifications for the high station which had been assigned to you. These troops were a part of your command, and subject to your orders; and if they remained one day at the Brassos after it was there known that they were not needed on the Rio Grande line, and would be serviceable with your column, the fault was entirely your own, and in no wise imputable to the War Department. If your opinion be not extravagant, and you say it is not, that but for the diversion of General Cadwalader's forces from you, and the "much precious time" lost at the Brassos, you "might easily have taken this city (Mexico) in the month of June, and at one-fifth of the loss sustained in August and September," you have, indeed, a most fearful account to settle with your country.

I cannot, however, but regard your speculative opinions on this subject as fanciful and wild. You greatly over estimate the forces which landed at the Brassos, and subsequently joined you. From the best calculations which can be made from data in the adjutant general's office, the number was much less than you imagine, and did not probably exceed one thousand. As the refutation of your charge against the department for diverting these troops is in no wise impaired by their number, be it more or less, it is not important to inquire into that matter; but there is a question of serious import, which I think the country will expect you to answer. If these new levies, which had just entered the service, would have enabled you to capture the city of Mexico in June, with a comparatively small loss, why did you at the very time you discovered that they were so much needed, and would have been so useful, send away from your army three times as many volunteers, who had been many months in service, and were, as you acknowledge, "respectable in discipline and efficiency," and who had distinguished themselves at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo, and in the hour of peril had fought by the side of your veteran troops, and merited an honorable share in the glory of those memorable conflicts?

The period of their engagement had not expired. When thus sent away but one of the seven regiments had less than thirty, and most of them had more than forty-five days to serve. According to your own opinion, concurred in by the department, they could have been legally retained on your line of operations till the last hour of their engagement. If not deemed expedient to take them on towards Mexico with you, their services at that critical period would have been of inestimable value in holding the post at Jalapa, so important and so unexpectedly abandoned, and in keeping open the communication between Vera Cruz and your head-quarters, whereby supplies, munitions, and recruits could be safely and expeditiously forwarded to you. Had this been done you would have been spared the trouble of inditing many items of grievance and complaint against the War Department, for having failed to furnish them. If you had retained the twelve months' volunteers until the end of their agreement—and no sufficient reason has yet been shown for their premature discharge—you might, for a season at least, have received without much obstruction, supplies from the main depôt on the gulf; the army might have been sterngthened by reinforcements at an earlier period, and many of the revolting scenes of barbarity on the road from Vera Cruz to Jalapa, in which so many lives of our fellow citizens have been sacrificed by the ruthless guerilleros, would not have occurred.

Another and still more lamentable calamity is, I think, fairly to be ascribed to the early obstruction of this important line of communication. The brave and patriotic men who were hurried on to Mexico in small detachments, in order to reinforce your army, were unexpectedly but necessarily detained at Vera Cruz until the numbers there collected were sufficient to force their way through the strong guerrilla bands which held the difficult passes on the Jalapa road. While thus detained on that inhospitable coast in the sickly season, they were exposed to the attacks of a wasting pestilence, more formidable and, as it unfortunately proved, more destructive than the Mexican army.

When the unwelcome news of the premature discharge of this large body of volunteers was received here, unaccompanied by any explanation to show the necessity of the act, it excited very general surprise and regret; its consequences were at once foreseen, but the step had been taken and could not be retraced. It was loudly condemned. Many did not believe that a measure which appeared to be so unwise and so injurious to the operations of the army could have emanated from yourself, but they were less charitable towards the President and Secretary of War. Both were denounced for what you had done; they were unscrupulously charged with weakness and incapacity; with being actuated by hostility to you, and a desire to secure popularity with the volunteers, nor were these bitter assaults intermitted until it began to be suspected that they were misdirected.

If you really regarded, on the 6th of May, the augmentation of your forces as being of such vital importance, it is almost as difficult to account for the course taken to re-engage the volunteers, as for their premature discharge. I am misled by information on which I ought to rely, if many of these volunteers would not have continued in service if proper measures had been taken at Jalapa, while they were indulging the hope of participating in further triumphs, and of being among those who would enjoy the enviable distinction of first entering, as victors, the proud capital of the Mexican republic. Though the subject was there presented to their consideration, no vigorous efforts seem to have been made, no attempt to form new companies, or to muster them into service, until this powerful inducement was weakened or withdrawn; until they had been detached from a victorious army, as if no longer deemed worthy to be a part of it; sent sixty miles towards their homes, into a pestilential region, and there brought within the sympathetic influence of the sentiments which, it was natural that many should feel and manifest, at the moment of embarking, to return to their families and friends. Considering the manner in which the President's order on this subject was attempted to be executed, it is not strange that among more than three thousand patriotic volunteers sent away by your order of the 4th of May, only about "fifty individuals" were found willing to re-engage.

You seem to have suddenly conceived the notion of converting the army, "like Cortez," "into a self-sustaining machine," and to make the resemblance between yourself and the Spanish hero more complete, you indulged a dream of fancy, until you seem to have adopted it as a matter of belief, that you were "doomed at Washington," and you became "like him always afraid that the next ship or messenger might recall or further cripple" you.

It should not be forgotten that the design of this unaccountable military movement was first communicated to Mr. Trist, before you had given any intimation of it to your government, and while under the perturbation of mind which his unwelcome presence in Mexico had produced. Had you confided this extraordinary plan of a campaign to him, after the "happy change" in your relations; after you had digested his "farrago of insolence, conceit, and arrogance;" and, after he too, mistaking notoriety for fame, had sought to win it by disobeying the orders of his government, defying its uthority, and assailing its conduct, this distinguishing mark of your confidence in him would have caused much less surprise. This novel conception, so suddenly adopted, was as suddenly carried out—your army was indeed converted "into a self-sustaining machine"—you discharged the twelve months' volunteers, and broke up your post at Jalapa, and on the way to your main depot; "resolved," as you announced, "no longer to depend on Vera Cruz or home;" you put yourself beyond the reach of the supplies which had been provided by the government, and rendered yourself, in a great measure, inaccessible to the recruits and levies (except in strong parties) which had been raised to augment your command. In this way you rendered unavailing, for a time at least, all that had been or could be done by the assiduous and incessant labors of the War Department in all its branches, and then you recklessly put forth the groundless complaint of "a total want of support and sympathy" from it.

Your letter of the 25th of July, which was not received at Washington until the 30th of December last, abounds with complaints against the department, and refers in strong terms to the wants and sufferings of the army at that time. Before you venture to make its then destitute condition a ground of charge against the War Department, you ought to have recollected that these afflictions fell upon it in the midst of your experiment of making it "a self-sustaining machine," and were the legitimate fruits of that experiment. These sufferings came upon it before your estimated period of isolation from "Vera Cruz and home" had half expired. When you had designedly and unnecessarily abandoned both, and entered upon your self-sustaining position, "cut off from all supplies and reinforcements from home, until perhaps late in November," by what pretence of justice do you complain of the War Department for the distresses you thus voluntarily inflicted upon yourself and the gallant army under your command? Something very different from censure and reproof is due for the extraordinary efforts which were successfully made to reach you with recruits and supplies in your sequestered situation, and to rescue you from the embarrassments in which your ill-judged measure had involved you. I have brought into view this unaccountable movement of yours, with no purpose to make any comment upon it as a military measure, but solely to show that the evils resulting from it are not just grounds of accusation against the War Department, and that the labored attempt to pervert them to such a purpose, discloses the manner and spirit with which you have executed the assumed task of its accuser.

As you have indulged in the widest range of speculation in regard to the alleged sinister motives and covert designs of others, I feel less reluctant to present my views as to the main object of your last communication. Throughout the whole of it, and particularly in the concluding part, you manifest the utmost solicitude to place yourself in the position of an injured and persecuted man. With all the aid you can derive from dextrous strategy, you will be likely to fail in your attempt, unless you can have the full benefit of your high coloring of some facts, and your forgetfulness of others, together with all your fanciful conjectures and surmises.

Your recal is, you assert, the long suspended "blow of power" which you had the sagacity clearly to predict. It is somewhat remarkable that your predictions preceded the events which you imagine provoked that blow. As early as the 25th of July—soon after "the happy change in my [your] relations, both official and private, with Mr. Trist"—you looked, you say, "to be dismissed from the service of my [your] country." If your recall can be regarded as a dismissal, you are entitled to all the credit of the fulfilment of your own early prediction.

In presenting in its true light the President's compliance with your own request to be recalled, which you now denominate your dismissal, I may be obliged to strip it of the embellishments you have ingeniously thrown around it, though, in doing this, you may be deprived of much upon which you depend to sustain your claim to be considered a persecuted man.

As early as June you begged to be recalled. You allege that this application was "rebukingly declined." This is not saying the exact thing. The reply to your request was, "that it would be decided with exclusive reference to the public good. When that shall render it proper in his (the President's) opinion to withdraw you from your present command, his determination to do so will be made known to you." This was not a denial, but a suspension of present action, accompanied with an assurance of future action on the subject. Your request was still pending; a regard to the public good then stood in the way of the immediate gratification of your wishes, but the President promised to act definitively on the question when that obstacle should be removed. Judging from the state of things at the head-quarters of the army, in January, he concluded that it was removed, and that he ought no longer to require of you reluctant service as commanding general. This, certainly, cannot be called persecution, or punishment. I do not deem it proper to comment on the state of things at the head-quarters of the army, to which allusion is made in the letter granting your request, nor to express an opinion as to the share of responsibility therefor which rests upon yourself or others; that matter is to a considerable extent involved in the investigations before the court of inquiry now sitting in Mexico. Your request to be recalled, thus ultimately granted, was prefaced with imaginary complaints, which could not be passed without notice, nor noticed, without exposing their groundlessness. If the exposition has given offence, you can blame only yourself for introducing complaints so entirely unfounded.

The crowning outrage, as you regard it, is the simple fact that you and "the three arrested officers" are all to be placed together before the same court; "the innocent and the guilty, the accuser and the accused, the judge and his prisoners, are dealt with alike." "Most impartial justice!" you exclaim. And why is it not impartial justice? On what ground of right can you claim to have your case discriminated from theirs? It is true you have assumed to be their judge, and have pronounced them guilty; and complain and repine that the laws of the country do not allow you, their accuser, to institute a court to register your decree. But you are not their rightful judge, although they were your prisoners. Before that court you all stand on the same level, and all have equal rights. Though you may have the self-satisfying conviction that you are innocent and they are guilty, the government could act upon no such presumption. By becoming an accuser you did not place yourself beyond the reach of being accused; and unless you are clothed with the immunity of despotic power, and can claim the benefit of the maxim "that the king can do no wrong," I know not why your conduct, when made the subject of charges, may not be investigated by a court of inquiry, nor can I perceive what other, or better, right you have to complain, and arraign the government, than the other officers whom you have accused, and whose cases, with your's, were referred to the same court. If your's is a hard case, their's is not less so: if you can rightfully complain of persecution by the government, so can they, with equal justice, and an equal claim to public sympathy.

The charges against you did not emanate from the government, nor did they relate to a matter in which it could feel any peculiar interest. Not believing it impossible for you to do wrong, or that you were exempt from all responsibility, for whatever you might have done, the government deemed it proper, when charges were preferred against you, coming from a source entitled to respect, to cause them to be investigated. As the usual and mildest mode of proceeding, they were referred to a court of inquiry. Until you can show that you enjoy the transcendental privilege to have your official conduct exempt from all examination, in any form whatever, you have no cause to complain of the course taken in regard to the charges against you.

If your extraordinary pretensions are to derive any support from your distinguished services in the field, you ought to be mindful that the three accused officers, put under arrest by you, have like claims for distinguished services. On the pages of impartial history their names, and their gallant deeds, must appear with your's, and no monopolising claims, seeking "malignant exclusions," at the expense of the "truth of history," will be permitted to rob them of their fair share of the glory won by our gallant army while under your command.

With your assault upon the character of your "erratic brother" I shall not intermeddle, but I must repel your charge that he has been favored for being a political "deserter" to "the true faith," for signalizing his "apostacy, by acceptable denunciations of one" to whom he had formerly "professed (and not without cause) the highest obligations." The reasons for not sending your charges against Brevet Major General Worth to the court of inquiry are set forth in my letter of the 13th of January. I regret that they are so entirely unsatisfactory to you, but am consoled with the assurance that they are in other quarters more favorably received. The errors of your commentary on my letter have arisen from your misapprehension of the text. The principle there laid down is of vital importance to subordinate officers, and in no respect impairs the rights or the authority of those in chief command. As the principles which you arraign are the creations of your own fancy, and have no countenance or support from my letter, I am no way implicated by the "fatal consequences" you deduce from them. Whether legitimate or fanciful, they do not disturb the positions laid down in my letter.

I cannot, however, but regard your solicitude for the support of discipline to be more ostentatious than profound. When a general at the head of an army of freemen, who do not lose their rights as citizens by becoming soldiers, sets up pretensions to dictatorial power—when he contemns the authority of his government, and is much more ready to censure than to execute its orders and instructions—when he denounces as an outrage and a punishment the attempt to submit his acts, charged to be an offence against a subordinate officer, to an investigation in the mildest form—when he administers an indignant reproof to his superior for upholding the sacred right to appeal, upon which depend the security and protection of all under his command—such a general sets an example of insubordinate conduct of wide and withering influence upon sound military discipline.

By extending my comments upon your letter, I might multiply proofs to show that your accusations against the head of the War Department are unjust; that your complaints are unfounded; that the designs imputed by you to the government, to embarrass your operations, impair your rightful authority as commander, and to offer outrage and insult to your feelings, are all the mere creations of a distempered fancy; but to do more than I have done would, in my judgment, be a work of supererogation.

In conclusion, I may be permitted to say that, as one of the President's advisers, I had a full share in the responsibility of the act which assigned you to the command of our armies in Mexico. I felt interested even more than naturally appertained to my official position that success and glory should signalize your operations. It was my duty to bring to your aid the efficient co-operation of the War Department. I never had a feeling that did not harmonize with the full and fair discharge of this duty. I know it has been faithfully performed. There are some men for whom enough cannot be done to make them grateful, or even just, unless acts of subserviency and personal devotedness are superadded. From you I expected bare justice, but have been disappointed. I have found you my accuser. In my vindication I have endeavored to maintain a defensive line, and if I have gone beyond it at any time, it has been done to repel unproked aggression. To your fame I have endeavored to be just. I have been gratified with the many occasions I have had to bear public testimony to your abilities and signal services as a military commander in the field. It has been, and, under any change in our personal relations, it will continue to be my purpose to be liberal in my appreciation of your distinguished military merits. In respect to your errors and your faults, though I could not be blind, I regret that you have not permitted me to be silent.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington city, February 18, 1848.

SIR: In reply to the complaint of General Scott, in his despatch of the 25th of December, that Lieutenant Colonel Johnson's train had returned without one blanket, coat, jacket, or pair of pantaloons, the small depot at Vera Cruz having been exhausted by the troops under Generals Patterson, Butler, and Marshall, respectively, all fresh from home, I have the honor to state that, if the facts are as set forth by General Scott, the responsibility lies at other doors than mine. Understanding fully his views and wishes, I made ample provision for the old corps under his command. Those corps, I believe, never exceeded in the aggregate seven thousand men. To supply them I placed in depot, at Vera Cruz, eleven thousand forage caps, fourteen thousand wool jackets, and four thousand cotton jackets; fifteen thousand flannel shirts, and seventeen thousand cotton shirts; eighteen thousand pairs of wool overalls, and four thousand pairs of cotton overalls; seventeen thousand pairs of flannel drawers; thirty-seven thousand pairs of bootees, (I ordered fifty thousand pairs;) twenty-seven thousand pairs of stockings; two thousand four hundred great coats, and nine thousand two hundred blankets. These supplies were all sent to Vera Cruz previous to the 30th of June.

I made no provision for the volunteers, for you are well aware I had not a single cent that I could legally apply to the purchase of clothing for them. If the generals named by General Scott exhausted the clothing placed in depot at Vera Cruz, by applying it to the use of their respective commands, they acted in violation of the 36th article of war, and the general should hold them accountable.

It is known here that several thousand suits of clothing, sent to New Orleans and Mexico, for the use of the old army, have been issued to the new regiments and to volunteers; but General Scott is mistaken in supposing that the depot at Vera Cruz was entirely exhausted by those issues; for I have official information that as late as the 6th of December, some time after Lieutenant Colonel

Johnson's train left Vera Cruz, there still remained in the depot at that post eight thousand forage caps; three thousand nine hundred wool coats and jackets, and six thousand nine hundred cotton jackets; nineteen hundred wool and seven thousand seven hundred cotton overalls; twenty-seven hundred flannel and thirteen thousand seven hundred cotton shirts; fifteen thousand six hundred pairs of drawers; two thousand seven hundred great coats; and seven thousand blankets, and eleven thousand pairs of bootees.

If the volunteers and new regiments went to Mexico without the proper supplies, that was the fault of those who commanded them. General Butler, I understand, was specially directed to superintend the organization, equipment, and movement of the volunteer force. It was his business, not mine, to see that they were properly clothed and supplied; and neither he, General Patterson, nor General Marshall had any right to take for their commands the supplies I had placed at Vera Cruz for General Scott's old regiments.

For the new regiments I had made timely arrangements, and would have sent to Vera Cruz, in November, a large supply of clothing, but I received, in October, a report from Captain Irwin, the acting Quartermaster General of General Scott's army, dated at the city of Mexico the 27th of September, of which the following is an extract: "I have now a thousand people engaged in making clothing; the quality of the material is not so good as our own, and the price on the average is fifty per cent higher. Still supposing the road between this and Vera Cruz to be entirely open, I think the government will lose little, if anything, by purchasing here. I shall be able to fill, in a very short time, every requisition which has been made on me, with clothing, which, though not exactly of our uniform, will be comfortable and good."

This information, sir, was from a man who not only knew how to supply an army, by putting into requisition all the resources of the country around him, but was better qualified to command a large army than most of your generals in the field. The report of Captain Irwin delayed my action here, but in December, I ordered from Philadelphia a supply of clothing sufficient for the whole army, regulars and volunteers.

To enable me to do this, I have been obliged to apply, on my own responsibility, three hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars of the funds of the quartermaster's department to the purchase of clothing, and to authorize purchases to be made on credit, which have been paid for by bills drawn on me at ninety days, which I have accepted, hoping Congress, by making an appropriation, will enable me to meet them by the time they become due.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

TH. S. JESUP,
Quartermaster General.

The Hon. W. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War, Washington City.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington City, April 17, 1848.

SIR: I have received the extracts from General Scott's letter to you, dated the 24th of February, complaining of the want of means of transportation, of supplies, and of funds, from the quartermaster's department, in consequence of which he informs you he was embarrassed and delayed in his operations, as well in the attack on Vera Cruz as in his movements afterwards; and I have to state in reply, that delays did occur in the movement upon Vera Cruz which were most vexatious, but which were not occasioned by any neglect or omission on my part, or on that of any other officer of the department, as a detail of the facts will show. The memorandum from the War Department for the quartermaster general, alluded to by General Scott, fixed the number of transport ships for his expedition at forty-one, viz: Twelve for the volunteers, ordnance, and supplies, from the Atlantic; five for surf boats or lighters; ten to go out in ballast for troops on the gulf of Mexico; and fourteen to be supplied by the officers of the quartermaster's department at New Orleans and on the gulf. That number, I take it for granted, was determined upon by General Scott himself, or by the War Department, with his assent, as I have not understood that he, at any time, objected to the number as insufficient. He complains that the ten in ballast for troops were not sent, and that the embarkation was delayed thereby "in whole, or in part, from the 15th of January to the 9th of March."

Colonel Stanton informs me that the order to charter those ten vessels was countermanded in consequence of a letter from me, dated at Brassos Santiago the 27th day of December, which was read by General Scott before it was sealed, and to which he added a postscript. The general, no doubt, relied upon those vessels. I expected them, for I believed they would be chartered and on the way before my letter could be received; but so boisterous was the season that I thought it unsafe to trust to their arrival, and made my arrangements as if they had actually failed, which fact I reported to General Scott, as well as I now remember, either through Captain Wayne or the late Captain Hetzel.

It will be seen by reference to the memorandum referred to, that twenty-seven vessels were to be sent from the Atlantic with troops, supplies, and in ballast. Not one was sent in ballast; but there were actually fifty-three ships, barques, brigs, and schooners, sent with troops and supplies. It was expected that I should furnish fourteen ships; the department actually furnished at New Orleans, Brassos, and Tampico, for the army, before it took up the line of march into the interior, one hundred and sixty-three vessels, some of which made several voyages.

I submit a copy of a report from the late Captain Hetzel, marked A, dated at the Brassos the 21st of February, 1847, which shows what had been done by the department up to that time. Of the 102 vessels contained in that report, five were from the Atlantic, four only of which had reported there, the other had been wrecked. I also submit paper marked B, which is a list of vessels chartered at Tampico, to transport thence troops, horses, and mules.

Under the most favorable circumstances much time would have been required to organize so extensive a transport service; but, owing to the drenching rains throughout the month of January, the ships and other vessels chartered at New Orleans could not be prepared and sent to sea as rapidly as was desirable; and the frightful northers described by General Scott in his letter of the 12th of January, 1847, and mentioned in many of his subsequent letters, delayed their arrival at the Brassos and Tampico, as well as the movement from those points. The time lost from these causes alone may be fairly estimated at from twenty-five to thirty days. But a measure of General Scott, which he seems to have overlooked in summing up his difficulties, produced not only embarrassment and increased expense, but delays more injurious to the service than the want of ten ships promised from the Atlantic, even had others not been substituted in their place. It was the change in the destination of the Mississippi, Louisiana, North Carolina, Massachusetts and Virginia regiments. Had the two former been sent direct to Lobos, and a regiment already at Tampico been left there for the defence of the place, and the regiment replaced by the Mississippi regiment been left with General Taylor, double lighterage would have been avoided at a time when lighters were not abundant, delay would have been prevented, and six ships, that were rendered comparatively useless, would have been available for the campaign; the places of which had to be supplied. Had cutters or pilot-boats been despatched to cruise off cape St. Antonio, with orders for the North Carolina, Massachusetts and Virginia regiments to proceed direct to Sacrificios, double lighterage, as well as the transports for the troops that replaced them, would have been saved.

General Scott certainly had the right to change the destination of those regiments, but he, not you or I, is responsible for the embarrassment, increased expense and delay occasioned by that change.

As to the complaint of the want of funds, you are aware that the appropriations were nearly exhausted—the small amount available I was obliged to use so as to preserve the credit of the department; and I made the only arrangement in my power for the supply of funds by authorizing the officers of the department to draw on me without limit. The service, I know, was carried on with as little embarrassment as ever attended the service of any army in a foreign war.

The complaint of General Scott, in regard to clothing, is fully answered in my report of the 18th of February last, which will be found in Executive document No. 56, page 250, to which I respectfully refer.

General Scott complains that not more than half of the surf boats he required came at all, and of the siege train and ordnance stores, only about one half had arrived when the Mexican flags were replaced by those of the United States at Vera Cruz. The science and valor of the army, he says, had to supply all deficiencies. The result shows that he had surf boats and stores enough; and one of his high merits as a commander is, that he never doubted the science and valor of his army, but made the best use of both. He had invaded a country with resources sufficient to support large armies against us; he availed himself with great ability of the resources of the enemy. This, I know, you and the President expected him to do. Had he failed to do so, or had he doubted the science and valor of his army, he would have proved himself unfit for the high trust confided to him; and those who placed him in command would have had a heavy account to settle with the country. But his complaints are entirely groundless, as he, in his cooler moments, I have no doubt will admit. He is one of the best informed military men now living; but it would puzzle him to show a single instance in the military history of the last two centuries in which an army, whose personal and material had to be collected from so vast a territory, was as well appointed and supplied as his army has been. The glorious results of his campaign are a sufficient answer to all his complaints—results so astonishing that the faithful chronicler of the events as they occurred will probably be considered rather the compiler of fables than the relater of facts.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

TH. S. JESUP,
Quartermaster General.

Honorable Wm. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War, Washington City.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington City, April 18, 1848.

SIR: Since my letter of yesterday, I have received a report from the principal quartermaster at the city of Mexico, dated the 20th of March, from which I make, and submit for your consideration, the following extract:

"I am happy to inform you that this army (the army under General Butler) is well supplied with clothing, camp, and garrison equippage; at Vera Cruz, there still remains for issue or transportation to the interior, a good supply of the above articles."

This is a fine commentary on the complaints recently made to you of the delinquencies of the said department.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

TH. S. JESUP,
Quartermaster General.

The Hon. W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War, Washington City.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, June 19, 1846.

Understanding that one of the provisions of the bill that has just passed Congress, adds four assistant adjutants general to that department of the general staff, I beg to submit, in connexion therewith, these remarks:

We have now six officers (all taken from, and still holding commissions in the line) bearing that precise designation—two of them, Cooper and Thomas, with the brevet rank of major, and four, Shriver, Prentiss, Bliss, and Freeman, with the brevet rank of captain. Of the whole six, Shriver is the only one whose regimental rank has come up (since his appointment to the department) to his regimental [staff] rank; that is, he is now a captain, by brevet, in the staff, and also a captain in the 2d artillery. If I understand the precise terms of another provision of the new bill, Captain Shriver will be obliged to give up one of his captaincies.

Both classes of assistant adjutant's general (majors and captains) bear, precisely, under the act July 5, 1838, section 7 (Cross, p. 262) the same designation. But that act prescribes that two of the assistants shall have the brevet rank of major, and the other four, that of captain.

The new act, I learn (it is not before me) makes no such discrimination as to rank; but simply adds to the department four assistants.

As this is the branch of the general staff (department of orders) the most immediately connected with the general head-quarters of the whole army, I suppose it to be particularly my duty to add:

That, in my view of military propriety, or the interest of the service, two of the new assistants ought to be of the class of major, and the other two of the class of captain, which would give the department (besides the Adjutant General) four majors and six captains, all by brevet.

That Captain Wm. C. DeHart, 2d artillery, would, from long and varied experience, as well as from general talents and acquirements, not to speak of the valuable services he has rendered, make a most excellent assistant of the first class.

That Captain W. W. S. Bliss, first lieutenant, 4th infantry, long the chief of General Taylor's staff, as assistant adjutant general—an officer of singular accomplishments, and who has, in that capacity, highly distinguished himself in the great events which have recently occured on the Rio Grande, seems pre eminently entitled to the other majority.

1. First Lieutenant S. C. Ridgely, 4th artillery, an officer of great and varied talents and experience, now attached to the general head-quarters of the army, as acting judge advocate, recommended as one [of] the new assistants.

2. First Lieutenant H. S. Turner, 1st dragoons, long adjutant of that regiment, and now with Colonel Kearny, and wanted with him. He is highly qualified to be the other of the two original places.

3. First Lieutenant H. L. Scott, 4th infantry, long aid-de-camp, &c., with excellent talents and experience, recommended as assistant with the rank of captain, vice Bliss, promoted.

4. First Lieutenant J. H. Eaton, 3d infantry, aid-de-camp to General Taylor, and much distinguished in the present campaign, recommended vice Shriver, who it is supposed will, by the new act, be obliged to return to his regiment. But, as Lieutenant Eaton may become a regimental captain, in a few weeks, by ordinary promotion, I offer, vice Shriver.

4. First Lieutenant Irwin McDowell, 1st artillery, aid-de-camp to General Wool, and who will be needed with the latter, who is charged, immediately, with the Chihuahua expedition.

All which is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

June 23, 1846.

Major General Scott asks the attention of the Secretary of War to a bundle of papers, which General Scott has somewhat accidentally obtained, relative to prisoners of war, &c.

It would seem that the files and records of the War Department are without such documents.

The paper in print (the longer one) contains matters which seem, at this time, to demand attention on the part of the United States and Mexico as belligerents. Perhaps the Secretary may extract certain parts of the long paper, and send them to Brevet Major General Taylor as a basis of arrangement between him and the competent authority on the part of Mexico. An authentic copy of the same paper may, probably, be obtained at the State Department.

Respectfully submitted.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Projet.—Military chest.

JULY 2, 1846.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

It is understood that the paymaster general prefers and has made a separate arrangement.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

GENERAL ORDERS.

The quartermaster general will cause to be provided and sent, to the general head-quarters of the army against Mexico, a suitable military chest, capable of containing $ in gold for disbursement on account of that army while in the enemy's country, or while operating in the field.

This chest will be kept under the guard of general head-quarters, for the reception and safe-keeping of such large sums of public money as disbursing staff officers may not find it necessary to keep about them for current use.

The general-in-chief of that army will designate one or more of the principal staff officers about head-quarters to keep the key or keys of the chest, to pass receipts for deposites made in the same, and to reissue, upon the proper receipts, such convenient sums as may, from time to time, be needed by the depositors or other officers of the same branches of the staff, respectively, for the public service. Accordingly, moneys deposited in the chest by officers of the quartermaster's department, subsistence department, or pay department, will only be reissued, except in extreme cases, and by the special order of the general-in-chief of that army, to the officers of the same disbursing department.

Remarks on Governor Edwards's letter (July 6) to the Secretary of War.

JULY 17, 1846.

I do not wish to put my opinion in opposition to that of the Missouri authorities (aided by recent intelligence) on the force necessary to conquer Santa Fé or New Mexico; but I do not believe Brigadier General Kearny will meet, at any one point in the entire route to the Pacific, 2,500 men tolerably armed, which is less than the force of his own command, including Sterling's [Price's] regiment. (Note.—Governor Edwards does not, by his letter, appear to be aware of Summers' and Cooke's companies, of the 1st dragoons, which have followed Kearny.)

Nevertheless, as a compromise, I suggest that Governor Edwards be authorized to raise and to despatch, after Kearny, a battalion of foot volunteers, say of five companies of 100 men each, or of six, with fewer privates, to follow Colonel Sterling's [Price's] regiment; the new battalion to be armed with muskets, except one company, to which rifles should be given. Such addition would carry up the Santa Fé expedition to about 3,200 men, independent of the Mormons, and of accessions to be made at Bent's fort and within New Mexico.

Undisciplined as Kearny's army may be, the opposing Mexicans will be equally so; and, physically and morally, every two Americans may safely be considered as at least equal to three Mexicans.

Respectfully submitted.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

It is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War that I propose, if not objected to by him, to issue an order to this effect:

GENERAL ORDERS, } HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
No. . } Adjutant General's Office, Sept. 5, 1846.

Brevet Brigadier General Worth, now in command of a brigade in the army operating against Mexico, is assigned to duty with that army, according to his brevet rank.

By command of Major General Scott:

R——— J———.
Adjutant General.

SEPTEMBER 5, 1846.

Without an order to the above effect, General Worth is now liable to be commanded, not only by any brigadier general of militia or volunteers, but also by any colonel senior to him as colonel.

Please see general orders, No. 5, of this year, (which revives the order of August 13, 1829,) paragraph 4.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

[Endorsement.]

Projet.

OCTOBER 8, 1846.

The within draft of a letter, it may be proper to address to each commander of an army now operating against Mexico. I am aware that it presents grave topics for consideration, which is invited.

It will be seen that I have endeavored to place all necessary limitations on martial law. 1. By restricting it to a foreign hostile country; 2. To offences enumerated with some accuracy; 3. By assimilating councils of war to court martials; 4. By restricting punishments to the known laws of some one of the States, &c.

Respectfully submitted to the consideration of the Secretary of War.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Projet.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, October —, 1846.

SIR: It cannot but happen that many offences, not cognizable by courts martial, under the "act for establishing rules and articles of war for the government of the armies of the United States," approved April 10, 1846, will be committed by, or upon the army under your command, while in the enemy's country. I allude to crimes which, if committed within our own organized limits, would, as heretofore, be referred to the ordinary or civil courts of the land.—Cross, p. 107.

Our land forces take with them, when on service beyond the limits of the Union, its organized territories, and the "Indian country," as defined by the first section of the act approved June 30, 1834, no statutory code for the punishment of offences, other than the said recited act of 1806, with its amendments.—Cross, p. 204.

Murder, wilful stabbing, and maiming, and assault and battery, committed upon any "superior officer," and no one else; or the drawing and lifting up any weapon against, or the offering any violence to, such officer, (he being, in the several cases, "in the execution of his duty,") by any "officer or soldier," or other person subject to said articles, are all clearly within the 9th of those articles.—Cross, p. 208.

Wanton disturbance of religious worship is made punishable by the 2d article, without reference to place or country.—Cross, p. 107.

So are spies (not citizens of the United States) by the second section of the said act of 1806.—Cross, p. 123.

Other capital offences against the general safety of the Union and army are expressly referred to courts martial by the 56th and 57th articles.—Cross, p. 116.

The 51st and 55th provide for a few other capital offences which may be committed abroad; and the 52d, abroad or at home, upon persons or property, by individuals of the army; and the 99th article refers numerous non-specified crimes, "not capital," but merely "disorders and neglects, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," to courts martial, whether such offences be committed at home or abroad.—Cross, pp. 115, 116, 123.

It is evident that the 99th article, so qualified or limited, cannot apply to the numerous omitted offences in question; many of which, if committed, ought, no doubt, to be punished with death, or otherwise severely; for it is enacted in the 87th, that "no person shall be sentenced to suffer death" by general courts martial, "except in the cases herein expressly mentioned"—a limitation which has been universally applied to the commissions of officers also.—Cross, p. 120.

Articles 32, 33, and 54, seem to be limited to the general maintenance of good order at home and abroad, and to the protection of persons and property within the United States.—Cross pp. 112, 115.

Assassination, wilful murder, stabbing, maiming, wounding, assault and battery, (except under the strict limitations of the 9th and 51st articles;) rape, wilful destruction of houses, or other private property; robbery and theft, or plunder and pillage, (except in the limited cases under the 52d and 55th articles;) and desecration of religious edifices, fixtures, and monuments, are all, whether committed by or upon the army, at home or abroad, unprovided for by our written military code; and they are offences which, of course, could not, in a foreign hostile country, often, if ever, be safely turned over to the courts of such country, whether the offenders belong to the latter or to the army.

The good of the service, the honor of the United States, and the interests of humanity, demand that the numerous grave offences omitted, except to a limited extent, as above, should not go unpunished because committed in a foreign country, on, or by, our army.

The British mutiny act, and articles of war founded thereupon, (which had their origin at the revolution of 1688,) omit the same offences, and to the same extent, because, as Lord Loughborough (2 H. Blackstone, 98) remarks, "In this country, all the delinquencies of soldiers are not triable, as in most countries of Europe, by martial law," (which, he says, in the same opinion, had, in the continental sense been "totally exploded" from that kingdom since 1688;) "but, where they are ordinary offences against the civil peace, they are tried by the common law courts;" (and such also has always been done in the United States.)

But when a British army is abroad, in a hostile country, the omissions in the British penal code—(the same as in ours, and to the same extent; for our articles of war are borrowed in extenso, and with but slight verbal variations therefrom)—that army supplies those omissions by the supplemental, unwritten, and undefined code, called martial law.

This law can have no constitutional, legal, or even necessary existence, within the United States. At home, even the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, by Congress, could only lead to the indefinite incarceration of an individual or individuals who, if further punished, at all, could only be so punished through the ordinary, or common law courts of the land.

But abroad, and in hostile countries, it is believed that the commanders of our armies, like those of Great Britain, may, ex necessitate rei, enforce martial law against any of the grave offences indicated above, which may be unprovided for in our statutory code, whether such offences be committed by persons appertaining to those armies, or by the inhabitants of the hostile country.

Accordingly, no matter by whom such offences may be committed in the hostile country occupied by the army under your immediate command, or in which it may be engaged in military operations, whether by persons appertaining to that army upon the persons and property of each other, or by such persons upon the persons or property of the inhabitants of the hostile country, or by the latter upon the persons or property of the army and its followers, all such offences, if against the laws of war, and not provided for in our rules and articles of war, will be duly brought before councils of war, and by them tried and sentenced, according to the nature and degree of each offence, and according to the known laws of any one of the States of this Union.

Every council of war, for the trial of such offences, will be appointed in the same manner, and by the same authority, that appoints courts martial, whether general, regimental, or garrison, and will, as far as practicable, be governed by the same limitations, rules, principles, and procedure, including reviews, modifications, meliorations, and approval of sentence.—Articles 65, 97.

The proceedings of councils of war will, of course, be kept in writing, and sent to the adjutant general's office, as in the case of the proceedings of courts martial.

Brevets.

" V. The President of the United States has been pleased to confer on the following named officers, serving in Florida, for gallant and meritorious actions in the face of the enemy, the brevet rank set opposite to their names respectively:

" Major B. K. Pierce, of the 1st regiment of artillery, to be lieutenant colonel by brevet, for distinguished services in the affair of Fort Drane, to date from the 21st August, 1836.

" Captain T. Childs, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be major by brevet, for planning the attack on the Indians at Fort Drane, and good conduct in that affair, to date from the 21st August, 1836.

" Captain William M. Graham, of the 4th regiment of infantry, to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of the Withlacooche, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

" Captain R. B. Lee, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of Micanopy, to date from 9th June, 1836.

" Captain J. A. Ashby, of the2d regiment of dragoons, to be major by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair of Welika, to date from 19th July, 1836.

" First Lieutenant Campbell Graham, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be captain by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affair on the Withlacooche, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

"First Lieutenant W. S. Maitland, of the 3d regiment of artillery, to be captain by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct in the affairs of the Withlacoochee and Welika, to date from the 31st December, 1835.

"Second Lieutenant A. Herbert, of the 1st regiment of artillery, to be 1st lieutenant by brevet, for gallantry and good conduct on several occasions in Florida, to take rank from the 27th July, 1836.

"By order of Alexander Macomb, major general commanding in chief.

"R. JONES,
Adjutant General."

These eight officers were breveted in the recess of the Senate, (which adjourned July 4,) but subject to the advice and consent of that body. Accordingly they were nominated by President Jackson, February 24, 1837, and confirmed 7th of March, following. Major Heileman had been previously breveted a lieutenant colonel in the same recess of the Senate; but, Heileman having died in the mean time, he was not nominated on the meeting of the Senate. It will be perceived by this order that the services for which these brevets (or many of them) were given, were rendered during the session of the Senate.

It is due to President Jackson and the acting Secretary of War, (Mr. Butler,) to say that these brevets were given under a temporary supposition that section 9, act June 30, 1834, (Cross, page 250) repealed section 2, act April 16, 1818, (Cross, page 202;) whereas, in reality, the only provision repealed was the power of the President and Senate to grant brevets for ten years' service, in the same grade, under section 4, act July 6, 1812—Cross, page 155. That "clause," or provision of law, only was repealed.

But, it is not doubted, that, on other grounds, the eight brevets, announced in this printed order, were legally granted in the recess of the Senate, subject to future nomination and confirmation, as in the case of ordinary promotions in the recess of the Senate. A regimental major, for example, dies in the recess. The good of the service requires that the vacancy should be promptly filled. The senior captain is announced, in orders, to take the vacancy, and a letter of appointment, subject to the future confirmation of the Senate, is given to him. This promotion is an incident to the captain's seniority. So the captain, in the recess, distinguishes himself in battle, "by gallant actions." As a legal incident to such distinction, the act of 1812, (the President being the judge,) authorizes a brevet; and the act of 1818, only superadds that the brevet shall, like the ordinary promotion, be subjected to the confirmation of the Senate, before the termination of the next session.

The brevet, in such case, is not an independent commission, like that of a supernumerary second lieutenant, (graduate of the military academy,) it is merely a legal incident to the ordinary commission, or previously acquired by the brevet of the distinguished officer.

It is evident that the sole object of the second section, act April 16, 1818, (Cross, page 202,) was to make brevets, like ordinary commissions, subject to the confirmation of the Senate. Prior to that time, the President alone conferred brevets.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Captain Wm. C. DeHart, 2d artillery.

If of the rank of Captain:

1st Lieutenant J. McDougall, 1st artillery, now aid-de-camp to General W.

Vera Cruz and its castle.

I beg to repeat, in a more methodical form, the views I have already had the honor to express (hastily and orally) to the Secretaries of War and the Navy, touching an expedition against the above places.

The government, or interior people of Mexico, seem, in war, to present to us this dilemma: "If you come with few, we will overwhelm you; if with many, you will overwhelm yourselves."

It is apprehended that this may be true of the line of operations upon the capital of Mexico from the Rio Grande, considering the great length of that line, and the deficiency of food and water on many of its links, some of them thirty, forty, or sixty miles in length.

To reach the heart of that country, from the gulf coast, there is a difficulty, in three quarters of the year, more formidable than the artificial defences of other countries; I allude to the vomito in all the ports, not to speak of the want of harbors for shipping, and of practicable roads leading into the interior, except at, and from, Vera Cruz.

Unless with a view to a second, or new line of operations, I regard the possession, by us, of the city of Vera Cruz and its castle, San Juan d'Ulloa, as a step towards compelling Mexico to sue for peace, as not likely to be worth one tenth of the lives, time, and money, which their capture would cost us. In other words, I am persuaded that our possession of those places would be of but very little more value than the present strict blockade of the port; unless, as intimated above, the capture should be promptly followed by a march thence, with a competent force, upon the capital. To conquer a peace, I am now persuaded that we must take the city of Mexico, or place it in imminent danger of capture, and mainly through the city of Vera Cruz.

To take the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa would, no doubt, be a virtual and prompt capture of the city lying under its guns. The reverse of the proposition would, probably, not be equally certain —I mean in any short time. The castle, after the loss of the city, might still hold out for many weeks, perhaps months, until compelled to surrender from the want of subsistence and water, unless earlier reduced by land and water batteries, escalade, &c.

It is believed that the castle, with a competent garrison, cannot be taken by water-batteries alone; or by the latter and an escalade, without a very heavy and disproportionate loss of life on the part of the assailants, besides a loss of time, which, by running into the season of the vomito, might quadruple the waste of life, and cause the invading army to lose a campaign.

For these reasons, it seems decidedly preferable to capture the city first, and by its means (shelter and guns) to attack the castle by land and water, including joint escalades—unless it should be found probable that the want of food and drinking water would lead to an early surrender.

To place the capture of both places beyond the probability of a failure, I suppose the following means to be indispensable:

The present blockading squadron re-inforced by many bomb-ketches—probably yet to be constructed.

An army of at least ten thousand men, consisting of cavalry (say) 2,000, artillery (say) 600, and the remainder infantry.

The whole of the artillery, and at least half of the cavalry and infantry, ought to be regular troops.

Scows and other boats, specially constructed for the purpose, sufficient to land, at once, at least 2,500 men, with two light batteries, would be needed. Cavalry and artillery horse would follow, after a foothold had been gained.

The number of cavalry I have named might be indispensable to aid in repelling any Mexican army in the field, seeking to save the city from an assault or a seige.

For this purpose, and to overcome opposition at the point of descent, I have assumed ten thousand men to be the minimum force of the invaders.

The point of descent might be any where beyond the reach of the enemy's guns at the city and the castle, including Alvarado; but, preferably, as near the city as practicable.

I suppose the expedition may be fitted out, and in position to make the descent, at the latest, by the beginning of the new year, leaving three months for the capture of the city and castle, and for the commencement of the march upon the capital before the season of yellow fever.

By that time, (say in the month of March,) that army might be augmented to about 20,000 men, for ulterior operations, by new regiments of regulars and volunteers.

There are, already, on the Rio Grande, and in Mexico, more surplus United States volunteers than would be needed for the expedition in the first instance, and I suppose that four or five thousand regulars might be in readiness by the first of December, (mostly drawn from the same quarter,) and still leave a threatening force at Monterey.

The junction of Brigadier General Wool with General Taylor, together with the recruits who may be enlisted for the regular army, in the next month, will, it is believed, give the required number for the above purposes.

All of which is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, October 27, 1846.

Supplement to the memoir of October 27th, on the prosecution of the war against Mexico.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

NOVEMBER 12, 1846.

Vera Cruz and its castle.—New line of operations, thence upon the capital.

On the 27th ultimo, I had the honor to submit a short memoir under this head. I beg to add a supplement.

Seeing the obstinacy of Mexico in declining all overtures to treat with us, and her present dogged silence, on the same subject, even after we have blockaded all her ports—again and again beaten or scattered her armies, and occupied many of her outer provinces—it is evident that, to compel her to sue for peace, we must modify our plan of invasion and prosecute it, with, if possible, redoubled means.

Time is always, at least, the second element of cost in war; sometimes the first. Nay, the shorter the war, the greater, in general, the economy of life.

Hence, among other reasons, a little war—a war prosecuted with inadequate means or vigor—is a greater evil than a big war. It discredits the party possessed of the superior means; it exhausts her finances, exhausts enthusiasm, and generally ends in a failure of all the objects proposed. Besides, in the present instance, neutral commerce begins to exhibit signs of impatience under the loss of an important mart; and interest, sympathy, or the chapter of accidents, may, if the blockade, &c., be long continued, raise up new parties against us. Such is, no doubt, the sustaining hope of Mexico.

Until recently, I had concurred in the opinion of others that Mexico might be compelled to propose reasonable terms of accommodation by the time we had conquered the advantages our arms have now obtained. Considering her political instability, and our want, at the time, of an adequate regular army, the plan of campaign assumed at the beginning of hostilities, seemed worthy of an experiment. It has failed, and further brilliant victories on a single line of operations towards the capital, may be as tedious as that route is difficult, and equally barren of peace. The fatuitous obstinacy of the enemy—now known to be in the inverse ratio of the prowess of her troops and financial means—yet remains to be subdued.

With a view to additional developements, I recur to the suggestions I have heretofore made.

The minimum force (10,000 men) then proposed, I still deem indispensable. Personally, I would be willing to attempt the capture of Vera Cruz, and through it, the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa, with perhaps a smaller army, aided by the blockading squadron off that coast. But I very much doubt whether the government ought to risk the expedition, under any commander, with a land force less than twelve, perhaps fifteen thousand men.

Considering the comparative short line from her central and more populous States to Vera Cruz, and that the war on the part of Mexico has evidently become national, no matter who may be the ruler, she certainly may be expected to assemble some twenty or thirty thousand men to garrison and to cover (in the field) Vera Cruz. This I am obliged to suppose she may do with greater ease than she placed seven or eight thousand troops at Monterey. She would, probably, have ample time to double that number at that point, if we admit her capacity to arm so many: 1. By getting early information of our intended embarkation; and, 2. By the possible delay of weeks, from heavy winds (northers) and surf, after the arrival of our transports off the points of descent. All these calculations (many of them probabilities) ought to be carefully considered before fitting out an expedition; the failure of which, from inadequate means, would be so fatal to the credit of the administration and the character of our country.

I have suggested, apparently, a large number of land troops for the operations on the coast. A small deduction, equal to the numben of men, say 1,200, that might for the first moments be drawn from the blockading squadron, may be made.

After effecting a landing, no doubt under a heavy fire, with, say, two or three thousand of our best troops, at once, in boats yet to be constructed; making good the foothold, until the remainder of the expedition could follow; after beating the covering army, the city would be the next object of attack. If not likely to be forced to surrender by cutting off its supplies, in some few weeks, an assault would be preferable with the loss of several hundred men, to a longer delay; the fall of the castle would necessarily soon follow that of the city.

I have said the principal object in those captures, would be to open a new and better line of operations upon the enemy's capital. To reach that point, or to place it in imminent danger of capture, an army of more than 20,000 men may be needed: 1. To beat, in the field and in passes, any accumulated force in the way; 2. To garrison any important points in the rear, to secure a free communication with Vera Cruz; and, 3. To make distant detachments in order to gather in, without long halts, necessary subsistence.

If 10,000 men be more than necessary for the capture of Vera Cruz, &c., so much the smaller reinforcement—say, by the month of May, at the latest—would be needed for the advance upon the capital.

I suppose the expedition of 10,000 men may be put afloat, at the latest, by the first of January. It seems that the vomito is not to be feared, on the coast, before May. The interval would allow us time to take the harbor of Vera Cruz, and to raise (by the aid of bounties) ten or twelve new regiments of regulars and to fill the ranks of the old, for operations in the interior.

If the reinforcements, with the necessary horses, guns, and means of transportation, arrive at Vera Cruz before the season of the vomito, the capital would be in peril, and probably, a peace early secured. Perhaps, before the arrival of that reinforcement, we might be able to advance and take Jalapa.

But it might be asked, how obtain the land force, regulars and volunteers, for the expedition, and have all afloat—eight, nine, or ten thousand men—by the first of January?

Including the troops under the immediate command of Brigadier General Wool, (ordered down upon Monterey,) there will soon be on Major General Taylor's line of operations upon Mexico, via the Rio Grande and Monterey, say 6,500 regulars and 13,500 twelve months' volunteers making a total of 20,000 men. We may leave upon that line, say, 2,500 regulars and 8,500 volunteers, total 11,000 men. With this force, all necessary garrisons in the rear may be kept up, and a column held at Monterey capable of advancing on the line of Saltillo and San Luis de Potosi, or of detaining in its front a large portion, or twice the number of the Mexican forces. It is certain that a garrison of Americans at Monterey, of four, or even three thousand men, would be able to defend it against a Mexican army of three or four times the number. But the moveable column at that point, out of the total of 11,000, might be carried up to at least 8,000. This, it may be assumed, would be fully sufficient to threaten and probably to take Saltillo, if not San Luis de Potosi, &c., &c., combined with the movement on the new line of operations from Vera Cruz.

Deducting the forces to remain on the old line of operations, as above, we shall have disposable, for the expedition against Vera Cruz, 4,000 regulars and 5,000 volunteers, which, with the men to be drawn from the blockading squadron, may give an aggregate capable of taking that city.

I have not included in the aggregate of 20,000 men, above, any volunteers sent down from Santa Fé to Chihuahua, which force, under the orders issued, would, of course, come upon the line of Camargo and Monterey; nor have I included the recruits, to be enlisted in time for the new expedition. Besides those additions, probably, more than sufficient to make good all intermediate casualties, perhaps two or three other companies of regulars (rifles and infantry) may be disposable for the two attacking columns.

To meet the double invasion, Mexico must either divide her forces and increase our chance of success on both lines, or double her forces on one, and leave the other comparatively open to our advance.

To divide our forces on the lower Rio Grande, and in the direction of Monterey and Saltillo, equitably and wisely between the two lines of operations upon the enemy's capital, the positive instructions of the government will be needed, besides the presence on the theatre of war of the highest in army rank. The latter, I beg to say, is the proper officer to carry out, on the spot, the instructions of government in respect to that division, and to direct the principal attacking column on and from Vera Cruz.

I need scarcely add that all preliminary arrangements should be commenced at once, such as taking up transport vessels for troops and supplies, with, say 1,000 horses for officers, cavalry, and artillery; the purchase and construction of boats for debarkation in the surf, &c., &c. Those arrangements may be made here, in great part, and within a few days, when I shall be ready to proceed to the Rio Grande, to complete those arrangements before the arrival of the transports.

All which is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

Memoranda for the Secretary of War.

The forces with General Taylor, including those under General Wool, and under orders to join the former, may be re-stated thus:

Regulars		7,000
Volunteers		13,500
		20,500
Nine additional regiments of volunteers, now to be called for, at 750 effective men each		6,750
		27,250
For the Vera Cruz expedition, say:
Regulars	4,000
Volunteers	10,000	14,000
Sailors and mariners	1,000
	15,000
Leaving for the line of Monterey, &c.		13,250

For transporting 14,000 men to Vera Cruz, with horses, artillery, stores, and boats, 50 ships, of from 500 to 750 tons each.

The boats of the blockading squadron are not, I learn, capable of putting ashore, at once, more than (say) 500 men—only one-half the number to be drawn from the fleet.

We should therefore require (say) 140 flat boats, to put ashore at once, say 5,000 men, with 8 pieces of light artillery.

Horses might follow in the second or third trip of the boats.

The form of these boats, &c., shall be determined by to-morrow, when orders may be given for their purchase, (probably,) construction. Colonel Stanton, chief quartermaster, is expected back to-night.

The ships need not (to avoid demurrage) be chartered until the troops are known to be nearly in position to embark.

But for a poton train, to pass rivers, orders should be given to-day.

Respectfully submitted,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

P. S. Orders should be given at once, to have in readiness to be shipped, ordnance and ordnance stores for the water expedition. This shall be attended to to-day.

W. S.

Head-quarters of the Army,
Washington, November 16, 1846.

For the Secretary of War.

I have hastily read Major General Taylor's despatches which arrived last night. I suppose that the war must go forward, and not be allowed to degenerate into a war like a peace, which would be as bad, or worse, than a peace like a war, involving an indefinite period of time and waste of money.

I have the honor to propose:

1. That for the expedition against Vera Cruz, 5,000 regulars and four small brigades of volunteers, making (say) 6,000 men, with two volunteer major generals, and four volunteer brigadier generals, be taken from the forces now under Major General Taylor, or under orders to join him, although he may thereby be, for a time, reduced to a strictly defensive condition at Monterey.

2. That to the 11,000 men (regulars and volunteers, as above) there be added (say) 4,000 of the new volunteers, the first that may arrive off the Rio Grande. These 4,000 volunteers to be divided among the four old brigades, taken as above, or be placed under two new volunteer brigadiers, to be appointed by the President, according to his pleasure.

3. That the new volunteers (nine regiments) be organized and despatched as rapidly as possible, and also the construction of the boats for embarkation and debarkation, in order that the whole expedition may be afloat and beyond the Rio Grande by the 15th of January, or, at the very latest, the 1st of February, so as to leave good time for operations on the gulf coast before the return of the yellow fever, to be apprehended in April, but always certain in May.

4. That, to enable Major General Taylor to resume offensive, or at least threatening, movements from Monterey upon Saltillo, San Luis de Potosi, &c., pending the expedition against Vera Cruz, if possible, to send him recruits to fill up the regular corps left with him, and also the remainder (say) 3,500 new volunteers of the nine regiments.

5. That, to give the certainty of greater activity and success to the two attacking columns, it is respectfully suggested that the President call for — additional regiments of volunteers.

6. That besides the brevets, understood to be designed for Brigadier General Worth, &c., that one be given to Colonel P. F. Smith, of the rifles, in order that he may be assigned accordingly, and placed in command of a brigade of the regulars in the expedition against Vera Cruz, whether his regiment make part of that expedition or not; and, for the command of another brigade of regulars in the same expedition, a brevet be also given to Colonel Totten, who has long since earned it, and has once been nominated for the rank of brigadier general by brevet.

7. That, further to aid the filling up the ranks of the regular regiments, the President authorize at once that enlistments be made for five years, or the war, provided it be terminated in less than five years. This provision would of itself (and its legality is undoubted) greatly aid the object in view, and on the meeting of Congress, it is hoped, that, as a yet more powerful stimulus, land or pecuniary bounties may be granted by Congress.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Notes suggesting topics to be embraced in the Secretary's instructions to General Scott, drawn up (in haste) at the request of the former.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

NOVEMBER 23, 1846.

Projet.

SIR: The President of the United States desires you to repair to the lower Rio Grande, in order to take upon yourself the general direction of the war against Mexico from this side of the continent, and more particularly to organize and conduct an expedition (with the co-operation of the navy) against the harbor of Vera Cruz.

I am pleased to learn from you that you have, in a very few days, already, through the general staff of the army here, laid a sufficient basis for the purposes with which you are charged, and that you now think it best to proceed at once to the southwest, in order to organize the largest number of troops that can be obtained in time for that most important expedition.

Of the nine new regiments of volunteers, recently called for by the President, the eight of foot may, it is hoped, begin to arrive, by water, off Point Isabel, say about the middle of January next, and the other regiment (Texan horse) be a little earlier on the Rio Grande. Such are your own calculations, and every effort shall be made by this department to push forward those volunteers, and the army recruits that may be enlisted in the meantime, as well as the transports, boats for embarkation and debarkation, arms, ordnance and ordnance stores, and, in general, all other supplies which you have designated or may call for.

From those regiments and detachments, or so many of them as may be up in season, and from the troops now under the command of Major General Taylor, or under orders to join him, the new expedition will be organized by you, taking care to leave with him a sufficient force to defend Monterey and to keep his line of communication open (say) to Camargo, and thence down the Rio Grande to its mouth.

You have estimated that the land force necessary to take Vera Cruz, and, through that city, the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa, with the efficient co-operation of our blockading squadron off that coast, at 10,000 men, as the minimum number; but with a strong recommendation in favor of 15,000, if so many can be obtained in time. The department (or President) concurs in those estimates, and it is hoped that you may, off Point Isabel, have the larger number organized and afloat in time to reach the point of descent by, if practicable, the 1st of February, or, at the latest, early in March, (adopting your own limits,) so as to allow a sufficient interval for capturing the city and castle before the usual season for the return of the yellow fever on that coast.

The President, respecting your judgment, is pleased with the assurance you have given that, although you think 15,000 land troops not an unreasonable force for the expedition in question, and that 10,000 ought to be considered the minimum number, if it can be obtained in time, you are yet of opinion that the expedition ought to go forward, even with the first 8,000 men, that may be embarked off Point Isabel, sooner than incur the danger of losing your men and object by the yellow fever, in consequence of waiting too long for either of the larger numbers that have been mentioned. It is then expected that you will proceed accordingly, leaving orders for such reinforcements to follow you as you may deem necessary.

A cordial and effective co-operation between the land and naval forces, according to the well established principles and usages in such cases, will be indispensable to success in the joint attack upon Vera Cruz and its castle. You are expected to do your utmost to conciliate such co-operation, and the President will, through the Navy Department, give the reciprocal instruction to the commander of our blockading squadron off that coast. It may be important to that joint service that you should early open a communication with the latter, and he will be duly prepared, as above, to respond to your inquiries or requests for assistance.

Your attention need scarcely to be called to the necessity of adopting early and frequent measures to obtain, if practicable, correct information of the enemy's positions, numbers, movements, and designs, near any theatre of military operations, and within the range of reinforcements and supplies. For necessary expenditures, under this head, your accounts will be allowed.

Frequent communications, embracing everything of interest to the service, will be expected from your head-quarters for the information of the government.

HOSTILITIES BY MEXICO.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

RELATIVE

To an invasion and commencement of hostilities by Mexico.

MAY 11, 1846.

Read, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The existing state of the relations between the United States and Mexico renders it proper that I should bring the subject to the consideration of Congress. In my message at the commencement of your present session, the state of these relations, the causes which led to the suspension of diplomatic intercourse between the two countries in March, 1845, and the long-continued and unredressed wrongs and injuries committed by the Mexican government on citizens of the United States, in their persons and property, were briefly set forth.

As the facts and opinions which were then laid before you were carefully considered, I cannot better express my present convictions of the condition of affairs up to that time, than by referring you to that communication.

The strong desire to establish peace with Mexico on liberal and honorable terms, and the readiness of this government to regulate and adjust our boundary, and other causes of difference with that power, on such fair and equitable principles as would lead to permanent relations of the most friendly nature, induced me, in September last, to seek the reopening of diplomatic relations between the two countries. Every measure adopted on our part had for its object the furtherance of these desired results. In communicating to Congress a succinct statement of the injuries which we had suffered from Mexico, and which have been accumulating during a period of more than twenty years, every expression that could tend to inflame the people of Mexico, or defeat or delay a pacific result, was carefully avoided. An envoy of the United States repaired to Mexico, with full powers to adjust every existing difference. But though present on the Mexican soil, by agreement between the two governments, invested with full powers, and bearing evidence of the most friendly dispositions, his mission has been unavailing. The Mexican government not only refused to receive him, or listen to his propositions, but, after a long continued series of menaces, have at last invaded our territory, and shed the blood of our fellow-citizens on our own soil.

It now becomes my duty to state more in detail the origin, progress, and failure of that mission. In pursuance of the instructions given in September last, an inquiry was made, on the thirteenth of October, 1845, in the most friendly terms, through our consul in Mexico, of the minister for foreign affairs, whether the Mexican government "would receive an envoy from the United States intrusted with full powers to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments;" with the assurance that "should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy would be immediately despatched to Mexico." The Mexican minister, on the fifteenth of October, gave an affirmative answer to this inquiry, requesting at the same time, that our naval force at Vera Cruz might be withdrawn, lest its continued presence might assume the appearance of menace and coercion pending the negotiations. This force was immediately withdrawn. On the 10th of November, 1845, Mr. John Slidell, of Louisiana, was commissioned by me as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico, and was entrusted with full powers to adjust both the questions of the Texas boundary and of indemnification to our citizens. The redress of the wrongs of our citizens naturally and inseparably blended itself with the question of boundary. The settlement of the one question, in any correct view of the subject, involves that of the other. I could not, for a moment, entertain the idea that the claims of our much injured and long suffering citizens, many of which had existed for more than twenty years, should be postponed or separated from the settlement of the boundary question.

Mr. Slidell arrived at Vera Cruz on the 30th of November, and was courteously received by the authorities of that city. But the government of General Herrera was then tottering to its fall. The revolutionary party had seized upon the Texas question to effect or hasten its overthrow. Its determination to restore friendly relations with the United States, and to receive our minister, to negotiate for the settlement of this question, was violently assailed, and was made the great theme of denunciation against it. The government of General Herrera, there is good reason to believe, was sincerely desirous to receive our minister; but it yielded to the storm raised by its enemies, and on the 21st of December refused to accredit Mr. Slidell upon the most frivolous pretexts. These are so fully and ably exposed in the note of Mr. Slidell, of the 24th of December last, to the Mexican minister of foreign relations, herewith transmitted, that I deem it unnecessary to enter into further detail on this portion of the subject.

Five days after the date of Mr. Slidell's note, General Herrera yielded the government to General Paredes, without a struggle, and on the 30th of December resigned the presidency. This revolution was accomplished solely by the army, the people having taken little part in the contest; and thus the supreme power in Mexico passed into the hands of a military leader.

Determined to leave no effort untried to effect an amicable adjustment with Mexico, I directed Mr. Slidell to present his credentials to the government of General Paredes, and ask to be officially received by him. There would have been less ground for taking this step had General Paredes come into power by regular constitutional succession. In that event his administration would have been considered but a mere constitutional continuance of the government of General. Herrera, and the refusal of the latter to receive our minister would have been deemed conclusive, unless an intimation had been given by General Paredes of his desire to reverse the decision of his predecessor. But the government of General Paredes owes its existence to a military revolution, by which the subsisting constitutional authorities had been subverted. The form of government was entirely changed, as well as all the high functionaries by whom it was administered.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Slidell, in obedience to my direction, addressed a note to the Mexican minister of foreign relations, under date of the 1st of March last, asking to be received by that government in the diplomatic character to which he had been appointed. This minister, in his reply under date of the 12th of March, reiterated the arguments of his predecessor, and, in terms that may be considered as giving just grounds of offence to the government and people of the United States, denied the application of Mr. Slidell. Nothing, therefore, remained for our envoy but to demand his passports, and return to his own country.

Thus the government of Mexico, though solemnly pledged by official acts in October last to receive and accredit an American envoy, violated their plighted faith, and refused the offer of a peaceful adjustment of our difficulties. Not only was the offer rejected, but the indignity of its rejection was enhanced by the manifest breach of faith in refusing to admit the envoy, who came because they had bound themselves to receive him. Nor can it be said that the offer was fruitless from the want of opportunity of discussing it—our envoy was present on their own soil. Nor can it be ascribed to a want of sufficient powers—our envoy had full powers to adjust every question of difference. Nor was there room for complaint that our propositions for settlement were unreasonable—permission was not even given our envoy to make any proposition whatever. Nor can it be objected that we, on our part, would not listen to any reasonable terms of their suggestion—the Mexican government refused all negotiation, and have made no proposition of any kind.

In my message at the commencement of the present session, I informed you that, upon the earnest appeal both of the congress and convention of Texas, I had ordered an efficient military force to take a position "between the Nueces and the Del Norte." This had become necessary, to meet a threatened invasion of Texas by the Mexican forces, for which extensive military preparations had been made. The invasion was threatened solely because Texas had determined, in accordance with a solemn resolution of the Congress of the United States, to annex herself to our Union; and, under these circumstances, it was plainly our duty to extend our protection over her citizens and soil.

This force was concentrated at Corpus Christi, and remained there until after I had received such information from Mexico as rendered it probable, if not certain, that the Mexican government would refuse to receive our envoy.

Meantime Texas, by the final action of our Congress, had become an integral part of our Union. The Congress of Texas, by its act of December 19, 1836, had declared the Rio del Norte to be the boundary of that republic. Its jurisdiction had been extended and exercised beyond the Nueces. The country between that river and the Del Norte had been represented in the congress and in the convention of Texas; had thus taken part in the act of annexation itself; and is now included within one of our congressional districts. Our own Congress had, moreover, with great unanimity, by the act approved December 31, 1845, recognized the country beyond the Nueces as a part of our territory, by including it within our own revenue system; and a revenue officer, to reside within that district, has been appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It became, therefore, of urgent necessity to provide for the defence of that portion of our country. Accordingly, on the 13th of January last, instructions were issued to the general in command of these troops to occupy the left bank of the Del Norte. This river, which is the southwestern boundary of the State of Texas, is an exposed frontier; from this quarter invasion was threatened; upon it, and in its immediate vicinity, in the judgment of high military experience, are the proper stations for the protecting forces of the government. In addition to this important consideration, several others occurred to induce this movement. Among these are the facilities afforded by the ports at Brazos Santiago and the mouth of the Del Norte, for the reception of supplies by sea; the stronger and more healthful military positions; the convenience for obtaining a ready and a more abundant supply of provisions, water, fuel, and forage; and the advantages which are afforded by the Del Norte in forwarding supplies to such posts as may be established in the interior and upon the Indian frontier.

The movement of the troops to the Del Norte was made by the commanding general, under positive instructions to abstain from all aggressive acts towards Mexico or Mexican citizens, and to regard the relations between that republic and the United States as peaceful, unless she should declare war, or commit acts of hostility indicative of a state of war. He was specially directed to protect private property, and respect personal rights.

The army moved from Corpus Christi on the eleventh of March, and on the twenty-eighth of that month arrived on the left bank of the Del Norte, opposite to Matamoras, where it encamped on a commanding position, which has since been strengthened by the erection of field works. A depôt has also been established at Point Isabel, near the Brazos Santiago, thirty miles in rear of the encampment. The selection of his position was necessarily confided to the judgment of the general in command.

The Mexican forces at Matamoras assumed a belligerent attitude, and, on the twelfth of April, General Ampudia, then in command, notified General Taylor to break up his camp within twenty-four hours, and to retire beyond the Nueces river, and, in the event of his failure to comply with these demands, announced that arms, and arms alone, must decide the question. But no open act of hostility was committed until the twenty-fourth of April. On that day, General Arista, who had succeeded to the command of the Mexican forces, communicated to General Taylor that "he considered hostilities commenced, and should prosecute them." A party of dragoons, of sixty-three men and officers, were on the same day despatched from the American camp up the Rio del Norte, on its left bank, to ascertain whether the Mexican troops had crossed, or were preparing to cross, the river, "became engaged with a large body of these troops, and, after a short affair, in which some sixteen were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender."

The grievous wrongs perpetrated by Mexico upon our citizens throughout a long period of years remain unredressed; and solemn treaties, pledging her public faith for this redress, have been disregarded. A government either unable or unwilling to enforce the execution of such treaties, fails to perform one of its plainest duties.

Our commerce with Mexico has been almost annihilated. It was formerly highly beneficial to both nations; but our merchants have been deterred from prosecuting it by the system of outrage and extortion which the Mexican authorities have pursued against them, whilst their appeals through their own government for indemnity have been made in vain. Our forbearance has gone to such an extreme as to be mistaken in its character. Had we acted with vigor in repelling the insults and redressing the injuries inflicted by Mexico at the commencement, we should doubtless have escaped all the difficulties in which we are now involved.

Instead of this, however, we have been exerting our best efforts to propitiate her good will. Upon the pretext that Texas, a nation as independent as herself, thought proper to unite its destinies with our own, she has affected to believe that we have severed her rightful territory, and in official proclamations and manifestoes has repeatedly threatened to make war upon us, for the purpose of reconquering Texas. In the meantime, we have tried every effort at reconciliation. The cup of forbearance had been exhausted, even before the recent information from the frontier of the Del Norte; but now, after reiterated menaces, Mexico has passed the boundary of the United States, has invaded our territory, and shed American blood upon the American soil. She has proclaimed that hostilities have commenced, and that the two nations are now at war.

As war exists, and, notwithstanding all our efforts to avoid it, exists by the act of Mexico herself, we are called upon by every consideration of duty and patriotism to vindicate with decision the honor, the rights, and the interests of our country.

Anticipating the possibility of a crisis like that which has arrived, instructions were given in August last, "as a precautionary measure" against invasion, or threatened invasion, authorizing General Taylor, if the emergency required, to accept volunteers, not from Texas only, but from the States of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky; and corresponding letters were addressed to the respective governors of those States. These instructions were repeated; and, in January last, soon after the incorporation of "Texas into our union of States," General Taylor was further "authorized by the President to make a requisition upon the executive of that State for such of its militia force as may be needed to repel invasion, or to secure the country against apprehended invasion." On the second day of March he was again reminded, "in the event of the approach of any considerable Mexican force, promptly and efficiently to use the authority with which he was clothed to call to him such auxiliary force as he might need." War actually existing, and our territory having been invaded, General Taylor, pursuant to authority vested in him by my direction, has called on the governor of Texas for four regiments of State troops—two to be mounted, and two to serve on foot; and on the governor of Louisiana for four regiments of infantry, to be sent to him as soon as practicable.

In further vindication of our rights, and defence of our territory, I invoke the prompt action of Congress to recognize the existence of the war, and to place at the disposition of the Executive the means of prosecuting the war with vigor, and thus hastening the restoration of peace. To this end I recommend that authority should be given to call into the public service a large body of volunteers, to serve for not less than six or twelve months, unless sooner discharged. A volunteer force is, beyond question, more efficient than any other description of citizen soldiers; and it is not to be doubted that a number far beyond that required would readily rush to the field upon the call of their country. I further recommend that a liberal provision be made for sustaining our entire military force and furnishing it with supplies and munitions of war.

The most energetic and prompt measures, and the immediate appearance in arms of a large and overpowering force, are recommended to Congress as the most certain and efficient means of bringing the existing collision with Mexico to a speedy and successful termination.

In making these recommendations, I deem it proper to declare that it is my anxious desire not only to terminate hostilities speedily, but to bring all matters in dispute between this government and Mexico to an early and amicable adjustment; and, in this view, I shall be prepared to renew negotiations whenever Mexico shall be ready to receive propositions, or to make propositions of her own.

I transmit herewith a copy of the correspondence between our envoy to Mexico and the Mexican minister for foreign affairs; and so much of the correspondence between that envoy and the Secretary of State, and between the Secretary of War and the general in command on the Del Norte, as is necessary to a full understanding of the subject.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 17, 1845.

Information recently received at this department, both from yourself and others, renders it probable that the Mexican government may now be willing to restore the diplomatic relations between the two countries. At the time of their suspension, General Almonte was assured of the desire felt by the President to adjust amicably every cause of complaint between the governments, and to cultivate the kindest and most friendly relations between the sister republics. He still continues to be animated by the same sentiments. It was his duty to place the country in a condition successfully to resist the threatened invasion of Texas by Mexico, and this has been accomplished. He desires, however, that all existing differences should be terminated amicably by negotiation and not by the sword. He is anxious to preserve peace, although prepared for war.

Actuated by these sentiments, the President has directed me to instruct you, in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, intrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments. Should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy will be immediately despatched to Mexico.

If the President were disposed to stand upon a mere question of etiquette, he would wait until the Mexican government, which had suspended the diplomatic relations between the two countries, should ask that they may be restored. But his desire is so strong to terminate the present unfortunate state of our relations with that republic, that he has consented to waive all ceremony and take the initiative.

So soon as you shall have received the answer of that government, you will communicate a copy of it, without delay, by some safe opportunity, to F. M. Dimond, esq., our consul at Vera Cruz. You will also transmit a copy to this department. It is of great consequence that you should use as much despatch as possible in executing this important commission. The future course of this government may, and probably will, depend upon the answer which you may receive.

I need scarcely warn you to preserve the most inviolable secrecy in regard to your proceedings, making no communication to any person, with the exception of Dr. Parrott, not indispensable to the accomplishment of the object. There will be a vessel-of-war at Vera Cruz, ready to receive your despatch for this department, and to convey it to the United States with the least possible delay.

I shall transmit this despatch, under an unsealed cover, but with the strictest injunctions of secrecy, to Mr. Dimond, as it is deemed advisable that he should be acquainted with its contents.

The President relies with confidence on your zeal and ability in executing the important duty committed to your charge.

I am, &c.

CONSULATE OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA,
Mexico, October 17, 1845.

I had the honor, on the 10th instant, of receiving your communication of the 17th ultimo. * * * * On Saturday evening, the 11th instant, I obtained a confidential interview with the minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic, in relation to the important charge which his excellency the President of the United States was pleased to confide to me, and am happy now to have it in my power to advise my government of a favorable result; the proceedings had with the Mexican government in this affair will be seen by reference to the enclosed documents, Nos. 1 and 2.

No. 1 is a copy of a confidential communication addressed by this consulate to his excellency the minister of foreign relations of the Mexican government; and No. 2 is a copy of the said minister's answer to said communication.

When I handed the aforesaid communications to his excellency on Monday the 13th instant, I requested that an answer might be given as early as possible, and desired to be informed at what time it would likely be given. He promised that on Wednesday evening the 15th, and requested at that time a private interview with me, to be at eight o'clock in the evening, (not at the department, he said, but at his private dwelling,) in order, as he said, that the affair might be kept as close and as little exposed to public view as possible, to avoid suspicion. At the time appointed, I went to his house; he (being alone in his study) received me cordially and politely, and told me the answer was ready, and only wanted his signature, which he placed to it in my presence, stating, at the same time, that he would accompany the answer with some verbal, frank, and confidential explanations; which, after reading to me the answer, he did, in the following manner:

He said that the Mexican government, notwithstanding it felt itself very much aggrieved and offended by the acts of that of the United States, in relation to the affairs of Texas, yet it would appear to be out of place to express these feelings in a communication of this nature; and that, if the government had but itself to consult, the expression of these feelings would have been left out of the communication, as they only tend to irritate; but that I knew, as well as he did, that governments like ours must endeavor to reconcile the feelings and opinions of the people to their public acts; and that I also knew, very well, that a strong opposition were daily calling the attention of the public to, and scrutinizing and condemning every act of, the government, and that the government endeavored to give them as little pretext as possible; and, therefore, wished me to make this explanation to my government.

And that, in relation to the qualities he had recommended to be possessed by the person to be sent out by the government of the United States for the settlement of existing differences, it was the wish of the Mexican government, and would be for the good of both countries that a person suitable in every respect should be sent, endued with the necessary qualities, and not one against whom the government or people of Mexico should, unfortunately, entertain a fixed prejudice, which would be a great obstacle in the way to an amicable adjustment of differences.

* And that, in order that the coming of the commissioner might not have the appearance of being forced on them by threat, his government wished the naval force of the United States, now in sight of Vera Cruz, should retire from that place before his arrival; and requested that I should inform his government, by a communication, as soon as I should know the fact, of their having left. These things he repeated more than once, and with the appearance of a great deal of earnestness, and enjoined it upon me not to fail to advise my government; and that he communicated these things to me, not as a minister, but as an individual and friend, who wished for the good exit of the contemplated mission.

Notwithstanding my communication to the Mexican government of the 13th instant was of the most confidential character, as well as all the proceedings in relation to the affair, and this at the request of the Mexican minister, who himself enjoined secrecy upon me, and promised the strictest adherence to it, on his part,

* * * * * *

So you will be able to see what reliance can be placed on the most solemn injunctions of secrecy, as far as this government is concerned.

Mr. Black to Mr. Peña y Peña.

[Confidential.]

Consulate of the United States,
Mexico, October 13, 1845.

The undersigned, consul of the United States of America, in a confidential interview with his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, which took place on the evening of the 11th instant, had the honor to advise his excellency that he, the undersigned, had received a communication from the Secretary of State of the United States; and having, in that interview, made known to his excellency the substance of said communication, which contained a reiteration of the sentiments which, at the time of the suspension of the diplomatic relations between the two countries, had been expressed to General Almonte, and which were now renewed, and offered to the consideration of the Mexican government.

His excellency having heard, and considered with due attention, the statement read from the communication aforesaid, and having stated that, as the diplomatic relations between the two governments had been and were still suspended, the present interview could and should have no other character than that of a confidential meeting, which was assented to, and only considered in that light by the undersigned.

His excellency was then pleased to request that the undersigned might, in the same confidential manner, communicate in writing what had thus been made known verbally. In conformity to that request, the undersigned has now the honor to transcribe, herewith, that part of the communication of the Secretary of State of the United States referred to, and is in the following words, viz: "At the time of the suspension of the diplomatic relations between the two countries, General Almonte was assured of the desire felt by the President to adjust amicably every cause of complaint between the governments, and to cultivate the kindest and most friendly relations between the sister republics. He still continues to be animated by the same sentiments. He desires that all existing differences should be terminated amicably by negotiation, and not by the sword.

"Actuated by these sentiments, the President has directed me to instruct you, in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, intrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments. Should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy will be immediately despatched to Mexico."

The undersigned can assure his excellency, that it is with the most heartfelt satisfaction he sees, in the preceding proposition on the part of the President of the United States, (notwithstanding the preparations for war on both sides,) that a door is still left open for conciliation, whereby all existing differences may be amicably and equitably adjusted, and the honor of both nations preserved inviolate, and their friendly relations restored and fixed upon a firmer foundation than they unfortunately have hitherto been; and the undersigned has reason to believe that they will not be blinded to their mutual interest, nor suffer themselves to become the victims of the machinations of their mutual enemies.

If the President of the United States had been disposed to stand upon a mere question of etiquette, he would have waited until the Mexican government, which had suspended the diplomatic relations between the two countries, should have asked that they might be restored; but his desire is so strong to terminate the present unfortunate state of our relations with this republic, that he has even consented to waive all ceremony, and take the initiative.

In view of what is hereinbefore set forth, the undersigned is fully persuaded that the Mexican government will not misconstrue the benevolent sentiments of the President of the United States, nor mistake his motives.

His excellency will be pleased to return an answer with as little delay as possible, and, in the meantime, the undersigned avails himself of the occasion to renew to his excellency, Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, the assurances of his distinguished consideration and personal regard.

JOHN BLACK.

[Enclosure No. 2.—Translation.]

Mr. Peña y Peña to Mr. Black.

Sir: I have informed my government of the private conference which took place between you and myself on the 11th instant, and have submitted to it the confidential letter which you, in consequence of, and agreeably to what was then said, addressed to me yesterday. In answer, I have to say to you, that, although the Mexican nation is deeply injured by the United States, through the acts committed by them in the department of Texas, which belongs to this nation, my government is disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States, who may come to this capital with full powers from his government to settle the present dispute in a peaceable, reasonable, and honorable manner; thus giving a new proof that, even in the midst of its injuries, and of its firm decision to exact adequate reparation for them, it does not repel with contumely the measure of reason and peace to which it is invited by its adversary.

As my government believes this invitation to be made in good faith, and with the real desire that it may lead to a favorable conclusion, it also hopes that the commissioner will be a person endowed with the qualities proper for the attainment of this end; that his dignity, prudence, and moderation, and the discreetness and reasonableness of his proposals, will contribute to calm as much as possible the just irritation of the Mexicans; and, in fine, that the conduct of the commissioner on all points may be such as to persuade them that they may obtain satisfaction for their injuries, through the means of reason and peace, and without being obliged to resort to those of arms and force.

What my government requires above all things, is, that the mission of the commissioner of the United States, and his reception by us, should appear to be always absolutely frank, and free from every sign of menace or coercion. And thus, Mr. Consul, while making known to your government the disposition on the part of that of Mexico to receive the commissioner, you should impress upon it, as indispensable, the previous recall of the whole naval force now lying in sight of our port of Vera Cruz. Its presence would degrade Mexico, while she is receiving the commissioner, and would justly subject the United States to the imputation of contradicting by acts the vehement desire of conciliation, peace and friendship, which is professed and asserted by words.

I have made known to you, Mr. Consul, with the brevity which you desired, the disposition of my government; and in so doing, I have the satisfaction to assure you of my consideration and esteem for you personally.

MANUEL DE LA PEÑA Y PEÑA.

Consul of the United States at Mexico.

Consulate of the U. S. of America,
Mexico, October 28, 1845.

I had the honor of addressing you on the 17th and 18th instant, in answer to your communication of the 17th ultimo, enclosing to you the answer of the Mexican government to my communication of the 13th instant. * * * * * *

* * * * * * * * *

The Mexican government is very anxious to know when they may expect the envoy from the United States; and, also, that I may soon be able to give it the information of the American squadron having retired from the port of Vera Cruz.

We have rumors every day that a revolution is shortly to take place, but, as yet, things are quiet. Let this go as it will, I think an arrangement is safe, as it has the sanction of the Mexican congress in secret session.

Consulate of the U. S. of America,
Mexico, November 4, 1845.

A revolution is still talked of here, but the government is using all its vigilance to prevent it. It has its suspicions of General Parades, and has sent orders for him to break up his cantonment at San Luis, and to disperse the troops to different parts of the republic. He must either obey this order, which will leave him without command, or pronounce against the government.

If he pronounces, it will be for a military government, and, in that case, the federalists will join the government, and Parades will be put down. I wish this government may stand, as I think it well disposed to arrange all matters in dispute with the United States. I hope a minister will soon arrive to commence and secure the negotiation. There should be no delay.

You will please to find enclosed copies of various documents, from No. 1 to No. 4 inclusive, as follows, viz:

No. 1.—Copy of a confidential communication of the 29th October, from this consulate to the minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic, advising of the withdrawal of the naval force of the United States from before Vera Cruz, and enclosing a copy of Commodore Connor's letter to F. M. Dimond, esq., United States consul, Vera Cruz, relating to the same.

No. 2.—Copy of Commodore Connor's letter as aforesaid.

No. 3.—Copy of a confidential communication of the 31st ultimo, received from the minister of foreign affairs, relating to the appearance of a vessel in the bay of Manzanillo, on the Pacific, said to be a United States armed vessel, &c.

No. 4.—Copy of the reply of this consulate to the above communication, dated the 3d instant.

On the morning of the 30th ultimo, Mr. Monasterio, the chief clerk of the foreign department of this government, called at this consulate, stating that he had come on the part of his excellency the minister, to say he had received my note of the 29th ultimo, and should answer it in writing; but, in the meantime, he had to communicate to me a disagreeable occurrence which had taken place at the port of Manzanillo; that an American armed vessel had entered the bay and had very much alarmed the authorities of that place, which news the government had received direct by express; and he offered, if I would call at the department, to show me the official account, that I might know the particulars. In the course of the same morning I called as requested, when I found that the name of the vessel did not correspond to any of our armed vessels. I told him we had no vessel of that name in our navy. He replied that there might be a mistake in the name, but that it was an armed vessel of the United States. I then told him if his excellency the minister would give me a statement, in a confidential communication, I would see what could be done, and answer him, the result of which you have in Nos. 3 and 4.

CONSULATE OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA,
Mexico, October 29, 1845.

The undersigned, consul of the United States of America, has the honor to advise his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, in view of the confidential note of his excellency of the 15th instant, in answer to that of the undersigned of the 13th, and also of the verbal request that the undersigned might inform his excellency of the occurrence of the withdrawal of the American squadron from before Vera Cruz whenever that event should take place. In compliance with that request, the undersigned has the honor to transmit herewith to his excellency a copy of a communication addressed by Commodore Connor, commander of the American squadron before Vera Cruz, to the American consul, F. M. Dimond, esq., of that place, by which his excellency will see that the wishes of the Mexican government have been, in this respect, fully and promptly complied with.

In communicating this to the Mexican government, the undersigned avails himself of the occasion to renew to his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, the assurance of his distinguished consideration and personal esteem.

Commodore Connor to Mr. Dimond.

U. S. SHIP FALMOUTH, OFF SACRIFICIOS,
October 23, 1845.

By the letter of Mr. Black, which you were kind enough to send me this morning, I learn that the proposition to enter into negotiation, made by our government to that of this country, had been accepted. There appears to exist, on the part of this government, some fear lest they should be accused of being forced into this measure by the hostile attitude of the United States.

Being fully aware that our government has had no intention of threatening this country, but, on the contrary, has always been actuated by a sincere desire to heal existing differences in a manner honorable to both nations, I believe that I shall best contribute to such an arrangement by withdrawing our naval force from before Vera Cruz.

OCTOBER 31, 1845.

MY DEAR SIR: Although this is not to be understood, in any way, as an intimation of the re-opening of the friendly relations at present interrupted between Mexico and the United States, I find myself compelled, by an occurrence which has recently taken place on our coast of the Pacific, to address myself to you, inasmuch as this is demanded by the very nature of the occurrence, and the actual state which at this day is preserved by both governments.

It will be within the knowledge of the consul, that a sloop-of-war of his nation, named the "Palomita," is cruising in the Pacific, for this vessel has entered the bay of the port of Manzanillo, and a captain and a lieutenant colonel have landed from her, who have made known that said corvette is commanded by Mr. Maist Possets; that she carries twenty-two guns, and a crew of two hundred and thirteen men. The result being, that the local authorities took alarm, and placed themselves in a posture of defence, as was natural on the presence of a ship-of-war, and from the conduct of her commander.

The government of Mexico has given its orders, for the purpose of suspending for the present any act of hostility against the United States, and limits itself to the defensive, awaiting the issue of the negotiation proposed by the government of the United States through the consul; and this proceeding demands, with still greater reason, that, on the part of the one which has taken the initiative in that negotiation, the same preventive orders should be issued to the respective commanders in the navy of the United States, in order that, whilst the present statuo quo shall last, no vessel of war of its navy shall present itself with hostile display in any of our ports on either coast, or do any other act which may awaken apprehension in the local authorities or inhabitants of those coasts.

This is very conformable to the principles of justice; and it will be an evidence of proceeding in good faith, and with sincerity towards the pacific arrangement of the pending questions between Mexico and the United States.

I remain, with the greatest consideration.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Mexico, November 3, 1845.

The undersigned, consul of the United States of America, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the confidential note of his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, dated the 31st ultimo, in which the attention of the undersigned is called to a disagreeable occurrence which has taken place at the port of Manzanillo, by the entry of a vessel in the bay of said port, said to be an armed vessel of the United States, called the "Palomita;" that a captain and lieutenant colonel had disembarked, from whom it was ascertained that the said vessel (corbeta) was commanded by Maist Possets, and armed with twenty-two guns, and two hundred and thirteen men, and that the authorities of that place became alarmed, and put themselves in a state of defence in consequence of the appearance of said vessel and the conduct of its commander.

The undersigned regrets much that any such occurrence has happened to give uneasiness and alarm to the local authorities of Manzanillo, and that the attention of the Mexican government at this peculiar juncture in the affairs of the two countries should be occupied and disturbed by accounts of this nature. But the undersigned has reason to believe that, as far as the United States and its authorities are concerned, the affair has been misreported. As, in the first place, the United States has no vessel of any description called the Palomita, nor the word corresponding to it in English, neither is there an officer in the whole United States navy, from a midshipman up to a commodore, by the name of Maist Possets, nor a vessel of the rate of twenty-two guns. All these corroborating circumstances go to show that the said vessel cannot be an armed vessel of the United States as reported, in relation to which the Mexican government will no doubt soon be undeceived by the same authorities from whom it has received its information.

His excellency is further pleased to state that the Mexican government has given orders to suspend all hostile acts against the United States for the present, and that this requires that like preventive orders be given by the other side to the respective commanders of the United States navy, during the present "statua quo," for United States vessels of war not to present themselves in any of the Mexican ports, either of the north or south, with hostile show, nor do any other act which might inspire the authorities and inhabitants of the said coasts with suspicion.

The undersigned would here observe, that the government and people of Mexico have reason to believe that the government of the United States is far from entertaining any hostile intentions towards Mexico, as is fully demonstrated by the late conciliatory measures moved and adopted by it towards the latter; and his excellency must be satisfied, from what has already transpired, that the undersigned is well disposed to do everything in his power to accommodate things to the wishes of the Mexican government, as far as is consistent with a discharge of his duty to that of his own; and he would be as careful not to offend nor wound the rights and honor of Mexico, as he would be to defend and sustain the rights and honor of his own country.

With reference to his confidential note of the 29th ultimo, the undersigned avails himself of the occasion to renew to his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, the assurance of his distinguished consideration and personal regard.

No. 5.

Mr. Black to Mr. Buchanan.

[Extract.]

Consulate of the United States of America,
Mexico, December 18, 1845.

On Wednesday, the 3d instant, I received a letter from our consul at Vera Cruz, dated the 29th of November, informing me that a vessel had just arrived at Sacrificios, on board of which was the Hon. John Slidell, who had sent for him, the said consul, to come down to that place, as he wished to leave Vera Cruz for this capital by that night's diligence, but he, the consul, was of opinion he would not be able to leave until the next stage.

On the receipt of this letter I called at the foreign department of this government, to see the minister of foreign affairs, and was informed by Mr. Monasterio, the chief clerk, that the minister was up stairs with the President, and that he was going up to see him, and would advise him of my wish. He soon returned, and requested me to go up, as the minister wished to see me. I went up to the President's quarters, when the minister came out into the antechamber and met me, and accosted me, saying that the government was informed that there was an arrival at Vera Cruz from the United States, bringing out a commissioner, by which the government was taken by surprise, and asked me who could this commissioner be, and what had he come for? I told him I did not know, but I presumed it was the envoy which the Mexican government had agreed to receive from the government of the United States; all the information which I had upon the subject was, that the consul of the United States at Vera Cruz had advised me, in a letter under date of the 29th of November, that the Hon. John Slidell had just arrived at Sacrificios, and wished to leave Vera Cruz for this capital by the first diligence, and that I was under the impression that this person was an envoy from the government of the United States to that of Mexico, as we had good reason to expect one about this time. He said that ought not to be; the government did not expect an envoy from the United States until January, as they were not prepared to receive him; and he desired, if possible, that he would not come to the capital, nor even disembark at this time, and that I should endeavor to prevent his doing so, as his appearance in the capital at this time might prove destructive to the government, and thus defeat the whole affair. You know the opposition are calling us traitors, for entering into this arrangement with you. I told him I regretted this had not been known in time, as the envoy would be now on his way to this capital, and that the Mexican government had set no time for his arrival, and it was to be presumed that they would be ready to receive him whenever he arrived. I know, he said, there was no time set; but from the conversations which I have had with yourself, and what I have heard from others, I had good reason to believe that the envoy would not have been appointed by your government, or, at least, not have started on his mission, until after the meeting of Congress; which, he said, he understood would not meet until the first of this month.

He said that the government itself was well disposed, and ready to proceed in the negotiation, but that if the affair was commenced now, it would endanger its existence; that the government were preparing the thing, collecting the opinion and consent of the departments, which they expected to have finished by January, and then they would be able to proceed in the affair with more security; that the government were afraid that the appearance of the envoy at this time would produce a revolution against it, which might terminate in its destruction.

Legation of the United States of America,

By my letter of 30th ultimo, I had the honor to inform you of my safe arrival at Vera Cruz. I reached this city on Saturday the 6th instant, having been detained two days by the stoppage of the mail coach at Jalapa. At Puebla, I was met by our consul, Mr. Black, who in some measure prepared me for the delays and difficulties which I should have to contend with, in placing myself in relation with this government, by informing me, that in a private interview which he had had with the minister of foreign affairs, Mr. Manuel de la Peña y Peña, for the purpose of announcing to him my arrival at Vera Cruz, that functionary had manifested great surprise that a minister should have presented himself so soon, and intimated that the state of things was such that he should have preferred less promptness on the part of our government. On Monday the 8th instant, I addressed to the minister of foreign affairs a note, in the usual form, announcing my arrival in the capital, accompanying it with a copy of my letter of credence and your official communication to the minister of foreign affairs, and asking to be informed when and where I should be admitted to present my credentials to the President. Of this note I annex a copy. It was handed by Mr. Black to the minister, who assured him that I should have an answer on the following Wednesday; and requested him to call and receive it On that day, however, Mr. Black received a note from the secretary of the minister, stating that it was necessary to submit the matter to the council of government, and that he would be advised when the answer would be given. Mr. Black has since had another interview with Mr. Peña, and has prepared, at my request, a statement of what passed between them, which I send you.

This council of government is a permanent body of a very anomalous character, composed of persons not removable by the executive; its functions, so far as I can understand them, are, with a few exceptions, and these not applying to foreign relations, merely advisory, and no obligation exists on the part of the executive, but in the exceptional cases, to consult the council. The council was not consulted when the executive determined to renew diplomatic relations with the United States, and a recourse to it at this moment was altogether gratuitous. It is a notorious fact, that several of the members of this council are not only in open and violent opposition to the present administration, but are endeavoring to get up a revolutionary movement to overthrow it; and it is generally understood that a majority of them are unfavorably disposed towards it.

The impression here among the best informed persons is, that while the president and his cabinet are really desirous to enter frankly upon a negotiation which would terminate all their difficulties with the United States, * * * * *

This at least is certain; the administration, in referring a matter entirely within their own competence, to a body whose decision they cannot control, and upon whose sympathies they cannot rely, manifest either a weakness or a bad faith, which renders the prospect of any favorable issue to negotiations with them, at best, very problematical.

The deliberations of the council, although ostensibly confidential, soon became known out of doors. It has been twice or thrice convoked for the purpose of deliberating upon my reception, and it is perfectly well known that it has advised against it. The most absurd reasons have there been advanced against my recognition, so absurd, indeed, that they would appear scarcely credible to any one not upon the spot. * * * * * * *

The objections started were, that my credentials did not appear to have been given with the sanction of Congress; that my appointment had not been confirmed by the Senate; that this government had agreed only to receive a commissioner, and that, consequently, the appointment of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary was not in accordance with the letter of the 15th October from the minister of foreign affairs to Mr. Black; that this letter only contemplated negotiations upon the subject of Texas; and finally, to cap the climax of absurdity, that my powers were not sufficient. I hope, before the closing of this despatch, to obtain information of the precise grounds upon which the council finally decided to recommend that I should not be received.

Having received no reply to my note of the 8th instant, and no assurance of the time when I might expect one, I addressed another on the 15th instant, (a copy of which you will find herewith,) stating my desire to communicate speedily with my government and requesting to know when I might expect an answer.

I have, while writing this, received a communication from the minister of foreign relations, of which I shall furnish you a copy. You will observe that it is dated yesterday, although I have no doubt that it was written after the final negative decision of the council, which was rendered on that day. You will find it evasive and unsatisfactory, intimating difficulties respecting my credentials, and that negotiations were, by the terms of his letter to our consul, to be confined to the subject of Texas. It concludes with an assurance that I shall be informed, at the earliest moment, of the decision of the council, to whom the matter had been submitted.

You will observe that this note is not addressed to me in my official capacity; the omission to do so is certainly not an accidental one. I feel considerably embarrassed as to the proper course to pursue in relation to this circumstance, unimportant in itself, but not without significancy when taken in connexion with other circumstances. Your instructions direct me to bear and forbear much, for the purpose of promoting the great objects of my mission.

* * * * * * * * *

As for myself, personally, I should feel very indifferent to any questions of mere etiquette; but in my representative capacity, I ought not silently to suffer any mark of disrepect. Although not yet recognized by this government as the person with whom it is willing to enter upon official relations, so far as my own is concerned, I am its representative here, and all other considerations apart, the interests of my mission with a people attaching peculiar importance to forms, require that I should not allow any violation of accustomed courtesies to pass unnoticed. My present intention is, to address a note to the minister of foreign relations, couched in the most respectful terms, attributing the omission to address me by my proper title, to inadvertence, and suggesting the expectation that it will not be repeated. This, however, I shall not do without proper reflection and consultation of precedents, if any such can be found. There is less reason for immediate reply, as I am satisfied that nothing is to be gained by pressing upon the government at this moment; their existence hangs by a thread, and they retain power, not by their own force, but solely by the inability of their opponents to agree among themselves. The great object of the administration, in all matters, is to gain time; to do nothing to compromit themselves, in the hope that if they can hold over until the meeting of the new congress, which will take place on the 1st of January, they will then be enabled to maintain their position. It would seem presumptuous in me, having so recently arrived, and with my necessarily very limited acquaintance and means of information, to express any opinion on this subject, but I give it to you for what it may be worth. A revolution, and that before the meeting of congress, is a probable event; a change of ministers almost a certain one. Notwithstanding the desire, which I believe the present administration really entertains, to adjust all their difficulties with us, so feeble and inert is it, that I am rather inclined to the opinion that the chances of a successful negotiation would be better with one more hostile, but possessing greater energy. The country, torn by conflicting factions, is in a state of perfect anarchy; its finances in a condition utterly desperate. * *

A refusal to treat with, or even receive me at all, in the only capacity in which I am authorised to act, under pretexts more or less plausible, is a possible (I aught, perhaps, to say a probable) event. This is a contingency which could not have been anticipated, and for which your instructions have, consequently, not provided. It will place me in a novel, awkward, and most embarrassing position, and impose upon me a grave responsibility. Should it occur, I shall endeavor so to conduct myself as to throw the whole odium of the failure of the negotiation upon this government; point out, in the most temperate manner, the inevitable consequences of so unheard of a violation of all the usages which govern the intercouse between civilized nations; and declare my intention to remain here until I can receive instructions adapted to the exigencies of the case. I trust that no time will be lost in furnishing me with instructions that will enable me to act promptly and decisively; and, to assure the requisite despatch, I would recommend that they be sent by a steamer from Pensacola. Sailing vessels are frequently from fifteen to twenty days making the passage from Havana, or the Balize, to Vera Cruz.

I send you files of the three principal papers published here, viz: the Diario, Siglo, and Amigo del Pueblo, which will enable you to form some idea of the state of public opinion as indicated by the press. The first is the official government paper; it has not made the slightest allusion to my arrival, and preserves upon all other debatable subjects a silence equally oracular. The second, although it has had a sort of semi-official character, and had heretofore supported the administration, has recently commented very freely upon its feebleness and inefficiency. The third is the leading opposition journal; it breathes the fiercest hostility against the United States, denounces the proposed negotiation as treason; and, in the last number, openly calls upon the troops and the people to put down the government by force. * * * * *

I had hoped to have been prepared to forward with this a full statement of the facts connected with the disputed payment of instalments of the Mexican indemnity, but am not yet in possession of the necessary evidence; I am now engaged in collecting it, and expect to forward my report with my next despatches.

I send this by Lieutenant Kennedy, who, at my request, was detached by Captain Saunders from the St. Mary's; which ship will immediately, on the arrival of Lieut. K., proceed to Pensacola. I shall detain the Porpoise until I have something definite to communicate.

P. S. December 18, 1845.—At the moment I was about to close this, I obtained the dictamen of the council of government, published in the "Siglo." I send you the paper.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Mexico, December 15, 1845.

In compliance with your request, I have the honor to give you, herewith, a written statement of what passed between his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, minister of foreign relations, &c., of the Mexican government, and myself, and the two interviews had with the said minister, on the evenings of the 8th and 13th instant, held at his house, as follows:

At the interview of Monday evening, the 8th instant, which took place between the hours of 6 and 7, I stated to his excellency that I presumed he knew of the arrival in this city of the Hon. John Slidell, as envoy, &c., from the government of the United States. He replied that he had been informed of it that day. I then told him that I had made known to Mr. Slidell what his excellency had communicated to me in our interview of Wednesday, the 3d inst., in relation to the fears entertained by the Mexican government on account of his arrival at this time, as it would have better suited the Mexican government, and they would be more able to carry out their views in relation to the mission, if the envoy had arrived a month later; and that our minister, Mr. Slidell, had regretted much that he had not known the wish of the Mexican government in relation to this point before he left home, as it would also have better suited his convenience to have deferred his coming a month longer; but it was his impression that it was the wish of the Mexican government that he should arrive with as little delay as possible.

His excellency replied that he had been under the impression, from what had been intimated by myself and others, that an envoy would not be appointed by the government of the United States until after the meeting of Congress, which would not take place until the 1st of December; that the Mexican government were engaged in collecting the opinion of the department in relation to this affair, in order that they might be prepared and better able to carry out their views respecting the same; that he himself was well disposed to have everything amicably arranged, but that the opposition was strong, and opposed the government with great violence in this measure, and that the government had to proceed with caution; that nothing positive could be done until the new Congress meet in January; but that, in the meantime, they would receive the minister's credentials, examine them, and be treating on the subject. He wished to know when I thought the minister would receive the confirmation of his appointment by the Senate. I said this he would likely know in a few days.

* * * * * * * *

I then presented to his excellency the letter of the Hon. John Slidell, enclosing a copy of his credentials, and a letter from the Hon. James Buchanan, Secretary of State of the United States; at the same time asking the Mexican minister when it would be convenient to give an answer; to which he replied, on Wednesday evening, the 10th instant, at the same hour and place, and requested that I would attend, to receive the same accordingly; to which I consented; but, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, I received a note from Mr. Monasterio, chief clerk of the foreign department, advising me that the minister could not receive me that night (as agreed on) on account of it having been determined to hear the opinion of the government council on the subject of the arrival of the minister from the United States; but as soon as he was ready for the conference arranged with me, he would have the pleasure to advise me, as will be seen by a copy of said note, which I transmit herewith.

On Saturday evening, the 13th instant, at the request of Mr. Slidell, I called on the Mexican minister, Señor Peña, at his house, to inquire when an answer would be given to his (Mr. Slidell's) aforesaid note. He replied that the affair had been submitted to the government council, in a special session of this day, and that it had been referred to a committee, and that as soon as the committee made a report, and the council should decide, he would then advise me, through Mr. Monasterio, when he was ready for the conference to present to me the answer for Mr. Slidell; as he said when he came to examine the credentials of Mr. S. he found them to be the same as those presented by Mr. Shannon, and other former ministers—as a minister to reside near the government of Mexico, just as if there had been no suspension of the diplomatic and friendly relations between the two governments; that the Mexican government understood the present mission to be a special mission, and confined to the differences in relation to the Texas question, and not as a mission to reside near the Mexican government, as in ordinary cases; that of course would follow when the first question was decided.

I replied, that as I understood it, the Mexican government had not only agreed to receive an envoy, intrusted with full powers to settle the question in dispute in relation to the affairs of Texas, but all the questions in dispute between the two governments, as proposed by the government of the United States. He replied that the credentials of Mr. Slidell had not reference to any questions in dispute, but merely as a minister to reside near the Mexican government, without reference to any questions in dispute, just as if the diplomatic and friendly relations between the two governments had not been and were not interrupted; that I knew the critical situation of the Mexican government, and that it had to proceed with great caution and circumspection in this affair; that the government itself was well disposed to arrange all differences.

* * * * * * * *

He said he was happy to say that he had received very favorable information in relation to our minister, the Hon. Mr. Slidell; that he understood he was a person endued with excellent qualities, and an eminent lawyer; and as he himself was of that profession, they would be able to understand each other better, and that he would be much pleased to cultivate his acquaintance; and that if etiquette and the present state of affairs would permit, he would be happy to pay him a visit, even before he was presented to the government; and said he would advise me, through Mr. Monasterio, when he was ready to present to me the answer to Mr. Slidell's note.

The foregoing, sir, is, as far as my recollection will serve, a true statement of what passed between the aforesaid Mexican minister and myself in the before mentioned interviews.

MEXICO, December 15, 1845.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, had the honor, on the 8th instant, to address a note to your excellency, informing him of the arrival of the undersigned in this capital, accompanying the same with a copy of his letters of credence, and requesting to be informed when and where he might have the honor of presenting his said letters of credence to the most excellent president of the Mexican republic, General José Joaquim de Herrera.

To this note the undersigned has not as yet received any reply. He is necessarily ignorant of the reasons which have caused so long a delay; but, inasmuch as he is desirous to communicate as speedily as possible with his government, he begs leave, most respectfully, to ask your excellency to inform him when he may expect to receive a reply to his note of the 8th instant.

The undersigned renews to his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

JOHN SLIDELL.

His Ex'y MANUEL DE LA PENA Y PENA,
Minister of Foreign Relations and Government of the Mexican Republic.

Mr. Peña y Peña to Mr. Slidell.

PALACE OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT,
Mexico, December 16, 1845.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations, in answer to the letter which his excellency Mr. John Slidell was pleased to address to him yesterday, has the honor to inform him that the delay in his reception, to which he alludes, and the consequent delay in answering his preceding note, making known his arrival in this capital, and accompanying a copy of his credentials, have arisen solely from certain difficulties, occasioned by the nature of those credentials, as compared with the proposition made by the United States, through their consul, to treat peacefully upon the affairs of Texas, with the person who should be appointed to that effect; for which reason it has been found necessary to submit the said credentials to the council of government, for its opinion with regard to them.

The undersigned will communicate the result to his excellency without loss of time; assuring him meanwhile that the government of Mexico is ready to proceed agreeably to what it proposed in its answer on the subject.

The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to offer to his excellency Mr. Slidell the assurances of his very distinguished consideration.

MANUEL DE LA PEÑA Y PEÑA.

No. 7.

[Extracts.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
Mexico, December 27, 1845.

I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a copy of my despatch of the 17th instant.

On the 20th instant, not having received from the minister of foreign relations the reply in relation to my reception, which he had assured me would be made as soon as he should be informed of the results of the reference to the council of government, I thought it advisable to avail myself of the opportunity which his silence afforded to correct the statement made by him in his note of the 16th instant, that the United States had proposed, through their consul, to treat in a friendly manner respecting the affairs of Texas. I accordingly addressed him the communication of which you will find a copy herewith; pointing out, briefly, the error into which he had fallen, with the hope, rather than the expectation, that it might induce him to withhold or qualify the reply which it was known, from the public declaration of the minister himself in the chamber of deputies, had been prepared, declaring the refusal of the President to receive me. On the 21st instant I received from Mr. Peña y Peña his promised reply, conveying the formal and unqualified refusal of the Mexican government to receive me in the character for which I am commissioned; of this most extraordinary document I send a copy. To this I replied, under date of the 24th instant, disproving the unfounded assertion of Mr. Peña y Peña, and refuting the arguments upon which the refusal to receive me was based. It would be superfluous for me to recapitulate what I have said in my letter to the minister of foreign relations, and I shall refer you for particulars to the accompanying copy.

I am not without apprehension lest, in my anxiety to preserve that tone of forbearance, in my intercourse with this government, which has been so strongly inculcated upon me by your instructions, I may have failed to animadvert with becoming spirit on its unparalleled bad faith, its gross falsification of the correspondence which led to my appointment, and the utter futility of the miserable sophistry by which it attempts to justify its conduct. If I have erred in this respect, I doubt not that you will find sufficient excuse for the error in the peculiarity of my position, unprecedented, I believe, in our diplomatic annals; the absence of all instructions in a contingency so unlooked for; and the feeling of self abnegation which has prompted me rather to subject myself to the imputation of a want of proper firmness and energy, than to take a course which could scarcely have failed to close the door upon all subsequent attempts at negotiation, and render war inevitable.

Apart, indeed, from your instructions, two other considerations would have operated to restrain me from replying to the note of Mr. Peña y Peña in stronger terms—the conviction that it was dictated rather by the fears than the feelings of the existing government, and the relative situation of the two countries—which would have rendered the language of menace and recrimination unbecoming.

You will observe that I have signified to this government my intention to proceed in a few days to Jalapa, there to await your final instructions. I have not decided upon this course without due deliberation, and I hope that it will meet with your approbation. My reasons were, first, to let this government understand, from my acts as well as my words, the serious consequences likely to result from a persistence in their present course; and, secondly, to avoid the possibility of any suspicion attaching to the legation, of interference of any kind in the struggle now going on.

With a people so jealous and suspicious, the most innocent movements or associations are liable to be misunderstood and misrepresented; and, for that reason, I have, since my arrival, abstained from all intercourse with members of either of the contending parties. To enable you better to decide upon the course proper to be pursued, I will endeavor to give you, in as few words as possible, some idea of the present state of things here. I will not enter into detail; for their phases vary so much from day to day, and there are so many fractions and subdivisions of party, that, even if I possessed the necessary information, I could not communicate it to you within any ordinary limits. The two great divisions of party are those of the federalists and centralists; the former desiring the re-establishment of the constitution of 1824, which, with the exception of the absence of religious toleration, was very nearly a counterpart of our own; the latter, as the name implies, advocating a consolidated government, as the only one adapted to the character of the people, and possessing sufficient strength and energy to preserve their nationality. But in these two great parties there are many shades of opinion—some of the federalists, for instance, being disposed to concede greater powers to the general government; while many of the centralists advocate an executive with unlimited powers, to be exercised either by a single person or a triumvirate; and some would even go so far as to abrogate all the forms of a republican government, and call for the establishment of a monarchy, in the person of some foreign prince, to be guarantied by some leading European powers.

General Herrera, the actual President, was elected but a few months since, almost unanimously, and in accordance with the forms of the constitution; he came into power under auspices apparently the most flattering, and yet he will, in all probability, soon vacate the national palace, to be succeeded by some military chief, whose career, in turn, will be equally short lived.

The associations of General Herrera have heretofore generally been with the federal party, and the bias of his feelings in that direction was indicated by the selection from it of a majority of the members of his cabinet; but his failure to proclaim the federation, and to throw himself frankly upon that party, soon alienated the greater portion of it; while the remainder have given him but a feeble and reluctant support, and the whole force of the centralists, comprising nearly all the officers of the army, and almost the entire clergy, has been arrayed against him. He is universally admitted to be a man of probity, and the persons immediately about him are said to be free from any antecedent stain. * * * * * * He has endeavored to conduct the government purely, and to correct some of the gross abuses which have existed in every branch of the public service; this has, of course, enlisted against him the host of office-holders throughout the country, and he has not shown that energy which was necessary to carry his good intentions into effect. The command of the division of reserve, destined to operate on the frontier of Texas, was entrusted to General Paredes, who, although he had, from causes of personal dissatisfaction, contributed to the overthrow of Santa Anna, has always been known as the advocate of centralism, or rather of a military despotism. Ordered to advance, several months since, to the line of the Rio del Norte, he has, on various frivolous pretexts, constantly disobeyed or evaded his instructions, and the government, although it cannot have been ignorant of his hostile intentions, has not dared to displace him. The force under his command is variously estimated at from 5,000 to 8,000 men, and is said to comprise the most efficient troops of the republic. The intention of the government to negotiate with the United States has been made the great theme of denunciation, and the opposition has been gradually maturing its plans of insurrection in every quarter. The arrival of an American minister was to be the signal of the outbreak; it occurred sooner than was anticipated, and consequently found them unprepared. Paredes did not issue his revolutionary proclamation until the 15th instant, and did not put his troops in march towards this place until some days after; a corresponding movement in the capital was expected to have taken place immediately on the receipt of Paredes's proclamation, and such undoubtedly was the intention of the revolutionists; but it seems that his "plan," as these insurrectionary programmes are here called, dissatisfied some of the leaders; they could not agree upon their course of operations, and the movement was postponed. This gave the government a breathing spell. In the meantime, several of the most conspicuous revolutionists have been arrested and are now in prison; others, (and among them General Almonte,) against whom orders of arrest have been issued, are concealed; extraordinary powers for six months have been granted to the President by Congress; the city, which is now being fortified, has been declared in a state of siege, and the liberty of the press suspended. The government appears to be determined to defend itself obstinately, although the defection of the garrisons of San Juan de Ulloa and Vera Cruz, and of the force stationed at Jalapa, gives it but little reason to rely upon the fidelity of any portion of the army. What will be the result, it would be idle for me to predict, but the general opinion here appears to be that the government must succumb.

* * * * * * Of one thing, however, I feel assured, that, after what has occurred, should any concession be made by our government, if any American minister present himself here without an unqualified retraction, by whatever party may succeed in the present contest, of Mr. Peña y Peña's note of the 20th instant, he will come on a bootless errand. The desire of our government to secure peace will be mistaken for timidity; the most extravagant pretensions will be made and insisted upon, until the Mexican people shall be convinced, by hostile demonstrations, that our differences must be settled promptly either by negotiation or the sword.

I shall be detained here a few days, engaged in collecting the facts, and taking certain steps in relation to the disputed payment of instalments, which, when obtained and completed, will form the subject of a separate despatch.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

Mexico, December 20, 1845.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt, on the 17th instant, of the note of your excellency, dated the 16th instant, in reply to that of the undersigned of the 15th instant. By this note, the undersigned is informed that "the delay which has occurred in his reception, and, consequently, in the reply to his former note of the 8th instant, announcing his arrival in this capital, and presenting a copy of his credentials, has proceeded exclusively from certain difficulties presented by the tenor of his credentials, compared with the proposal made by the United States, through their consul, to treat in a friendly manner respecting the affairs of Texas, by a person whom they should name to that effect; for which cause it has been necessary to submit the said credentials to the 'dictamen' of the council of government."

Your excellency further says that you "will inform me, without the loss of a moment, of the result, assuring me, in the meanwhile, that the government of Mexico is ready to proceed in conformity with what it declared in its reply to the proposal made through the consul."

The undersigned has delayed until now replying to the note of your excellency, in the expectation that the promised information of the result of the application to the council of government would have made him acquainted with the precise character of the difficulties in relation to his credentials, to which allusion is made. Having been disappointed in this expectation, and presuming, from the silence of your excellency, that the question submitted is still pending before the council, the undersigned begs leave to call the attention of your excellency to what he supposes to be a misapprehension, on the part of your excellency, of the proposition made by the United States, through their consul, Mr. Black, on the 13th of October last, and its acceptance by the Mexican government, as signified by the letter of your excellency of the 15th of October to the consul. If the undersigned be mistaken in this, his error must be attributed to the very vague manner in which the difficulties respecting the tenor of his credentials are alluded to. By reference to the letter above mentioned of the consul, your excellency will find that Mr. Black was instructed, "in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments," and to say, "should the answer be in the affirmative, that such an envoy should be immediately despatched to Mexico." In this letter, not only was no suggestion made of a disposition to treat on the isolated question of Texas, but no reference whatever can be found in it to that question, excepting so far as it was comprised in the inquiry whether the Mexican government would receive an envoy entrusted with full power to adjust all questions in dispute between the two governments.

In reply to this letter, your excellency, under date of the 15th of October, said that, "although the Mexican government is deeply injured by the United States, through the acts committed by them in the department of Texas, belonging to this nation, my government is disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States who may come to this capital with full powers to settle the present dispute in a peaceful, reasonable, and honorable manner; thus giving a new proof that, even in the midst of its injuries and of its firm determination to exact adequate reparation of them, it does not repel with contumely the measure of reason and peace to which it is invited by its adversary."

The undersigned will not permit himself to anticipate the possibility of any obstacle being interposed by the Mexican government to prevent the renewal of its diplomatic relations with the United States, and the opening in due season, of negotiations for the termination of all existing difficulties; and he has not presented the foregoing extracts from the correspondence which led to his appointment to the distinguished trust with which he has been honored by the Executive of the United States, for the purpose of commencing an argument in relation to his credentials—which would now be premature, and which he hopes will not be, at any time, necessary—but simply for the purpose of rectifying an error into which your excellency has, as he is bound to believe, inadvertently fallen, in stating that the United States had proposed to treat on the subject of Texas.

The undersigned, in closing this note, begs leave to call the attention of your excellency to the omission of your excellency to address him by his proper title, which he presumes is accidental. Although the undersigned is not yet received by the Mexican government as the accredited agent of that of the United States; still, bearing, as he does, a commission from the President of the United States establishing his diplomatic character, that character should be recognized in any communication addressed to him. The undersigned trusts that he will not again have occasion to refer to this subject. He would not, perhaps, now do so, were it a question of mere etiquette; but, in the present disturbed state of the country, contingencies may possibly occur, during the pendency of the question submitted to the council of government, in which he might have occasion to reclaim the privileges and immunities which his commission confers upon him.

The undersigned tenders to your excellency, &c., &c.

PALACE OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT,
Mexico, December 20, 1845.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, had the honor to receive the note which Mr. John Slidell was pleased to address to him on the 8th instant, making known his arrival at this capital, in the character of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, near the government of the undersigned, and requesting that a time and a place should be appointed for his admission to present his credentials, of which he was pleased to send copies enclosed.

The undersigned, having submitted the whole to his excellency the President of the republic, and having also considered attentively the note addressed to him by the Secretary of State of the United States, relative to the mission of Mr. Slidell, regrets to inform him that, although the supreme government of the republic is animated by the pacific and conciliatory intentions which the undersigned manifested to the consul of the United States in his confidential note of the 14th of October last, it does not conceive that, in order to fulfill the object proposed by the said consul, in the name of the American government, and accepted by the undersigned, it should admit his excellency Mr. Slidell in the character with which he is invested, of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary residing in the republic.

In order to place this refusal upon its proper grounds, the undersigned will briefly communicate to Mr. Slidell the reasons by which his excellency the President is guided.

The proposition in question emanated spontaneously from the attention of your excellency to what he supposes to be a misapprehension, on the part of your excellency, of the proposition made by the United States, through their consul, Mr. Black, on the 13th of October last, and its acceptance by the Mexican government, as signified by the letter of your excellency of the 15th of October to the consul. The undersigned will not permit himself to anticipate the possibility of any obstacle being interposed by the Mexican government to prevent the renewal of its diplomatic relations with the United States, and the opening in due season, of negotiations for the termination of all existing difficulties; and he has not presented the foregoing extracts from the correspondence which led to his appointment to the distinguished trust with which he has been honored by the Executive of the United States, for the purpose of commencing an argument in relation to his credentials—which would now be premature, and which he hopes will not be, at any time, necessary—but simply for the purpose of rectifying an error into which your excellency has, as he is bound to believe, inadvertently fallen, in stating that the United States had proposed to treat on the subject of Texas.

His Excellency Manuel de la Pena y Pena,
Minister of Foreign Relations.

]Enclosure No. 2—Translation.]

Mr. Pena y Pena to Mr. Slidell.

Palace of the National Government,
Mexico, December 20, 1845.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations and government of the Mexican republic, had the honor to receive the note which Mr. John Slidell was pleased to address to him on the 8th instant, making known his arrival at this capital, in the character of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, near the government of the undersigned, and requesting that a time and a place should be appointed for his admission to present his credentials, of which he was pleased to send copies enclosed.

The undersigned, having submitted the whole to his excellency the President of the republic, and having also considered attentively the note addressed to him by the Secretary of State of the United States, relative to the mission of Mr. Slidell, regrets to inform him that, although the supreme government of the republic is animated by the pacific and conciliatory intentions which the undersigned manifested to the consul of the United States in his confidential note of the 14th of October last, it does not conceive that, in order to fulfill the object proposed by the said consul, in the name of the American government, and accepted by the undersigned, it should admit his excellency Mr. Slidell in the character with which he is invested, of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary residing in the republic.

In order to place this refusal upon its proper grounds, the undersigned will briefly communicate to Mr. Slidell the reasons by which his excellency the President is guided.

The proposition in question emanated spontaneously from the government of the United States, and the Mexican government accepted it, in order to give a new proof, that in the midst of grievances, and its firm decision to exact adequate reparation, it did not repel or contemn the measure of reason and peace to which it was invited; so that this proposition, as well as it acceptance, rested ubon the precise and definite understanding that the commissioner should be ad hoc—that is to say, commissioned to settle, in a peaceful and honorable manner, the questions relative to Texas. This has not been done, as Mr. Slidell does not come invested with that character, but with the absolute and general functions of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to reside in this quality near the Mexican government.

If his excellency Mr. Slidell be admitted in this character, which differs substantially from that proposed for his mission on the part of the United States, and accepted by the government of the undersigned, there would be reason to believe that thenceforth the relations between the two republics were open and frank, which could not be the case until the questions which have led to the present interruption of those relations should have been settled in a manner peaceful, but at the same time honorable to Mexico.

Although it be true that, in the credential letter brought by his excellency Mr. Slidell, it is stated that he is informed of the desire of the President of the United States to restore, cultivate, and strengthen friendship and good correspondence between the two countries, it is also no less true that in this clause the single word restore is by no means sufficient to give to Mr. Slidell the special character of commissioner, or plenipotentiary ad hoc; to make propositions as to the affairs of Texas, calculated to establish peace firmly, and to arrest the evils of war by means of an adequate agreement. Mr. Slidell is too enlightened not himself to see that the powers of such a plenipotentiary ought to refer, and be adequate, and directed definitely to the business for which he is appointed; and that he is very far from possessing these requisites, in virtue of the character in which he appears, of an absolute and general minister, of an ordinary plenipotentiary, to reside near the Mexican government.

The admission of such a minister should be, as the undersigned has already said, preceded by the agreement which the United States proposes to enter into for the establishment of peace and good correspondence with Mexico, interrupted by the occurrences of Texas —this point being, from its very nature, necessary to be attained before any other; and until it shall have been entirely and peacefully settled, not even an appointment should be made of a resident minister by either of the two governments.

The supreme government of Mexico, therefore, cannot admit his excellency Mr. Slidell to the exercise of the functions of the mission conferred on him by the United States government. But as the sentiments expressed by the undersigned to the consul, in his above mentioned communication of the 14th of October last, are in no wise changed, he now repeats them; adding that he will have the utmost pleasure in treating with Mr. Slidell so soon as he shall have presented credentials authorizing him expressly and exclusively to settle thequestions which have disturbed the harmony and good understanding between the two republics, and which will bring on war between them unless such settlement be effected in a satisfactory manner, to which the proposition from the government of the United States related, and under the express understanding of which that proposition was accepted by the Mexican government. Until this be done, Mr Slidell cannot be admitted in the character with which he appears invested, as the honor, the dignity, and the interests of the Mexican republic would thereby be placed in jeopardy.

The undersigned takes the liberty to adjoin to the present note his answer to that of the Secretary of State of the United States, presented to him by Mr. John Slidell; to whom he has the honor at the same time to present the assurances of his very distinguished consideration.

MANUEL DE LA PEÑA Y PEÑA.

[Enclosure No. 3.]

Mr. Slidell to Mr. Pena y Pena.

Mexico, December 24, 1845.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, had the honor to receive, on the evening of Sunday the 21st instant, the communication of Mr. Peña y Peña, dated on the preceding day. The undersigned will abstain from the full expression of the feelings of astonishment and dissatisfaction which its perusal has so naturally excited, fearful that, if he did not do so, he might overstep the bounds which courtesy and the usages of diplomatic intercourse prescribe, in addressing a person occupying the distinguished position of Mr. Peña y Peña; but he should be recreant alike to the character, dignity, and interests of the government which he has the honor to represent, were he not to point out to your excellency, and through him to to the people of the United States and of Mexico, the misstatements (and he begs to be understood that he uses this word in no invidious sense) which the communication of your excellency contains of the correspondence which induced the appointment of the undersigned, refute the reasoning by which Mr. Peña y Peña attempts to sustain the refusal of the Mexican government to receive him, and apprise him of the very grave consequences to which a persistence in that refusal will probably lead.

In performing this ungrateful duty, the undersigned will sedulously endeavor to avoid every expression that could, by possibility, offend the just sensibilities of the Mexican government; but this feeling, sincerely entertained, would dengenerate into culpable weakness, were he to withhold any fact or suppress any argument necessary to the faithful discharge of the task which has been imposed upon him—that of vindicating the strict correctness of the course pursued by his government, and demonstrating the glaring impropriety of that which the Mexican government seems determined to pursue.

For this purpose, it will be necessary to make a brief reference to the difficulties which existed between the two countries, when, at the instance of your excellency, the consul of the United States, acting by authority of his government, addressed to your excellency, on the 13th of October last, a letter, the substance of which had been communicated orally to your excellency in a confidential interview two days previously. Diplomatic relations had been suspended by the recall of General Almonte, the Mexican minister at Washington, in March last, and the subsequent withdrawal of the minister of the United States from Mexico.

Mexico considered herself aggrieved by the course which the United States had pursued in relation to Texas, and this feeling, it is true, was the immediate cause of the abrupt termination of all diplomatic relations; but the United States, on their part, had causes of complaint, better founded and more serious, arising out of the claims of its citizens on Mexico.

It is not the purpose of the undersigned to trace the history of these claims, and the outrages from which they sprung. The annals of no civilized nation present, in so short a period of time, so many wanton attacks upon the rights of persons and property as have been endured by citizens of the United States from the Mexican authorities—attacks that would never have been tolerated from any other nation than a neighboring and sister republic. They were the subject of earnest, repeated, and unavailing remonstrance, during a long series of years, until at last, on the 11th of April, 1839, a convention was concluded for their adjustment. As, by the provisions of that convention, the board of commissioners organized for the liquidation of the claims was obliged to terminate its duties within eighteen months, and as much of that time was lost in preliminary discussions, it only acted finally upon a small portion of the claims, the amount awarded upon which amounted to $2,026,139, (two millions twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-nine dollars;) claims were examined and awarded by the American commissioners, amounting to $928,627, (nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred and twenty-seven dollars,) upon which the umpire refused to decide, alleging that his authority had expired, while others, to the amount of $3,336,837, (three millions three hundred and thirty-six thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven dollars,) remained altogether unacted upon, because they had been submitted too late for the decision of the board. In relation to the claims which had been submitted to the board of commissioners, but were not acted on for want of time, amounting to $4,265,464, (four millions two hundred and sixty-five thousand four hundred and sixty-four dollars,) a convention was signed in this capital on the 20th of November, 1843, by Mr. Waddy Thompson, on the part of the United States, and Messrs. Bocanegra and Trigueros, on that of Mexico, which was ratified by the Senate of the United States, with two amendments manifestly reasonable and necessary. Upon a reference of these amendments to the government of Mexico, it interposed evasions, difficulties, and delays of every kind, and has never yet decided whether it would accede to them or not, although the subject has been repeatedly pressed by the ministers of the United States. Subsequently, additional claims have been presented to the Department of State, exceeding in amount $2,200,000, (two millions two hundred thousand dollars,) showing in all the enormous aggregate of $8,491,603, (eight millions four hundred and ninety-one thousand six hundred and three dollars.) But what has been the fate even of those claimants against the government of Mexico, whose debt has been fully liquidated, recognized by Mexico, and its payment guaranteed by the most solemn treaty stipulations? The Mexican government finding it inconvenient to pay the amount awarded, either in money or in an issue of treasury notes, according to the terms of the convention, a new convention was concluded on the 30th of January, 1843, between the two governments, to relieve that of Mexico from this embarrassment. By its terms, the interest due on the whole amount awarded was ordered to be paid on the 30th April, 1843, and the principal, with the accruing interest, was made payable in five years, in equal instalments, every three months. Under this new agreement, made to favor Mexico, the claimants have only received the interest up to the 30th April, 1843, and three of the twenty instalments.

The undersigned has not made this concise summary of the injuries inflicted upon American citizens during a long series of years, coeval indeed with the existence of the Mexican republic, reparation for which has been so unjustly delayed, for the purpose of recrimination, or to revive those angry feelings which it was the object of his mission to assuage, and, if possible, by friendly and frank negotiation, to bury in the most profound oblivion; but simply to prove, that if the proposition made by his government, through its consul, for the renewal of diplomatic relations, presented any ambiguity, (which, he will proceed to show, does not exist,) it could not, by any fair rule of construction, bear the interpretation which your excellency has given to it. The United States have never yet, in the course of their history, failed to vindicate, and successfully, too, against the most powerful nations of the earth, the rights of their injured citizens. If such has been their course in their infancy, and when comparatively feeble, it cannot be presumed that they will deviate from it now.

Mr. Peña y Peña says, that, having communicated to his excellency the president of the republic the note of the undersigned, of the 8th instant, with a copy of his credentials, and the letter of the Secretary of State of the United States relative to his mission, he regrets to inform the undersigned, that although the supreme government of the republic continues to entertain the same pacific and conciliatory intentions which your excellency manifested to the consul of the United States in his confidential note of 14th October last, it does not think that, to accomplish the object which was proposed by the said consul, in the name of the American government, and which was aecepted by Mr. Peña y Peña, it is in the situation (esté en el caso) to admit the undersigned in the character with which he comes invested, of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary resident in the republic, and that, to sustain this refusal, Mr. Peña y Peña will briefly expose to the undersigned the reasons which have governed his excellency the president. Your excellency then proceeds to say, that the proposition in question was spontaneously made by the government of the United States, and accepted by that of Mexico, to give a new proof that even in the midst of its injuries, and of its firm determination to exact adequate reparation for them, it neither repelled nor undervalued the measure of reason and peace to which it was invited, so that the proposition, as well as its acceptance, turned upon the precise and positive supposition that the commissioner should be ad hoc; that is to say, to arrange in a peaceful and decorous manner the questions of Texas. This has not been done, since the undersigned does not come in that capacity, but in the absolute and general capacity of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to reside in that quality near the Mexican government. That if the undersigned be admitted in this character, which differs essentially from that which was proposed for his mission on the part United States, and which was accepted by the Mexican government, it would give room to believe that the relations of the two republics became at once open and free; which could not take place, without the questions, which had brought about the state of interruption which now exists, were previously terminated peaceably, but in a decorous manner for Mexico.

If your excellency had not himself conducted the preliminary and informal negotiations with the consul of the United States, of which the preceding version is given by him; if the letter of the consul had not been addressed to, and answered by your excellency, the undersigned would be constrained to believe that your excellency had derived his knowledge of it from some unauthentic source. But, as this is not the case, the undersigned trusts that your excellency will pardon him if he suggests the doubt whether your excellency—constantly occupied, as he must for some time past have been, by the disturbed state of the internal affairs of the republic—has reperused the letter of the consul of October 13, and the answer of your excellency of October 15, with that scrupulous attention which the gravity of the case demanded; and whether the lapse of time has not left on the mind of your excellency but a vague and incorrect impression of what really occured. Another solution, however. of this difficulty suggests itself to the undersigned, and he shall be most happy to find that it is the correct one. Your excellency refers to his answer to the consul as being dated on the 14th October, while the letter of your excellency, now in possession of the consul, is dated on the 15th October, as the undersigned has had occasion to verify by personal inspection; and he repeats, that he will learn with the greatest satisfaction that his present peculiar and most embarrassing position is the result of unintentional error on the part of the Mexican government.

The undersigned will now proceed, by precise and literal quotation from the letter of the consul of October 13, to show, in the most conclusive manner, that the government of the United States proposed to send to Mexico an envoy intrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two powers; and that the Mexican government, through your excellency, in the letter of October 15, declared itself disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States, who might come to this capital with full powers to settle those disputes in a peaceable, reasonable, and honorable manner. The consul, in his letter of October 13, said that, in a confidential interview with your excellency, which took place on the 11th October, he had the honor to inform your excellency that he (the consul) had received a communication from the Secretary of State of the United States; and having, in that interview, made known to your excellency the substance of said communication, your excellency, having heard and considered with due attention the statement read from the said communication, stated that, as the diplomatic relations between the two governments had been, and still were suspended, the interview should have no other character than that of a confidential meeting; to which he (the consul) assented, considering it only in that light. That your excellency then requested that he (the consul) might, in the same confidential manner, communicate in writing what had thus been made known verbally; that, in conformity with that request, he transcribed that part of the communication of the Secretary of State of the United States, which was in the following words: "At the time of the suspension of the diplomatic relations between the two countries, General Almonte was assured of the desire felt by the President to adjust amicably every cause of complaint between the governments, and to cultivate the kindest and most friendly relations between the sister republics. He still continues to be animated by the same sentiments. He desires that all existing differences should be terminated amicably by negotiation, and not by the sword. Actuated by these sentiments, the President has directed me to instruct you, in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments. Should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy will be immediately despatched to Mexico."

Your excellency, under date of October 15, in reply to the consul, said: "I have informed my government of the private conference which took place between you and myself on the 11th instant, and have submitted to it the confidential letter which you, in consequence of, and agreeably to, what was then said, addressed to me yesterday. In answer, I have to say to you, that although the Mexican nation is deeply injured by the United States, through the acts committed by them in the department of Texas, belonging to this nation, my government is disposed to receive the commissioner of the United States, who may come to this capital with full powers to settle the present dispute in a peaceable, reasonable, and honorable manner; thus giving a new proof, that, even in the midst of its injuries, and of its firm determination to exact adequate reparation of them, it does not repel nor undervalue the measure of reason and peace to which it is invited by its adversary."

"As my government believes this invitation to be made in good faith, and with the real desire that it may lead to a favorable conclusion, it also hopes that the commissioner will be a person endowed with the qualities proper for the attainment of this end; that his dignity, prudence, and moderation, and the discreetness and reasonableness of his proposals, will contribute to calm, as much as possible, the just irritation of the Mexicans; and, in fine, that the conduct of the commissioner may be such as to persuade them that they may obtain satisfaction for their injuries through the means of reason and peace, and without being obliged to resort to those of arms and force.

"What my government requires above all things is, that the mission of the commissioner of the United States should appear to be always absolutely frank, and free from every sign of menace or coercion; and thus, Mr. Consul, while making known to your government the disposition on the part of that of Mexico to receive the commissioner, you should impress upon it, as indispensable, the recall of the whole naval force now lying in sight of our port of Vera Cruz. Its presence would degrade Mexico while she is receiving the commissioner, and would justly subject the United States to the imputation of contradicting, by acts, the vehement desire of conciliation, peace, and friendship, which is professed and asserted by words. I have made known to you Mr. Consul, with the brevity which you desired, the disposition of my government; and, in so doing, I have the satisfaction to assure you of my consideration and esteem for you personally."

The undersigned has transcribed the letter of your excellency at length and verbatim, on account of the discrepancy of dates, to which he has before adverted, in order that your excellency may have an opportunity of comparing it with the copy on the files of his office. Argument and illustration would be superfluous to show that the offer of the United States was accepted by your excellency, without any other condition or restriction than that the whole naval force, then lying in sight of Vera Cruz, should be recalled. That condition was promptly complied with, and no ship of war of the United States has since appeared at Vera Cruz, excepting those which have conveyed thither the undersigned and the secretary of his legation. Nor is it the intention of his government that any should appear at Vera Cruz, or any other port of the republic on the gulf of Mexico, excepting such only as may be necessary for the conveyance of despatches.

The undersigned has said that no other condition or restriction was placed by Mr. Peña y Peña upon the acceptance of the proposition made through the consul, than that of the withdrawal of the naval force of the United States from Vera Cruz, because he will not do your excellency the injustice to suppose that any reliance is placed by your excellency on the mere verbal distinction between the terms envoy and commissioner, when the proposition of the United States, and the acceptance of your excellency, alike contemplated the appointment of a person entrusted with full powers to settle the questions in dispute. Indeed, your excellency admits that the title of the diplomatic agent is of no importance, by using the words commissioner and plenipotentiary ad hoc, as convertible terms.

Your excellency repeatedly and expressly admits that the Mexican government accepted the proposition of the United States, made through its consul, to send an envoy to Mexico. That proposition was frank, simple, and unambiguous in its terms. If your excellency, acting as the organ of the Mexican government, intended to qualify or restrict in any degree the acceptance of the proposition, such intention should have been manifested in terms not to be misunderstood; and the undersigned uuhesitatingly rejects a supposition, which would be inconsistent with the high respect which he entertains for Mr. Peña y Peña, that your excellency did not intend to respond to the proposition in a corresponding spirit of frankness and good faith.

The answer of your excellency to the consul having been forwarded by him, the President of the United States promptly complied with the assurance which had been given that an envoy would be sent to Mexico with full power to adjust all questions in dispute, by the appointment of the undersigned, thus acting in accordance with the friendly feeling which prompted the government of the United States spontaneously (as your excellency correctly observes) to make peaceful overtures to the Mexican government; for the consul, in submitting the proposition to your excellency, said, in conformity with his instructions, that "if the President of the United States had been disposed to stand upon a mere question of etiquette, he would have waited until the Mexican government, which had suspended the diplomatic relations between the two countries, should have asked that they might be restored; but his desire is so strong to terminate the present unfortunate state of our relations with this republic, that he has even consented to waive all ceremony and take the initiative."

The appointment of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, the highest grade of diplomatic agent ever employed by the government of the undersigned, afforded renewed proof, if any such proof could have been necessary, of the sincere desire of the President of the United States to terminate the present unfortunate state of their relations with Mexico. What will be his surprise when he is informed that this additional manifestation of his friendly feeling, invited by your excellency, has been rejected by the Mexican government with contumely? for, notwithstanding the protestations of peace and good will with which the rejection of the undersigned is accompanied, he must be excused if he look to the acts rather than the words of the Mexican government as the true exponents of its feelings.

There remains another argument on which Mr. de la Peña y Peña bases the refusal to receive the undersigned, which will be briefly noticed. Your excellency says that although it is true that, in the letter of credence of the undersigned, it is said that he is informed of the desire which the President of the United States has to re-establish, cultivate, and strengthen the friendship and good correspondence of the two countries, yet neither that clause, and still less the single word re-establish, is sufficient to give to the undersigned the special character of commissioner, or, what is equivalent, (ó bien sea,) of plenipotentiary ad hoc, to make propositions on the affairs of Texas, capable of establishing peace and avoiding the evils of war, by means of a competent arrangement. Your excellency is pleased to say, that it will not escape the discernment (ilustracion) of the undersigned that the powers of such a plenipotentiary should be relative, adequate, and confined by their terms to the business for which he is nominated, and that the nomination which has been made in his person, conferring upon him the character of a full and general minister of an ordinary plenipotentiary, to reside near the Mexican government, is very far from offering those qualities. The undersigned is free to confess that your excellency has paid an unmerited compliment to his discernment in supposing that this distinction could not have escaped him; for, by the very terms of his credentials, he is not merely an ordinary plenipotentiary, but an envoy extraordinary; and, as such, he is entrusted with full powers to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments; and, as a necessary consequence, the special question of Texas.

It is not usual for a minister to exhibit his powers until he has been accredited; and, even then, they are not called for until a treaty is either to be made or concluded, or a particular affair of importance negotiated. Still, had your excellency thought proper to intimate a wish to be informed on this subject, the undersigned would not have hesitated to furnish him with a copy of his powers, by which your excellency would have perceived that the undersigned is, in due form, invested with full and all manner of power and authority, for and in the name of the United States, to treat with the Mexican republic of and concerning limits and boundaries between the United States of America and the Mexican republic, and of all matters and subjects connected therewith, and which may be interesting to the two nations, and to conclude and sign a treaty or convention touching the premises.

Your excellency says the supreme government of the republic cannot admit the undersigned to the exercise of the mission which has been conferred upon him by that of the United States; but, as it has not in any degree changed the sentiments which your excellency manifested to the consul, in his communication of the 14th of October last, he now repeats them, adding that he will have the greatest pleasure in treating with the undersigned, so soon as he shall present the credentials which would authorize him expressly and solely to settle the questions which have disturbed the harmony and good intelligence of the two republics, and which will lead them to war if they be not satisfactorily arranged; which settlement was the object of the proposition of the government of the United States, and was the express condition of the Mexican government in accepting it; without it, the undersigned cannot be received in the capacity in which he presents himself, since it would compromit the honor, dignity, and interests of the Mexican republic. The undersigned concurs fully with your excellency in the opinion expressed by him, that the questions which have disturbed the harmony and good intelligence of the two republics will lead them to war, if they be not satisfactorily arranged. If this, unfortunately, should be the result, the fault will not be with the United States; the sole responsibility of such a calamity, with all its consequences, must rest with the Mexican republic.

The undersigned would call the attention of your excellency to the strange discrepancy between the sentiments expressed in the clause of his letter last cited, and the conclusion at which he arrives, that the reception of the undersigned would compromit the honor, dignity, and interests of the Mexican republic. Your excellency says that he will have the greatest pleasure in treating with the undersigned, so soon as the undersigned shall present credentials which would authorize him expressly and solely to settle the questions which have disturbed the harmony and good intelligence of the two republics. What are these questions? The grievances alleged by both governments; and these the undersigned is fully empowered to adjust. Does the Mexican government, after having formally accepted the proposition of the United States, arrogate to itself the right of dictating not only the rank and title which their diplomatic agent shall bear, but the precise form of the credentials which he shall be permitted to present, and to trace out, in advance, the order in which the negotiations are to be conducted? The undersigned, with every disposition to put the most favorable construction on the language of your excellency, cannot but consider it as an absolute and unqualified repudiation of all diplomatic intercourse between the two governments. He fears that the Mexican government does not properly appreciate the friendly overtures of the United States, who, although anxious to preserve peace, are still prepared for war.

Had the undersigned been accredited by the Mexican government, it would have been free to choose the subjects upon which it would negotiate, subject, of course, to the discretion of the undersigned, controlled by his instructions, to treat upon the isolated question of Texas; and, should it have been found impossible to agree upon a basis of negotiation, his mission, which was not intended to be one of mere ceremony, would probably soon have terminated, leaving the relations of the two countries in the state in which the undersigned found them. If the undersigned had been admitted to the honor of presenting his credentials to his excellency the President of the republic, he was instructed to assure his excellency of the earnest desire which the authorities and people of the United States entertain to restore those ancient relations of peace and good will which formerly existed between the governments and citizens of the two republics. Circumstances have of late estranged the sympathies of the Mexican people, which had been secured towards their brethren of the north by the early and decided stand which the United States had taken and maintained in favor of the independence of the Spanish American republics on this continent. The great object of the mission of the undersigned was to endeavor, by the removal of all mutual causes of complaint for the past, and of distrust for the future, to revive, confirm, and, if possible, to strengthen those sympathies. The interests of Mexico and of the United States are, if well understood, identical, and the most ardent wish of the latter has been to see Mexico elevated, under a free, stable, and republican government, to a distinguished rank among the nations of the earth. Such are the views of the government of the undersigned, and such was the spirit in which he was directed to act. As for the undersigned, while it was made his duty to manifest this feeling in all his official relations with the government of Mexico, it would have been to him, individually, a source of great gratification to have contributed, by every means in his power, to the restoration of those sentiments of cordial friendship which should characterize the intercourse of neighboring and sister republics.

The undersigned is not to have the opportunity of carrying these intentions into effect. Mexico rejects the olive branch which has been so frankly extended to her, and it is not the province of the undersigned to criticise the motives and comment upon the influences, foreign or domestic, which have induced her to pursue this course, or to speculate upon the consequences to which it may lead. For a contingency so unexpected and unprecedented, no foresight could have provided; and the undersigned consequently finds himself without instructions to guide him in his very delicate and singular position. He shrinks from taking upon himself the fearful responsibility of acting in a matter that involves interests so momentous, and, as no motive can exist for protracting his stay in this capital, he will proceed in a few days to Jalapa, where he can communicate more speedily with his government, and there await its final instructions.

The undersigned received with the communication of your excellency a sealed letter, directed to the Secretary of State of the United States, with a request that it might be forwarded to its address. He regrets that he cannot comply with this request. The letter from the Secretary of State to your excellency, of which the undersigned was the bearer, was unsealed, and he cannot consent to be made the medium of conveying to his government any official document from that of Mexico while he is ignorant of its contents. If Mr. Peña y Peña will favor the undersigned with a copy of his letter to the Secretary of State, the undersigned will be happy to forward the original with his first despatches.

He takes this occasion to tender to his excellency D. Manuel de la Peña y Peña the renewed assurances of his distinguished consideration.

JOHN SLIDELL.

His Excellency Manuel de la Pena y Pena,
Minister of Foreign Relations and Government.

[Extracts.]

Legation of the United States of America,
Mexico, January 14, 1846.

Lieutenant White, of the Somers, arrived her on the 12th instant with your despatches, of the 17th ultimo. I had the honor of addressing you on the 27th and 29th ultimo by the Porpoise. I forward with this duplicate of my despatch of 10th instant, relating to the disputed payment of instalments of indemnity due 30th April and 30th July, 1844.

The contest between the military and the government terminated as I had expected. On the night of the 29th December the greater portion of the troops in garrison here "pronounced" in favor of the revolutionists; one regiment only, that stationed in the palace, preserved a semblance of fidelity, but it was well known that many of its officers werè disaffected, and on the following day General Herrera, satisfied that he could make no effectual resistence, resigned the Presidency. The ringing of bells and firing of cannon announced the success of the revolutionists and the overthrow of the government. When it is recollected that the civil authorities throughout the country, with the single exception of St. Luis de Potosi, were opposed to the movement of Paredes; that most of them had made loud protestations of their intention to resist it at all hazards; that both branches of Congress had unanimously declared their abhorrence of his treachery, and denounced his "plan" as an undisguised military despotism; and that, after all this war of manifestoes and resolutions, not a shot has been fired in defence of constitutional government, you may form some idea * *

On the resignation of Herrera, General Valencia, one of the revolutionists, who, as president of the council of government, by the then existing constitution, became President ad interim of the republic, assumed to act in that capacity * * * He invited Paredes to a conference in the city, which was declined. In the meantime the troops here, whom he had instigated to revolt, declared their preference for Paredes. He, then, with Almonte, Tornel, and other leaders of the revolution, proceeded to the headquarters of Paredes, where they were given by him to understand that, having the army in his favor, he intended to organize a new government in his own way. * * * * *

On the 2d January Paredes entered the capital with his troops, those already stationed here joining his triumphal march. On the same day, a junta of military officers, convened by him, met and established a plan of provisional government, to be administered by a President elected by a body composed of two notables from each department. These notables, nominated by Parades, met on the following evening, and, as you may readily imagine, unanimously elected him President, and, on the 4th instant, he took the oath of office. By the plan of the junta of officers, a constituent Congress was to be convened, with unlimited powers, for the establishment of a new government, the mode of election to be announced within eight days. Before the expiration of the eight days, the President issued a proclamation, stating that the details of the organization of the constituent Congress could not be prepared within the limited period, but that they would be promulgated as soon as possible. The proclamation is filled with protestations of liberal principles, and of the determination of its author to retire from public affairs so soon as the organization of the new government will permit him to do so. The papers which I have sent you present the details, into which I do not consider it necessary to enter, because no safe inference can be drawn, from any of the published declarations of Paredes, as to his real intentions. He had given the most earnest assurances of his fidelity to Herrera, and, after he raised the standard of revolt, had repeatedly, and in the most solemn manner, declared his fixed intention not to occupy any place in the government; but all his movements indicate that his purpose, for several months past, has been to place himself at the head of affairs without control or limitation. He had successfully cajoled the leaders of the revolution into an opposite belief, and now finds himself strong enough, for the moment at least, to act without them. They looked upon him as an instrument, and find him a master. It is thought by many of the best informed persons here, that the revolution was gotten up chiefly by the friends of Santa Anna, who are still numerous and influential, and that, had they not been outwitted by Paredes, the way would soon have been prepared for his return from exile and restoration to power.

Paredes has formed a cabinet composed of General Almonte, as Minister of War; Messrs. Castillo y Lanzas, of Foreign Relations; Parres, of Hacienda, and Becerra, of Justice, &c. With the exception of Almonte, they have not hitherto occupied any very prominent position in public affairs. Mr. Castillo y Lanzas was, some years since, chargé d'affaires at Washington. He is an intelligent and well educated gentleman, and were he permitted to exercise any control, would, as I have reason to know from free conversations with him at a time when he had no idea of being appointed to his present place, be decidedly favorable to an amicable adjustment of all questions pending between the two governments. * * * * * *

I will not hazard any conjecture as to the probable duration of the power of Paredes. In his recent movements he has manifested tact and energy. While exercising dictatorial power, he has abstained from all ostentatious display—he has not established himself in the national palace, where the Presidents have always resided—he moves about unattended. * * * The civil authorities throughout the country have generally acquiesced in the new state of things, but they will be prepared to throw off the yoke, if they can secure the co-operation of a portion of the troops. Arista, who commands on the frontier of Texas, is the only general now openly opposed to Paredes. His command has been transferred to General de la Vega. * * * * But the greatest difficulty with which Paredes has to contend is in the state of the finances. Indeed, I do not see where means can possibly be found to carry on the government. The annual expense of the army alone exceeds twenty-one millions of dollars, while the entire net revenue is not more than ten to twelve millions. The amount of the public debt cannot be ascertained with any degree of precision; but it does not fall much, if at all, short of one hundred and fifty millions. On a small portion of it partial payments of interest are occasionally made; for the balance no provision whatever is thought of. The best index of the state of Mexican credit is the price of a class of securities, on which the interest, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, had until recently been paid with some degree of regularity, and for which a part of the import duties, supposed to be sufficient, had been specially hypothecated. They are now nominally at 25 per cent., but if offered in any quantity would not command 20 cents on the dollar. While there is a prospect of war with the United States, no capitalist will loan money at any rate, however onerous. Every branch of the revenue is already pledged in advance. The troops must be paid or they will revolt, and any attempt to reduce the military establishment would probably be attended with the same result.

* * * * * *

You will be surprised at the prolongation of my stay in the capital. During the progress of the revolution the roads were infested by robbers, and scarcely a diligence passed on that to Vera Cruz without being plundered. Immediately after the entry of Paredes, I applied verbally, through our consul, to the commandant general for an escort to Jalapa, but was informed that there were no disposable troops on the road. Mr. Castillo took possession of the department of foreign affairs on the 6th instant, when Mr. Black, at my request, addressed him a written application for an escort. Mr. Castillo, on the 8th instant, replied that public order not having been yet completely restored, the force necessary for the escort could not be spared, but that it would be given when the state of political affairs would permit it, of which the consul should have timely notice. I send copies of these notes, (Nos. 1 and 2.) Nothing has since been heard on this subject. * * * * I shall not be surprised to receive, in a day or two, notice of the escort being at my disposition. When received, I shall proceed, without delay, to Jalapa. If there be any disposition on the part of those now in power to reconsider the decision of their predecessors, I feel satisfied that my absence from the capital will tend rather to accelerate than to retard its manifestation. I learn from good authority that my notes to Mr. Peña y Peña have been submitted to the council of government, but have not yet been considered.

I send the letter of Mr. Peña y Peña, addressed to you, which, being sealed, I declined forwarding until furnished with a copy. I have taken the liberty of breaking the seal. You will find the letter to be a brief summary of his note to me of 20th December.

P. S.—15*th January*. Mr. Black has received from Mr. Castillo notice that an escort will be furnished when required by me. I shall leave on the 17th instant, accompanied by Mr. Parrott,

[Enclosure No. 1.—Translation.]

Mr. Pena y Pena to Mr. Buchanan.

NATIONAL PALACE,
Mexico, December 20, 1845.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations of the Mexican republic, has the honor, in answer to the note which the honorable Secretary of State of the United States did him the honor to address to him, under date of the 10th of November last, making known to him the diplomatic mission with which his excellency the President of the said States had intrusted Mr. John Slidell, near the government of this republic, to say, that, as the proposition made to this government by the American consul on the 13th of October last, that it should hear the propositions which the government of the United States might make for terminating the differences unhappily subsisting between the two republics, was accepted with the express condition that the person charged to make those propositions should come invested with powers ad hoc for that purpose; and, as those which have been conferred upon Mr. Slidell give him the character of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to reside in the republic, he cannot be admitted by this government to perform his mission, inasmuch as, in the actual state of interruption of the relations between Mexico and the United States, it was necessary, before the reception of a minister of that class, that the questions which have arisen from the events in Texas should have been settled definitively, in a conciliatory and honorable manner; to this object, solely and exclusively, should the mission of Mr. Slidell have been directed; and under this supposition, as distinctly stated, the government of the undersigned was ready to receive him.

In the note this day addressed to that gentleman, are explained the reasons on which this refusal is based; and it is also declared that no variation has taken place in the sentiments expressed by the undersigned to the consul of the United States in his confidential note of the 14th of October last; on the contrary, those sentiments are repeated; and he would have the utmost satisfaction in treating with Mr. Slidell, so soon as he should have presented credentials which authorize him exclusively to settle the differences existing between the two countries. If this object could be attained, there would be no inconvenience then in receiving him in the character of minister resident near the government of the undersigned.

In addressing the present note to the Secretary of State of the United States, the undersigned, having no doubt that the just motives which determine his excellency the president not to receive Mr. Slidell in the character in which he presents himself will be properly appreciated, seizes this occasion to offer the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

MANUEL DE LA PEÑA Y PEÑA.

Hon. James Buchanan,
Secretary of State of the United States.

[Extract.]

Department of State,
Washington, January 20, 1846.

I have the honor to transmit, herewith, your commission as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Mexican republic, under the appointment made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Your despatches Nos. 2 and 3, under date, respectively, the 30th November and 17th December, have been received; and I shall await the arrival of others by the "Porpoise" with much solicitude. Should the Mexican government, by finally refusing to receive you, consummate the act of folly and bad faith of which they have afforded such strong indications, nothing will then remain for this government but to take the redress of the wrongs of its citizens into its own hands.

In the event of such a refusal, the course which you have determined to pursue is the proper one. You ought, in your own language, so to conduct yourself as to throw the whole odium of the failure of the negotiation upon the Mexican government; point out, in the most temperate manner, the immediate consequences of so unheard of a violation of all the usages which govern the intercourse between civilized nations; and declare your intention to remain in Mexico until you can receive instructions adapted to the exigencies of the case. This sojourn will afford you an honorable opportunity to watch the course of events, and avail yourself of any favorable circumstances which, in the meantime, may occur. Should a revolution have taken place before the 1st of January, the day appointed for the meeting of Congress, (an event which you deemed probable,) or should a change of ministry have been effected, which you considered almost certain, this delay will enable you to ascertain the views and wishes of the new government or administration. The desire of the President is, that you should conduct yourself with such wisdom and firmness in the crisis, that the voice of the American people shall be unanimous in favor of redressing the wrongs of our much injured and long suffering claimants.

It would seem to be the desire of the Mexican government to evade the redress of the real injuries of our citizens, by confining the negotiation to the adjustment of a pecuniary indemnity for its imaginary rights over Texas. This cannot be tolerated. The two subjects must proceed hand in hand; they can never be separated. It is evidently with the view of thus limiting the negotiation that the Mexican authorities have been quibbling about the mere form of your credentials, without ever asking whether you had instructions and full powers to adjust the Texan boundary. The advice of the council of government seems to have been dictated by the same spirit. They do not advise the Mexican government to refuse to receive you; but, assuming the fact that the government had agreed to receive a plenipotentiary to treat upon the subject of Texas alone, they infer that it is not bound to receive an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary without this limitation.

In the meantime, the President, in anticipation of the final refusal of the Mexican government to receive you, has ordered the army of Texas to advance and take position on the left bank of the Rio Grande; and has directed that a strong fleet shall be immediately assembled in the gulf of Mexico. He will thus be prepared to act with vigor and promptitude, the moment that Congress shall give him the authority.

This despatch will not be transmitted to you by the "Mississippi." That vessel will be detained at Pensacola for the purpose of conveying to you instructions, with the least possible delay, after we shall have heard from you by the "Porpoise," and of bringing you home, in case this shall become necessary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 28, 1846.

Your despatches, dated the 27th and 29th December last, (erroneously numbered 2 and 3, instead of 3 and 4,) were received at this department on the 23d instant.

After a careful and critical examination of their contents, the President entirely approves your conduct. The exposure, contained in your reply to the Mexican minister for foreign affairs, of the evasions and subterfuges of his government in excuse of their refusal to recognise you as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, is so complete as to leave nothing for me to add upon the subject. It is now, however, morally certain that the insurrection of Paredes has proved successful, and that a new administration of some kind or other at this moment controls that unfortunate country.

The question arises, therefore, what course you should pursue in this contingency. In my despatch of the 20th instant, I have already anticipated nearly all that it is necessary to say in answer to this question. The President is sincerely desirous to preserve peace with Mexico. Both inclination and policy dictate this course. Should the Mexican government, however, finally refuse to receive you, the cup of forbearance will then have been exhausted. Nothing can remain but to take the redress of the injuries to our citizens, and the insults to our government, into our own hands. In view of this serious alternative, every honorable effort should be made before a final rupture. You should wait patiently for a final decision on the question of your reception, unless it should be unreasonably protracted, or you should clearly discover that they are trifling with this government. It is impossible for any person not upon the spot and conversant with the motives and movements of the revolutionary government now most probably existing in Mexico, to give you precise instructions how long your forbearance ought to continue. Much must necessarily be left to your own discretion. In general terms, I may say that you should take care to act with such prudence and firmness that it may appear manifest to the people of the United States, and to the world, that a rupture could not be honorably avoided. After this, should the Mexican government finally refuse to receive you, then demand passports from the proper authority, and return to the United States. It will then become the duty of the President to submit the whole case to Congress, and call upon the nation to assert its just rights, and avenge its injured honor.

In conclusion, there is one portion of your despatch of the 27th ultimo on which I shall make a single remark. You seem to consider it indispensable, before the commencement of any negotiation with the Mexican government, that there should be an unqualified retraction of the note of Mr. Peña y Peña to you of the 20th ultimo. This might be a necessary preliminary, if there had been no change of government. But in the present probable condition of affairs, under a new and entirely distinct government, and not merely a change of administration, such a retraction, however desirable, ought not to interpose an insuperable obstacle to negotiation.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Jalapa, February 6, 1846.

I reached this place on the 20th ultimo. Since my despatch of the 14th ultimo, nothing has occurred to indicate the course likely to be taken by the existing government as to my reception; but I think that it will mainly be controlled by the aspect of the Oregon question. Should our difficulties with Great Britain continue to present a prospect of war with that power, there will be but a very faint hope of a change of policy here.

* * * * * *

I send you a copy of a communication of Mr. Peña y Peña to the council of government, made on the 11th December, inviting an expression of the opinion of the council on the subject of my recognition, and suggesting his reasons why it should be refused. This document presents, in the most glaring light, the bad faith of the late government; and, in connexion with the statement of Consul Black, accompanying my despatch of 17th December, shows in the most conclusive manner that, from the moment my arrival was announced, it had determined to avail itself of any pretence, however frivolous, to refuse a reception, in the hope that, by thus depriving its opponents of their chief theme of reproach and agitation, the impending blow would be averted. Mr. Peña y Peña, after stating to the council substantially the same objections to my credentials as are embodied in his note to me of 20th December, gives, as an additional and conclusive reason for their insufficiency, the fact of my appointment not having been confirmed by the Senate.

The anxiously expected convocatoria, or edict, of Paredes, calling together the constituent congress, and establishing the mode of its election, was promulgated on the 27th ultimo. It is, perhaps, the most singular instrument of the kind that has ever appeared; but its tendency could easily have been anticipated, as it was known that its preparation was allotted to Lucas Alaman, who has long been the avowed advocate of monarchical principles. The electoral machinery is extremely complicated, and has evidently been framed that its complexity might, to a certain extent, conceal the purpose which it is intended to effect. Different classes are to be represented, each class having a distinct constituency, with widely varying qualifications for the right of suffrage. The assembly has unlimited powers to form a constitution, which is to take effect without any appeal to the people or the departments. It is to consist of one hundred and sixty members, one hundred of whom are to be chosen by land owners, merchants, manufacturers, proprietors of mines, and members of certain professions. The remaining sixty members are to be chosen by the judiciary, administrative officers, the clergy, and the military. The constituent body will be extremely limited; the payment of a very high rate of direct contribution being required for the exercise of the right of suffrage, and still higher rates are established for the qualifications of the members of the assembly. It will give to Parades the power of returning a very large majority of members, prepared to do anything which he may dictate. The congress is to meet four months from the date of the convocatoria; nine months are allowed to form the new constitution. During this interval of thirteen months, he will, of course, continue to exercise uncontrolled power; unless, in the meantime, some discontented generals succeed in making a counter-revolution. This can only be avoided by punctual payment of the army, and by carefully abstaining from the concentration of any large force out of the capital.

Since the accession of Parades, no payments have been made, excepting to the troops; none of the civil employeés have received any part of their salaries; and, as I mentioned in a previous despatch, the expenses of the army, alone, greatly exceed the entire revenue of the country. How this financial difficulty can be overcome, is a problem not easily solved. It is generally understood that the current disbursements have been met by the voluntary contributions of the clergy; but this is a resource which must soon be exhausted. Loans from domestic or foreign capitalists, in the present state of affairs, are out of the question. The only expedient yet resorted to for the increase of the revenue, has been the permission to introduce raw cotton at the rate of ten dollars per quintal, payable in advance at the moment of receiving the permit. Much reliance has been placed upon this measure; but, by late letters from Mexico, I learn that permits had been taken out only for two thousand quintals.

By the plan of provisional government of the 3d of January, it was solemnly declared, that it should be administered in conformity with existing laws; but an exception was made in favor of such measures as might be necessary "to preserve the integrity of the territory;" and, by the decree for the admission of cotton, all moneys received for the cotton licenses are to be devoted to this object. This clause (allowing the exercise of extraordinary powers for the preservation of the integrity of the territory) will be appealed to in justification of any proceedings, however despotic, which Parades may find it expedient to adopt. The mask of liberal principles has, indeed, been already thrown off. An arbitrary edict, issued by Santa Anna in 1839, abolishing the liberty of the press, was revived simultaneously with the promulgation of the convocatoria, and is evidently intended to silence all criticism of its provisions. Offending editors are to be sent, without trial, to the fortresses of San Juan de Ulloa and Acapulco. The feeling of the small portion of the population who have any opinions on political subjects, is almost universally opposed to the convocatoria; but, as few are disposed to incur any risk in announcing or sustaining their principles, and there are no means of producing anything like concert of action, there is little chance of any resistance to the usurpation of Paredes, unless some of the troops should "pronounce" against him. This may well happen; for although the disaffection to Herrera was very general in the army, many of the officers were not well disposed towards Paredes. Some of the regiments where this feeling was supposed to exist have been removed from the capital, and great dissatisfaction is said to have been manifested by them.

For some time past rumors have been rife of the establishment of a monarchy, in the person of a foreign prince. Such an idea is undoubtedly entertained by some of the clergy, and a few other persons of note in the city of Mexico; but it receives little countenance in the army, where almost every general indulges aspirations for the presidency, and is universally repudiated in the departments. Paredes unquestionably wishes to establish a despotic government; but it is equally certain that he intends to place himself at its head. His power is now established (for the time at least) throughout the country, Arista having surrendered his command; but the submission of the civil authorities generally is sullen and unwilling, and can only be maintained by military force. Yucatan is of course excepted from this remark. She has declared her absolute separation; and, as she has heretofore successfully resisted all the force that Santa Anna could direct against her, with resources infinitely superior to any which the existing government can command, she cannot now fail to maintain her independence.

The minister of foreign affairs has acknowledged the reception of Mr. Black's communication, notifying the revocation of the powers of Mr. Emilio Voss. I send a copy of his note, No. 3.

* * * * * * *

P. S.—The mail which has just arrived brings intelligence that the department of Sinaloa has declared its independence, and that the garrison of Mazatlan has pronounced against Paredes. This is an important movement, as Mazatlan is one of the ports that contribute most largely to the revenue, its receipts being inferior only to those of Vera Cruz.

[Enclosure No. 1.—Translation.]

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
GOVERNMENT, AND POLICE,
Mexico, December 11, 1845.

I have the honor to submit to the council, through the medium of your excellency, the documents relative to the appointment of a commissioner of the government of the United States of America for the peaceable settlement of the questions at issue between the two republics.

As you will please to observe to the council, the proposition to appoint such a commissioner came spontaneously from the American government, which made it through the medium of its consul in Mexico; and our government accepted it, with the declaration that it did so in order to give a new proof that, even in the midst of its grievances, and of its firm decision to exact adequate reparation, it neither repelled nor contemned the measure of reason and peace to which it was invited, so that the proposition, as well as the acceptance, rested upon the exact and definite understanding that the commissioner should be appointed ad hoc; that is to say, for the settlement of the questions of Texas in a pacific and honorable manner.

As the council will also see, in the last official communications among the documents submitted, Mr. John Slidell has arrived in this capital as commissioner of the United States, but it does not appear that this gentleman has been appointed by his government as a minister instructed specially to treat on the questions of Texas, but with the general and absolute attributes of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary and that he is to reside in that character near the Mexican government, in the same manner and almost in the same words used in accrediting Mr. Wilson Shannon, as may be seen by reference to the document on that subject herewith submitted.

From these facts naturally flow the following reflections:

First. The mission of this commissioner has degenerated substantially from the class proposed on the part of the United States and accepted by our government.

Secondly. If this commissioner should be received simply in the character in which he appears, grounds would justly be afforded for the presumption that the relations between us and the United States remain free and open; a presumption which would be in reality most erroneous, and at the same time most injurious to the dignity and interests of Mexico.

Thirdly. Should he be admitted in the character in which he presents himself, however explicitly we might protest that he was received only for the purpose of hearing his peaceful propositions respecting the affairs of Texas, it would always appear to the whole world that he had been received as and had been a minister plenipotentiary residing near the Mexican republic; and it is evident that this fact might serve to confuse or to diminish the most clear and direct protests.

Fourthly. The government of Mexico neither could nor ought to refuse the invitation given to it on the part of the United States to hear and deliberate upon peaceful propositions respecting Texas. In adopting this course, which morality requires, prudence counsels, and the most learned and judicious publicists recommend, the government observed the principle which they lay down as just and proper: "As the evil of war is terrible, in the same proportion are nations called on to reserve to themselves the means of terminating it. It is therefore necessary that they should be able to send ministers to each other, even in the midst of hostilities, in order to make propositions for peace, or tending to diminish the fury of arms. * * * It may be stated, as a general maxim, that the minister of an enemy ought always to be admitted and heard; that is to say, that war alone, and of itself, is not a sufficient reason for refusing to hear any proposition which an enemy may offer," &c. But if this doctrine be just and rational, so also is it just that the fact of a nation's having assented to hear propositions of peace made to it by its enemy should not serve as a means of obscuring its rights and silencing, in that way, the demands of its justice. Such would be the case if Mexico, after assenting to receive and hear a commissioner of the United States who should come to make propositions of peace respecting the department of Texas, should admit a minister of that nation, absolute and general, a common plenipotentiary to reside near the Mexican republic.

Fifthly. It is true that in the communication addressed to our President by the President of the United States, it is declared that the commissioner is informed of the sincere desire of the latter to restore, cultivate and strengthen friendship and good correspondence between the two countries; but it is clear that neither this clause, nor still less the single word restore, is sufficient to give to Mr. Slidell the special character of commissioner to make propositions respecting Texas, calculated to establish peace firmly, and to arrest the evils of war by a definitive settlement. The reason of this is, that the full powers of such a minister should be adequate to the business for which he is appointed.

Sixthly. The settlement which the United States seek to effect in order to attain peace and good correspondence with Mexico, which have been suspended by the occurrences in Texas, is a point necessarily to be determined before any other whatever; and until that is terminated entirely and peacefully, it will be impossible to appoint and admit an American minister to establish his residence near the government of Mexico.

Seventhly. Moreover, the President of the United States cannot appoint ambassadors, nor any other public ministers, nor even consuls, except with the consent of the Senate. This is fixed by the second paragraph of the second section, article second, of their national constitution. But in the credentials exhibited by Mr. Slidell, this requisite, indispensable to give legality to his mission, does not appear.

Eighthly. Nor could that requisite have appeared, as Mr. Slidell was appointed by the President on the 10th of November last, and Congress did not assemble until the first Monday of the present month of December, agreeably to the second paragraph of the fourth section, article first, of the same constitution.

Ninthly, and finally. It is a principle most salutary and natural that he who is about to treat with another has the right to assure himself, by inquiries, as to the person and the powers of the individual with whom he is to enter into negotiation. And this universal principle of jurisprudence extends also to affairs between nation and nation. Hence comes the necessity that every minister should present his credentials; and hence his examination and qualification by the government to which he presents himself.

From all these considerations, the supreme government concludes that Mr. Slidell is not entitled to be admitted, in the case in question, as a commissioner of the government of the United States, with the object of hearing his propositions, and settling upon them the affairs of Texas; that it will admit the commissioner whenever he may present himself in compliance with the conditions wanting in the credentials, as above mentioned; and that this should be the answer given to him. The supreme government, however, desiring to fortify its judgment, in a case of so delicate a nature, by the opinion of its enlightened council, hopes that this body will, without delay, communicate what it considers proper to be done in the affair.

Legation of the United States ot America,
Jalapa, February 17, 1846.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, on this day, of your despatch No. 5, dated 20th ultimo.

I send, herewith, duplicate of mine, of 6th instant, which will place you in possession of the present state of affairs in Mexico. Intelligence has since been received that the authorities of the departments of Nuevo Leon, Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, Michoacan, and Queretaro, have protested, in strong terms, against the usurpation of Paredes, and, refusing to continue in the exercise of their functions, have dissolved. The government is evidently losing ground, and the disaffection which is openly manifested in the northern departments is extending itself in every direction. The civil employees are still without pay; but, what is vastly more important, the stipend of the troops in the capital is now seven days in arrear, and there is not a dollar in the treasury. As the Mexican soldier supplies his own food, the failure to pay him regularly is a much more serious matter than in armies where a regular commissariat provides for his daily subsistence. Appearances justify the belief that Paredes will not be able to sustain himself until the meeting of the constituent Congress; that his government will perish from inanition, if from no other cause.

I may, perhaps, have stated too unqualifiedly my opinion that if a despotism were established, Paredes intended to place himself at its head.

I send you a copy of the "Tiempo," a journal lately established; it is conducted by Lucas Alaman, who is reputed to be the most confidential adviser of Paredes. It contains the confession of faith of the monarchist party, and unreservedly advocates the calling of a foreign prince to the throne. This might be considered conclusive evidence of the views of Paredes, were it not for the existence of two other ministerial journals, which are strongly opposed to a monarchy; one of them, indeed, has decided federal tendencies.

I shall anxiously await your definite instructions by the "Mississippi." The advance of General Taylor's force to the left bank of the Rio del Norte, and the strengthening our squadron in the gulf, are wise measures, which may exercise a salutary influence upon the course of this government.

I have the honor, &c.,

JOHN SLIDELL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Jalapa, March 1, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, on the 27th ultimo, of your despatch of the 28th January, and am highly gratified to learn that my conduct has been so fully approved by the President and by you.

In conformity with your instructions, I have addressed a note to the minister of foreign relations, re-submitting the question of my recognition for final decision. I send you a copy. I have not fixed, in my note, any precise term for an answer; but I have requested our consul at Mexico to hand the note, personally, to Mr. Castillo y Lanzas, and, if he find him disposed to converse upon the subject, to say to him that I thought it more conciliatory and courteous not to mention it in my official communication, but that, if a definite and favorable reply were not received by me on the 15th instant, I should then apply for my passports. This will allow an entire week for consultation and the preparation of the answer.

Since my despatch of 17th ultimo, an important change has occurred in the cabinet of Paredes. Almonte has resigned the Secretaryship of War; his letter of resignation does not assign the cause, but his friends say that it is on account of his disapprobation of the monarchical tendencies of Paredes. * *

My note will be presented at the most propitious moment that could have been selected. All attempts to effect a loan have completely failed. The suspicion of an intention to introduce a foreign monarch has tended very much to abate the clamor against the United States, and many now begin to look in that direction for support and protection against European interference.

My letters from Mexico speak confidently of my recognition; but there is no safety in reasoning from probabilities or analogies as to the course of public men in this country. * * * If, however, I should now be received, I think that my prospects of successful negotiation will be better than if no obstacles had been opposed to my recognition in the first instance.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

Mr. Slidell to Don J. Castillo y Lanzas.

JALAPA, March 1, 1846.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Mexican republic, had the honor, on the eighth day of December last, to address to his excellency Manuel de la Peña y Peña, then minister of foreign relations, a copy of his credentials, with a request that he might be informed when he would be admitted to present the original to the President of the Mexican republic. On the 16th December, the undersigned was informed by Mr. Peña y Peña that difficulties existed in relation to the tenor of his credentials, which made it necessary to consult the council of government thereon, and on the twentieth of the same month, he was advised by Mr. Peña y Peña that the Mexican government had decided not to recognise him in his capacity of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

To these communications of the minister of foreign relations the undersigned replied, under dates of 20th and 24th December, refuting the reasoning by which the refusal to recognize him was attempted to be sustained, vindicating the course pursued by his government, and declaring his intention to proceed to Jalapa, there to await instructions adapted to an emergency so entirely unlooked for. He has now received these instructions.

The President of the United States entirely approves the course pursued by the undersigned, and the communications by him addressed to the Mexican government. Had the then existing government continued in power, as no alternative would have remained, the undersigned would have been directed to demand his passports, the President of the United States would have submitted the whole case to Congress, and called upon the nation to assert its just rights, and avenge its injured honor.

The destinies of the Mexican republic, however, having since been committed to other hands, the President is unwilling to take a course which would inevitably result in war, without making another effort to avert so great a calamity. He wishes, by exhausting every honorable means of conciliation, to demonstrate to the civilized world that, if its peace shall be disturbed, the responsibility must fall upon Mexico alone. He is sincerely desirous to preserve that peace; but the state of quasi hostility which now exists on the part of Mexico is one which is incompatible with the dignity and interests of the United States; and it is for the Mexican government to decide whether it snall give place to friendly negotiation, or lead to an open rupture.

It would be idle to repeat the arguments which the undersigned had the honor to present in his notes of the 20th and 24th December, above referred to. He has nothing to add to them, but is instructed again to present them to the consideration of the President ad interim of the Mexican republic, General Mariano Paredes y Arrillago.

The undersigned begs leave to suggest, most respectfully, to your excellency, that inasmuch as ample time has been afforded for the most mature reflection upon the momentous interests involved in the question of his recognition, as little delay as possible may occur in notifying him of the final decision of his excellency the President ad interim. He cannot but indulge the hope that it will be such as to result in the establishment of cordial and lasting amity between the two republics.

The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity of presenting to his excellency Don Joaquim Castillo y Lanzas the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

JOHN SLIDELL.

To his Excellency Don JOAQUIM CASTILLO Y LANZAS,
Minister of Foreign Relations and Government.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 12, 1846.

The duplicate of your despatch No. 6, of the 6th ultimo, and your despatch No. 7, have been received. In the latter you state that you shall anxiously await my definitive instructions by the "Mississippi."

It is not deemed necessary to modify the instructions which you have already received, except in a single particular, and this arises from the late revolution effected in the government of the Mexican republic by General Paredes.

I am directed by the President to instruct you not to leave that republic until you shall have made a formal demand to be received by the new government. The government of Paredes came into existence not by a regular constitutional succession, but in consequence of a military revolution, by which the subsisting constitutional authorities were subverted. It cannot be considered as a mere continuance of the government of Herrera. On the contrary, the form of government has been entirely changed, as well as the high functionaries at the head of the administration. The two governments are certainly not so identical that the refusal of the one to receive you ought to be considered conclusive evidence that such would be the determination of the other. It would be difficult, on such a presumption, in regard to so feeble and distracted a country as Mexico, to satisfy the American people that all had been done which ought to have been done to avoid the necessity of resorting to hostilities.

On your return to the United States, energetic measures against Mexico would at once be recommended by the President; and these might fail to obtain the support of Congress, if it could be asserted that the existing government had not refused to receive our minister. It would not be a sufficient answer to such an allegation that the government of Herrara had refused to receive you, and that you were therefore justified in leaving the country, after a short delay, because, in the meantime, the government of Parades had not voluntarily offered to reverse the decision of his predecessor.

The President believes that for the purpose of making this demand, you ought to return to the city of Mexico, if this be practicable consistently with the national honor. It was prudent for you to leave it during the pendency of the late revolution, but this reason no longer continues. Under existing circumstances, your presence there might be productive of the most beneficial consequences.

The time when you shall ask to be received by the government of Parades is left to your own discretion. The President thinks this ought to be done speedily, unless good reasons exist to the contrary. Your demand ought to be couched in strong but respectful language. It can no longer be resisted on the ridiculous pretence that your appointment has not been confirmed by the Senate.

I transmit you, herewith, a sealed letter from the President of the United States, accrediting you in your official character, to General Parades as President ad interim of the Mexican republic. An open copy of the letter is also enclosed, which you will communicate to the minister for foreign affairs, with a request for him to name a time for you to present the original to the acting President in person.

In regard to the time of your departure from the Mexican republic, the President is willing to extend your discretion. In the present distracted condition of that republic, it is impossible for those at a distance to decide as correctly what ought to be your course in this particular as you can yourself upon the spot. The intelligence which you have communicated, "that the department of Sinaloa has declared its independence," "that the garrison of Mazatlan has pronounced against Parades," and "that the authorities of the departments of Nuevo Leon, Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, Michoacan, and Queretaro have protested in strong terms against the usurpation of Parades, and, refusing to continue in the exercise of their functions, have dissolved," may well exercise an influence on your decision. Indeed, you suppose that appearances justify the belief that Parades will not be able to sustain himself until the meeting of the constituent congress; that his government will perish from inanition, if from no other cause.

In this critical posture of Mexican affairs, it will be for yourself to decide the question of the time of your departure according to events as they may occur. If, after you shall have fulfilled your instructions, you should indulge a reasonable hope that by continuing in Mexico you could thus best subserve the interests of your country, then you ought to remain, provided this can be done with honor. The President reposes entire confidence in your patriotism and discretion, and knows that no temporary inconvenience to yourself will prevent you from performing your duty. It may be that, when prepared to take your departure, another revolution might be impending, the result of which would enable you, by a timely interposition, to accomplish the great objects of your mission. Besides, in the present distracted condition of Mexico, it is of importance that we should have an able and discreet agent in that country to watch the progress of events, and to communicate information on which the department may rely. Jalapa is probably not so favorable a position for observation as the city of Mexico.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Jalapa, March 18, 1846.

On the 15th instant I received from the minister of foreign relations a reply to my communication of the 1st instant, of which you have already been advised.

It is a peremptory refusal to receive me in the capacity of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. I have consequently, in conformity with your instructions, applied for my passports, and, so soon as they are received, I shall proceed to Vera Cruz, there to embark for New Orleans. I send you copies of the note of the minister of foreign relations, and of my reply.

The state of affairs in this country has not materially varied since I had the honor of addressing you on the 1st instant. The downward course of the Paredes government is continued with accelerated speed. I do not think that he can sustain himself until the period fixed for the meeting of his constituent congress; and I should not be surprised at his ejection from his usurped power at a much earlier day. My letters from the capital all concur as to the extreme precariousness of his tenure of office, and the great excitement that exists not only there, but throughout the departments. The apprehension of his intention to introduce an alien monarchy has excited the public mind to a degree of which I had not considered it capable.

I am at a loss whether to ascribe his refusal to receive me, at a moment when his position is so critical, to the dread of having the pretext which he had so successfully used against Herrera employed against himself, or to a reliance upon foreign intervention. Perhaps his motive may be a mixed one. * * * * *

As to any changes of rulers in Mexico, I look upon them as a matter of great indifference. We shall never be able to treat with her on fair terms until she has been taught to respect us. It certainly was proper to place us in the strongest moral position before our own people and the world, by exhausting every possible means of conciliation; but here all amicable advances are considered as indicative either of weakness or treachery. *

The next movement will probably be a "pronunciamento" of the federal party sustained by a portion of the army. It is said, and (strange as it may appear) on good authority, that the expelled dictator Santa Anna will be invited to head this liberal movement. The leading military men are in his favor, and, should he accept the invitation, he will have little difficulty in putting down Parades.

[Enclosure No. 1.—Translation.]

Mr. Castillo y Lanzas to Mr. Slidell.

National Palace, Mexico, March 12, 1846.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations and government of the republic, has the honor to acknowledge receipt of the note addressed to him from Jalapa, under date of the 1st instant, by his excellency John Slidell, appointed minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the United States of America.

So soon as the said communication was received by the undersigned, he proceeded to communicate it to his excellency the President ad interim; and he, after deliberately considering its contents, and maturely meditating upon the business, has seen fit to order the undersigned to make known to Mr. Slidell, in reply, as he now has the honor of doing, that the Mexican government cannot receive him as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to reside near it.

And here the undersigned might terminate his note, if reasons of great weight did not convince him of the necessity of making some reflections in this place; not through fear of the consequences which may result from this decisive resolve, but through the respect which he owes to reason and to justice.

It is true that this warlike display with which the American Union presents herself—by sea, with her squadrons on both coasts; by land, with her invading forces advancing by the northern frontiers; at the same time that, by her minister plenipotentiary, propositions are made for conciliation and accommodation—would be a sufficiently powerful reason for not listening to them, so long as all threatening shall not be withdrawn, even to the slightest appearance of hostility. But even this is waived by the government of the republic, in order that it may in all frankness and loyalty enter into the discussion, relying solely upon reason and facts. A simple reference to the truth plainly stated, suffices to show the justice by which Mexico is upheld in the question now under discussion.

The vehement desire of the government of the United States to extend its already immense territory, at the expense of that of Mexico, has been manifest for many years; and it is beyond all doubt that, in regard to Texas at least, this has been their firm and constant determination; for it has been so declared categorically and officially by an authorized representative of the Union, whose assertion, strange and injurious as was its frankness, has nevertheless not been belied by the United States.

Putting out of view, now, all the events to which this marked intent has given rise through a long series of years—events which have served not only to prove it more strongly, but also to show that no means, of whatever kind they may be, were to be spared for its accomplishment—it is sufficient to attend to what occurred last year. This is the important part to the present case.

Considering the time as having come for carrying into effect the annexation of Texas, the United States, in union and by agreement with their natural allies and adherents in that territory, concerted the means for the purpose. The project was introduced into the American Congress. It was at first frustrated, thanks to the prudential considerations, the circumspection, and the wisdom with which the Senate of the Union then proceeded. Nevertheless, the project was reproduced in the following session, and was then approved and sanctioned in the form and terms known to the whole world.

A fact such as this, or, to speak with greater exactness, so notable an act of ursurpation, created an imperious necessity that Mexico, for her own honor, should repel it with proper firmness and dignity. The supreme government had beforehand declared that it would look upon such an act as a casus belli; and, as a consequence of this declaration, negotiation was by its very nature at an end, and war was the only resource of the Mexican government.

But before it proceeded to recover its outraged rights, propositions were addressed to it from the so called President of the republic of Texas, which had for their object to enter into an amicable accommodation upon the basis of her independence; and the government agreed to hear them, and consented to receive the commissioners who with this view were sent to it from Texas.

Moments so precious were not thrown away by the agents of the United States in Texas. Availing themselves of the statu quo of Mexico, they so prepared matters and directed affairs, that the already concerted annexation to the American Union should follow almost immediately.

Thus, this incorporation of a territory which had constituted an integral part of that of Mexico during the long period of the Spanish dominion, and after her emancipation for so long a term, without any interruption whatever, and which moreover had been recognized and sanctioned by the treaty of limits between the Mexican republic and the United States of America—this annexation was effected by the reprobated means of violence and fraud.

Civilized nations have beheld with amazement, at this enlightened and refined epoch, a powerful and well consolidated State, availing itself of the internal dissensions of a neighboring nation, putting its vigilance to sleep by protestations of friendship, setting in action all manner of springs and artifices, alternately plying intrigue and violence, and seizing a moment to despoil her of a precious part of her territory, regardless of the incontrovertible rights of the most unquestionable ownership, and the most uninterrupted possession.

Here, then, is the true position of the Mexican republic: despoiled, outraged, contemned, it is now attempted to subject her to a humiliating degradation. The sentiment of her own dignity will not allow her to consent to such ignominy.

After the definite and clear explanations rendered to his excellency Mr. Slidell, in the note of the 20th December last, referred to by him, it is not easy to comprehend how the Executive of the United States should still think it can find reasons for insisting upon that which was then refused upon grounds the most conclusive.

The consul of the United States in this capital addressed on the 13th of October to the then minister of foreign relations a confidential note, wherein, referring to what he had previously stated to the minister in an interview of the same character, he says:

"At the time of the suspension of the diplomatic relations between the two countries, General Almonte was assured of the desire felt by the President to adjust amicably every cause of complaint between the governments, and to cultivate the kindest and most friendly relations between the sister republics. He still continues to be animated by the same sentiments. He desires that all existing differences should be terminated amicably, by negotiation, and not by the sword.

"Actuated by these sentiments, the President has directed me to instruct you, in the absence of any diplomatic agent in Mexico, to ascertain from the Mexican government whether they would receive an envoy from the United States, entrusted with full power to adjust all the questions in dispute between the two governments. Should the answer be in the affirmative, such an envoy will be immediately despatched to Mexico."

To this the ministry now in the charge of the undersigned replied on the 15th of the same month, "that, although the nation is gravely offended by that of the United States, by reason of the acts committed by the latter towards the department of Texas, the property of the former, my government is disposed to receive the commissioner who may come from the United States to this capital with full powers from his government to arrange in a pacific, reasonable, and decorous manner, the present controversy; thereby giving a new proof that, even in the midst of injuries, and of its firm determination to exact the adequate reparation, it does not repel nor despise the part of reason and of peace to which it is invited by its adversary."

From these extracts it is manifest that it was the firm intention of the Mexican government to admit only a plenipotentiary from the United States clothed with powers ad hoc—that is to say, special powers to treat upon the question of Texas, and upon this alone, as preliminary to the renewal of friendly relations between the two countries, if the result should be such as to admit of their restoration, and then, but not before, of the reception of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near the same government.

Nor could the government of the republic on that occasion extend its engagement beyond this: for to admit any person sent by the United States in the character simply of the ordinary agents between friendly nations, whilst the grave question of Texas was still pending, directly and immediately affecting, as it does, the integrity of the Mexican territory, and the very nationality itself, would be equivalent to an acknowledgment that this question was at an end, thus prejudging it without even touching it, and to a recognition that the relations of friendship and harmony between the two nations were from that moment in fact re-established.

So very simple a truth is this, that the appointment of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary by the Executive of the United States, and the subsequent ratification of this appointment, notwithstanding all that was set forth on the subject by the government of Mexico, cause this act to appear as an attempt which the undesigned does not permit himself to qualify.

If good faith presides, as is to be supposed, over the dispositions of the government of the United States, what motive could exist for so anxiously repelling the indispensable restriction with which Mexico has acceded to the proposal spontaneously made by the former? If it was really and positively desired to tie up again the bonds of good understanding and friendship between the two nations, the way was very easy: the Mexican government offered to admit the plenipotentiary or commissioner who should come clothed with special powers to treat upon the question of Texas.

Upon this point the resolve of the Mexican government is immutable. And since in the extreme case it is the rights of the Mexican nation which will have to be affirmed, for it is her honor which has been outraged, and which will have to be avenged, her government will, if this necessity arise, call upon all her citizens to fulfil the sacred duty of defending their country.

A lover of peace, she would wish to ward off this sad contingency; and without fearing war, she would desire to avoid so great a calamity for both countries. For this she has offered herself, and will continue to offer herself, open to all honorable means of conciliation, and she anxiously desires that the present controversy may terminate in a reasonable and decorous manner.

In the actual state of things, to say that Mexico maintains a position of quasi hostility with respect to the United States, is to add a new offence to her previous injuries. Her attitude is one of defence, because she sees herself unjustly attacked; because a portion of her territory is occupied by the forces of a nation intent, without any right whatever, to possess itself of it; because her ports are threatened by the squadrons of the same power. Under such circumstances, is she to remain inactive, without taking measures suited to so rigorous an emergency?

It is then not upon Mexico, seeing her present state, that it devolves to decide if the issue shall be a friendly negotiation or an open rupture. It is long since her interests have made this necessary, and her dignity has demanded it; but in the hope of an accommodation at once honorable and pacific, she has silenced the clamor of these imperious exigencies.

It follows that, if war should finally become inevitable, and if in consequence of this war the peace of the civilized world should be disturbed, the responsibility will not fall on Mexico. It will all rest upon the United States; to them will the whole of it belong. Not upon Mexico, who, with a generosity unequalled admitted the American citizens who wished to colonize in Taxes, but upon the United States, who, bent upon possessing themselves, early or late, of that territory, encouraged emigration thither with that view, in order that, in due time, its inhabitants, converting themselves from colonists into its masters, should claim the country as their own, for the purpose of transferring it to the United States. Not upon Mexico, who, having in due season protested against so enormous a transgression, wished to remove all cause for controversy and hostilities, but upon the United States, who, to the scandal of the world, and in manifest violation of treaties, gave protection and aid to those guilty of a rebellion so iniquitous. Not upon Mexico, who, in the midst even of injuries so great and so repeated, has shown herself disposed to admit propositions for conciliation, but upon the United States, who, pretending sincerely to desire a friendly and honorable accommodation, have belied by their acts the sincerity of their words. Finally, not upon Mexico, who, putting out of view her own dearest interests, through her deference for peace, has entertained as long as was wished, the propositions which, with this view, might be made to her, but upon the United States, who, by frivolous pretexts, evade the conclusion of such an arrangement, proposing peace at the very moment when they are causing their squadrons and their troops to advance upon the ports and frontiers of Mexico, exacting a humiliation impossible to be submitted to, in order to find a pretext, if no reason can be found, which may occasion the breaking out of hostilities.

It is, therefore, upon the United States, and not upon Mexico, that it devolves to determine in the alternative presented by Mr. Slidell—that is, between a friendly negotiation and an open rupture.

The undersigned doubts not that he makes his excellency Mr. Slidell sensible that, in view of what is set forth in the present note, the Mexican government trusts that the Executive of the United States, in coming to the determination which it shall deem proper, will act with the deliberation and mature consideration demanded by the exceedingly grave interests involved in this very thorny question.

The Mexican government, preparing for war, should circumstances require it, will keep alive its flattering hope that peace will not be disturbed on the new continent; and in making this declaration in the face of the world, it emphatically disclaims all responsibility for the evils which may attend a struggle which it has not provoked, and which it has made every effort to avoid.

In communicating all this (by order of his government) to his excellency John Slidell, the undersigned avails himself of the opportunity to offer to him the assurance of his very distinguished consideration.

J. M. DE CASTILLO Y LANZAS.

His Excellency John Slidell.

[Enclosure No. 2.]

Mr. Slidell to Mr. Castillo.

Jalapa, March 17, 1846.

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of your excellency of the 12th instant, by which he is informed that the Mexican government cannot receive him in his capacity of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to reside near that government.

As it is the intention of the undersigned, in conformity with his instructions, to return to the United States with the least possible delay, embarking at Vera Cruz, he has now to request that he may be furnished with the necessary passports, which he will await at this place.

As your excellency has advanced no new arguments in support of the refusal to receive the undersigned as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, he will abstain from commenting upon that portion of the note of your excellency which, with a mere difference of phraseology, presents substantially the same reasoning as that urged by Mr. Peña y Peña in his note of the 20th December last; but he cannot permit, by his silence, the inference which would naturally be implied, of his assent to the correctness of the statements made by your excellency in relation to the question of Texas, and to the general course of policy which is so gratuitously ascribed to the government of the United States. In the review of these statements, which it becomes his duty to make, he will strive to preserve that calmness of tone and reserve of language which is most consistent with the consciousness of right, and the power to vindicate it, if necessary, and of which he regrets to find that your excellency has not given him the example. The United States can confidently appeal to the history of the events of the last twenty years as affording the most conclusive refutation of the charges of usurpation, violence, fraud, artifice, intrigue, and bad faith, so lavishly scattered through the note of your excellency.

It has never been pretended that the scheme of colonization of the territory of Texas, by citizens of the United States, was suggested by their government. It was in conformity with a policy deliberately adopted by that of Mexico, and she must accuse herself alone for results which the slightest foresight must have anticipated, from the introduction of a population whose character, habits, and opinions were so widely divergent from those of the people with whom it was attempted to amalgamate them. There is no ground for the assertion that "the United States, profiting by the generosity with which their citizens had been invited to Texas, and resolved, sooner or later, to take possession of that territory, encouraged emigration thither, with the view that its inhabitants, changing the character of colonists for that of masters, should seize upon the territory for the purpose of transferring it to the United States." It is true that no obstacles to this emigration were interposed by them, for it has ever been one of the most cherished articles of the political creed of the American people, that every citizen has the absolute and uncontrollable right to divest himself of his allegiance, and to seek, if he think proper, the advancement of his fortunes in foreign lands. Stimulated by the gratuitous allotment of lands to emigrants, and by the similarity, approaching, with the exception of religious tolerance, almost to identity, of the political institutions of the Mexican republic to those under which they had been reared, the population of Texas soon attained a developement that authorized the demand of a privilege which had been solemnly guarantied to them by the constitution of 1824—admission into the Mexican union as a separate State. A convention was held, and a State constitution formed, in conformity with the provisions of the fundamental compact of 1824. It was presented to the general congress, with a petition to be admitted into the union; the application was rejected, and the delegate imprisoned. Soon after, the constitutional congress of Mexico was dissolved by military force; the same arbitrary power convened a new congress, by which the federal constitution was abrogated, and a consolidated or central government established in its stead. Texas, as she had an unquestionable right to do, refused to acknowledge the authority of a government which had been imposed upon the other States by a successful military usurpation.

The compact which had bound her to the Mexican republic was dissolved; and, an abortive effort having been made to reduce her to subjection, she, on the 3d of March, 1836, declared herself an independent republic, and nobly sustained that declaration on the battle field of San Jacinto; by the complete defeat and destruction of a numerous and well appointed army, commanded by the president of the Mexican republic in person. She then demanded the recognition of her independence, and asked to be annexed to the United States. The language of President Jackson, in a communication by him addressed to Congress on the subject, affords a striking illustration of the good faith and forbearance towards Mexico which has ever characterized the conduct of the United States. He advised that no change should be made in the attitude of the United States, "if not until Mexico herself, or one of the great foreign powers, should recognise the independence of the new government, at least until the lapse of time, or course of events, should have proved, beyond cavil or dispute, the ability of the people of Texas to maintain their sovereignty, or to uphold the government constituted by them." These overtures on the part of Texas were pending for several years, but were not entertained by the government of the United States until the period had arrived when, in the language of President Jackson, above quoted, the lapse of time and course of events had proved, beyond cavil or dispute, the ability of her people to maintain her separate sovereignty. Her independence must be considered as a settled fact, which cannot be called in question. Nearly four years since, Mr. Webster, then Secretary of State, in a despatch to the minister of the United States at Mexico, said: "From the time of the battle of San Jacinto, in April, 1836, to the present moment, Texas has exhibited the same external signs of national independence as Mexico herself, and with quite as much stability of government. Practically free and independent; acknowledged as a political sovereignty by the principal powers of the world; no hostile foot finding rest within her territory for six or seven years; and Mexico herself refraining for all that period from any further attempt to re-establish her own authority over the territory;" three additional years of inaction on the part of Mexico elapsed, before the final action of the United States upon the question of annexation, with the assent of the same Senate whose prudence, circumspection, and wisdom, your excellency so justly eulogizes. And if any additional sanction could have been required to a measure so evidently just and proper, it has been afforded by Mexico herself, who, through her minister of foreign affairs, Mr. Cuevas, authorized by the national Congress, on the 19th of May last, declared: "The supreme government receives the four articles above mentioned as the preliminaries of a formal and definitive treaty; and, further, that it is disposed to commence the negotiation as Texas may desire, and to receive the commissioners which she may name for the purpose." The first condition was, "Mexico consents to acknowledge the independence of Texas." True it is, that, by the second condition, Texas engaged that she would stipulate in the treaty not to annex herself, or become subject, to any country whatever. When it is recollected that this preliminary arrangement was made through the intervention of the ministers of Great Britain and France, consequent upon the passage of the act of annexation, it cannot be denied that it was intended to apply solely to the United States; and that, while Mexico acknowledged her inability to contest the independence of Texas, and was prepared to abandon all her pretensions to that territory, she was induced to make this tardy and reluctant recognition—not by any abatement of her hostile sentiments towards her (so called) rebellious subjects, but in the hope of gratifying her unfriendly feelings against the United States.

The undersigned cannot but express his unfeigned surprise that, in the face of this incontrovertible evidence that Mexico had abandoned all intention or even hope of ever re establishing her authority over any portion of Texas, your excellency should have asserted that "Texas had been an integral part of Mexico, not only during the long period of Spanish dominion, but since its emancipation, without any interruption whatever during so long a space of time;" and, again, that "the United States had despoiled Mexico of a valuable portion of her territory, regardless of the incontrovertible rights of the most unquestionable property, and of the most constant possession." How weak must be the cause which can only be sustained by assertions so inconsistent with facts that are notorious to all the world; and how unfounded are all these vehement declamations against the usurpations and thirst for territorial aggrandizement of the United States! The independence of Texas, then, being a fact conceded by Mexico herself, she had no right to prescribe restrictions as to the form of government Texas might choose to assume, nor can she justly complain that Texas, with a wise appreciation of her true interests, has thought proper to merge her sovereignty in that of the United States.

The Mexican government cannot shift the responsibility of war upon the United States, by assuming that they are the aggressors. A plain, unanswerable fact responds to all the subtleties and sophistries by which it is attempted to obscure the real question; that fact is, the presence in Mexico of a minister of the United States, clothed with full power to settle all the questions in dispute between the two nations, and among them that of Texas. Their complaints are mutual; the consideration of them cannot be separated; and they must be settled by the same negotiation, or by the arbitrament which Mexico herself has elected. With what reason does Mexico attribute to the United States the desire of finding a pretext to commence hostilities? The appearance of a few ships of war on the Mexican coasts, and the advance of a small military force to the frontier of Texas, are cited as evidence that the declarations of a desire to preserve peace are insincere. Surely it cannot be necessary to remind your excellency that the menaces of war have all proceeded from Mexico; and it would seem that the elevation to power of its actual government was too recent to have afforded your excellency time to forget the ostensible reasons for which that which preceded it was overthrown. The crime imputed to the then president—a crime so odious as to justify his forcible expulsion from the presidency, to which he had been but a few months previous elected with unparalleled unanimity, and in accordance with all the forms of the constitution—was that of not having prosecuted the war against Texas, or, in other words, against the United States—a crime, of which the enormity was aggravated in a ten-fold degree, by his having accepted the proposal of the United States to negotiate. To suppose that the present government has not always intended, and does not still intend, vigorously to prosecute an offensive war against the United States, would be to insinuate the degrading charge of making declarations which it did not design to fulfil, with the unworthy motive of supplanting a rival.

With these avowed intentions on the part of Mexico, and, so far as words can constitute war, that state actually existing, with what fairness can she complain of precautions having been taken by the United States to guard against the attacks with which they have been menaced; so far at least as their very moderate peace establishment would permit them to do so? Are they patiently and meekly to abide the time when Mexico shall be prepared to strike, with due effect, the threatened blow?

Your excellency has alluded to the internal dissensions of Mexico, and accused the United States "of taking advantage of them, beguiling its vigilance by protestations of friendship, bringing into play every kind of device and artifice, and appealing alternately to intrigue and violence." Were the disposition of the United States such as your excellency is pleased to attribute to them, they would have eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the first refusal to receive the undersigned; and certainly no moment more propitious than the present to carry their ambitious schemes into effect could have been selected. Instead of availing themselves of it, they have, with a degree of forbearance that by many, perhaps by most impartial observers, will be considered humiliating, repeated the overtures for negotiation which had been rejected under circumstances the best calculated to offend national pride; and this most conciliatory advance, made by the aggrieved party, is said by your excellency to be an attempt which he cannot permit himself to call by its proper name, (una tentativa que el infrascrito no se permite calificar.) This reserve is remarkable, when contrasted with the terms of vituperation so freely employed in other parts of the note: or is it that your excellency could discover no epithet sufficiently energetic to stigmatize an offence so enormous as a renewed proposition to enter upon negotiations?

The undersigned has already exceeded the limits which he had prescribed to himself for reply. The question has now reached a point where words must give place to acts. While he deeply regrets a result so little contemplated when he commenced the duties of his mission of peace, he is consoled by the reflection that no honorable efforts to avert the calamities of war have been spared by his government, and that these efforts cannot fail to be properly appreciated, not only by the people of the United States, but by the world.

The undersigned begs leave to renew to his excellency Don J. M. de Castillo y Lanzas the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

JOHN SLIDELL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Jalapa, March 27, 1846.

I expected to have received my passports by the mail of this day, as an order to furnish me an escort was forwarded to the commanding general at this place by the mail which reached here on the 24th instant, and the fact of their having been issued had been announced in the journals of the capital. They have not appeared, and, as I have no letters from our consul, I am induced to believe that, from some misapprehension, they have been forwarded to Vera Cruz. I shall accordingly proceed thither to morrow, embarking immediately for the Balize, if my anticipation be correct; if not, I shall remain there until I have heard something definitive on the subject.

* * * * * * * *

Letters from Mazatlan of the 4th instant state that Captain Frémont, with his corps of observation, arrived at Suter's settlement, on the Sacramento, early in January. He is said to have discovered a good wagon road to Oregon, which is much shorter than any heretofore travelled. He has gone to Monterey, in Upper California, leaving his corps on the Sacramento.

I am informed that the council of government has been deliberating on the question of issuing "patentas de corso," or letters of marque, in anticipation of hostilities with the United States. I do not learn that any final decision was made.

Parres, the Secretary of Hacienda, has resigned; everything indicates a speedy breaking up of Paredes' government; several journals openly advocate the return of Santa Anna, and his restoration to power. The failure of Paredes to enforce against the editors his menaces of deportation to San Juan de Ulloa, or Acapulco, affords the best evidence of his weakness. He wants the power, not the will.

General Almonte has been appointed minister to Great Britain.

* * * * * * * *

Letters by the mail of to-day state that Paredes has found himself at last compelled to come out with a proclamation denying the intention of establishing a monarchy which have been charged against him; that the document had already been printed, but my informant could not procure a copy.

UNITED STATES SHIP MISSISSIPPI,
At Sea, April 2, 1846.

I last had the honor of addressing you, on the 27th ultimo, from Jalapa. My passports had, as I supposed, gone to Vera Cruz, although they were directed to me at Jalapa.

I send a copy of Mr. Castillo y Lanzas's note accompanying the passports. You will observe from its date, that, with a promptness very unusual in Mexican councils, they were transmitted by the first mail after the reception of my note of 17th March.

* * * * * * * *

The notes of Mr. Castillo y Lanzas will give you a correct idea of the temper of the Paredes government; and although it will probably soon be replaced by another, we have no reason to expect a change of tone towards us until Mexico shall have been made to feel our strength.

General Almonte had reached Jalapa, on his way to Vera Cruz, there to embark in the British steamer.

I send you a paper containing the manifesto of Paredes, of which I made mention in my last. It professes to present his views of the difficulties with the United States, and in relation to the form of government. As to the latter, it will be seen, on a critical examination, that it is far from being satisfactory. It merely affirms that he is in favor of a republican government, until the constituent congress shall have decided the question; that his preferences are for a republic, but if what he assumes will be an expression of the national will shall pronounce differently, he is prepared to obey it. But we know, from recent experience, what reliance is to be placed on the declarations of Parades. * * * *

The manifesto declares that until the national congress shall have considered the question, no act of aggression will be committed against the United States by the Mexican government, but that it will repel any that may be offered by them. This declaration, however, under existing circumstances, even if made in good faith, leaves a wide range of discretion; for the advance of our troops to the banks of the Rio del Norte can at any time be made a ground for commencing hostilities. * * * * *

NATIONAL PALACE,
Mexico, March 21, 1846.

The undersigned, minister of foreign relations and government, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note which his excellency John Slidell, appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, was pleased to address to him, under date of the 17th instant, from the city of Jalapa.

As it appears that Mr. Slidell, in this communication, merely reproduces arguments and historical reasons which have been previously presented by other diplomatic agents of the United States in this country, and have been repeatedly refuted victoriously by the Mexican government, it would be unnecessary for the undersigned to undertake anew the useless task of entering into an examination of the said reasons and arguments.

And as Mr. Slidell is, moreover, agreeably to instructions from his government, about to return to the United States, and he asks that passports be delivered to him to that effect, the undersigned has the honor to enclose them to his excellency, in compliance with the orders of his excellency the acting president of the republic.

The undersigned at the same time avails himself of the opportunity to renew to his excellency Mr. Slidell the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

J. M. DE CASTILLO Y LANZAS.

His Excellency JOHN SLIDELL.

ORDERS AND INSTRUCTIONS TO GENERAL TAYLOR, FROM MAY 28, 1845, TO MARCH 2, 1846.

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 28, 1845.

SIR: I am directed by the President to cause the forces now under your command, and those which may be assigned to it, to be put into a position where they may most promptly and efficiently act in defence of Texas, in the event it shall become necessary or proper to employ them for that purpose. The information received by the Executive of the United States warrants the belief that Texas will shortly accede to the terms of annexation. As soon as the Texan congress shall have given its consent to annexation, and a convention shall assemble and accept the terms offered in the resolutions of congress, Texas will then be regarded by the executive government here so far a part of the United States as to be entitled from this government to defence and protection from foreign invasion and Indian incursions. The troops under your command will be placed and kept in readiness to perform this duty.

In the letter addressed to you from the adjutant general's office, of the 21st of March, you were instructed to hold a portion of the troops under your immediate command in readiness to move into Texas under certain contingencies, and upon further orders from this department. In the treaty between the United States and Mexico, the two governments mutually stipulated to use all the means in their power to maintain peace and harmony among the Indian nations inhabiting the lands on their borders; and to restrain by force any hostilities and incursions by these nations within their respective boundaries, so that the one would not suffer the Indians within its limits to attack, in any manner whatever, the citizens of the other, or the Indians residing upon the territories of the other. (See the 33d article, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.) The obligations which in this respect are due to Mexico by this treaty, are due also to Texas. Should the Indians residing within the limits of the United States, either by themselves, or associated with others, attempt any hostile movement in regard to Texas, it will be your duty to employ the troops under your command to repel and chastise them; and for this purpose you will give the necessary instructions to the military posts on the upper Red river, (although not under your immediate command,) and, with the approbation of the Texan authorities, make such movements, and take such position, within the limits of Texas, as in your judgment may be necessary. You are also directed to open immediate correspondence with the authorities of Texas, and with any diplomatic agent of the United States, (if one should be residing therein,) with a view to information and advice in respect to the common Indian enemy, as well as to any foreign power. This communication and consultation with the Texan authorities, &c., are directed with a view to enable you to avail yourself of the superior local knowledge they may possess, but not for the purpose of placing you, or any portion of the forces of the United States, under the orders of any functionary not in the regular line of command above you.

Should the territories of Texas be invaded by a foreign power, and you shall receive certain intelligence through her functionaries of that fact, after her convention shall have acceded to the terms of annexation contained in the resolutions of the Congress of the United States, you will at once employ, in the most effective manner your judgment may dictate, the forces under your command, for the defence of these territories, and to expel the invaders.

It is supposed here that, for the mere purpose of repelling a common Indian enemy, as above provided for, it may not be necessary that you should march across the Sabine or upper Red river (at least in the first instance) with more than the particular troops which you were desired in the instructions before referred to, of the 21st March, to hold in immediate readiness for the field, but it is not intended to restrict you positively to that particular amount of force. On the contrary, according to the emergency, you may add any other corps, or any number of companies within your department, deemed necessary, beginning with those nearest at hand; and in the contingency of a foreign invasion of Texas, as above specified, other regiments from a distance may be ordered to report to you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

General Z. TAYLOR,
Fort Jesup, Louisiana.

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 15, 1845.

SIR: On the 4th day of July next, or very soon thereafter, the convention of the people of Texas will probably accept the proposition of annexation, under the joint resolutions of the late Congress of the United States. That acceptance will constitute Texas an integral portion of our country.

In anticipation of that event, you will forthwith make a forward movement with the troops under your command, and advance to the mouth of the Sabine, or to such other point on the gulf of Mexico, or its navigable waters, as in your judgment may be most convenient for an embarkation at the proper time for the western frontier of Texas.

In leaving to your judgment to decide the route, it is intended that you choose the most expeditious, having due regard to the health and efficiency of the troops, on reaching the point of destination.

The force under your immediate command, at and near Fort Jesup, to be put in motion on the receipt of these instructions, will be the 3d and 4th regiments of infantry, and seven companies of the 2d regiment of dragoons. The two absent companies of the 4th infantry have been ordered to join their regiments. Artillery will be ordered from New Orleans.

It is understood that suitable forage for cavalry cannot be obtained in the region which the troops are to occupy; if this be so, the dragoons must leave their horses and serve as riflemen. But it is possible that horses of the country, accustomed to subsist on meagre forage, may be procured, if it be found necessary. You will therefore take the precaution to order a portion of the cavalry equipments to accompany the regiment, with a view to mounted service.

The point of your ultimate destination is the western frontier of Texas, where you will select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande del Norte, such a site as will consist with the health of the troops, and will be best adapted to repel invasion, and to protect what, in the event of annexation, will be our western border. You will limit yourself to the defence of the territory of Texas, unless Mexico should declare war against the United States.

Your movement to the gulf of Mexico, and your preparations to embark for the western frontier of Texas, are to be made without any delay; but you will not effect a landing on that frontier until you have yourself ascertained the due acceptance of Texas of the proffered terms of annexation, or until you receive directions from Mr. Donelson.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

To Brigadier General Z. Taylor,
U. S. Army, com'g 1st dep't, Fort Jesup, La.

P. S.—The revenue cutters Spencer and Woodbury have been placed, by the Treasury Department, at the disposition of Mr. Donelson.

War Department, July 8, 1845.

Sir: This department is informed that Mexico has some military establishments on the east side of the Rio Grande, which are, and for some time have been, in the actual occupancy of her troops. In carrying out the instructions heretofore received, you will be careful to avoid any acts of aggression, unless an actual state of war should exist. The Mexican forces at the posts in their possession, and which have been so, will not be disturbed as long as the relations of peace between the United States and Mexico continue.

WM. L. MARCY.

Brigadier General Z. Taylor.

War Department,
Washington, July 30, 1845.

Sir: Your letter, from New Orleans, of the 20th instant, addressed to the Adjutant General, has been received and laid before the President, and he desires me to express to you his approval of your movements.

He has not the requisite information in regard to the country to enable him to give any positive directions as to the position you ought to take, or the movements which it may be expedient to make. These must be governed by circumstances. While avoiding, as you have been instructed to do, all aggressive measures towards Mexico, as long as the relations of peace exist between that republic and the United States, you are expected to occupy, protect and defend the territory of Texas to the extent that it has been occupied by the people of Texas. The Rio Grande is claimed to be the boundary between the two countries, and up to this boundary you are to extend your protection, only excepting any posts on the eastern side thereof, which are in the actual occupancy of Mexican forces, or Mexican settlements over which the republic of Texas did not exercise jurisdiction at the period of annexation, or shortly before that event. It is expected that, in selecting the establishment for your troops, you will approach as near the boundary line, the Rio Grande, as prudence will dictate. With this view, the President desires that your position, for a part of your forces at least, should be west of the river Nueces.

You are directed to ascertain and communicate to this department the number of Mexican troops now at Matamoras, and the other Mexican posts along the border, their position, the condition of them, and particularly the measures taken or contemplated to increase or strengthen them. If you should have any reason to believe that the government of Mexico is concentrating forces on the boundaries of the two countries, you will not only act with reference to such a state of things, but give the earliest information to this department,

Very respectfully, &c.,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brig. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding the army of occupation in Texas.

War Department,
Adjutant General's Office, Washington, August 6, 1845.

General: Pursuant to the instructions of the Secretary of War, the 7th regiment of infantry has been ordered to join the army under your command in Texas, and the three companies of the 2d dragoons at Fort Washita are also under orders to proceed to Austin without delay, with instructions to report to you on their arrival.

Although a state of war with Mexico, or an invasion of Texas by her forces, may not take place, it is nevertheless deemed proper and necessary that your force should be fully equal to meet, with the certainty of success, any crisis which may arise in Texas, and which would require you, by force of arms, to carry out the instructions of the government.

I am instructed by the Secretary of War to request you to learn from the authorities of Texas what auxiliary forces, volunteers, &c., could be placed at your disposal in case any additional troops may be needed; and how soon they would be able to take the field upon any emergency. I am also instructed to say, that for such procedure on your part the requisite authority is now conferred. A copy of a communication addressed to the Texan authorities touching the subject, by the State Department, is herewith transmitted for your information.

Such auxiliary volunteer force from Texas, when events, not now revealed, may justify their employment, will be organized and mustered under your orders, and be received into the service of the United States when actually required in the field to repel invasion, actual or menaced, and not before. In organizing these forces, you will of course follow the regulations prescribed in cases when detachments of militia from the States and Territories are called into the service of the United States. It should be understood that, as yet, no provision exists by law for the payment of such forces, but appropriations for that purpose will doubtless be made by Congress. They will be furnished with rations while in actual service, as the other troops under your command. The amount and description of the force to be mustered into the service of the United States is left to your determination, and, of course, to be regulated by circumstances.

In view of further precautionary measures, I am instructed by the Secretary of War to learn from you, at the earliest date, what other force and munitions (judging from any information you may possess as to the future exigencies of the public service) you deem it necessary to be sent to Texas; that is to say, what additional troops, designating the arms of the service; what supply and description of ordnance and ordnance stores, small arms, &c.

It is deemed expedient to establish in Texas one or more depots of ordnance and other supplies, for which purpose you will please report the proper points to be occupied. Orders have already been issued to send 10,000 muskets and 1,000 rifles into Texas. They will be shipped for Galveston, subject to your orders on their arrival, as to the proper place of deposite, which of course should be with reference to convenience and accessibility in case they be required for the public use. Should these arms be put into the hands of the volunteers and auxiliary troops, you will please observe all needful precaution, so that they be returned to the United States on the discharge of the troops from the public service.

Officers of the corps of engineers, topographical engineers, and ordnance, have been ordered to Texas, with instructions to report to you without delay.

"General order," No. 37, dated the 5th instant, was forwarded to you by the last mail.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brig. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. forces in Texas, bay of Aransas.

War Department,
Washington, August 23, 1845.

Sir: The information hitherto received as to the intentions of Mexico and the measures she may adopt, does not enable the administration here to give you more explicit instructions in regard to your movements than those which have been already forwarded to you. There is reason to believe that Mexico is making efforts to assemble a large army on the frontier of Texas, for the purpose of entering its territory and holding forcible possession of it. Of their movements your are doubtless advised, and we trust have taken, or early will take, prompt and efficient steps to meet and repel any such hostile incursion. Should Mexico assemble a large body of troops on the Rio Grande, and cross it with a considerable force, such a movement must be regarded as an invasion of the United States and the commencement of hostilities. You will, of course, use all the authority which has been or may be given you to meet such a state of things. Texas must be protected from hostile invasion, and for that purpose you will of course employ to the utmost extent all the means you possess or can command.

An order has been this day issued for sending one thousand more men into Texas to join those under your command. When the existing orders are carried into effect, you will have with you a force of four thousand men of the regular army. We are not enabled to judge what auxiliary force can, upon an emergency, be brought together from Texas, and as a precautionary measure you are authorized to accept volunteers from the States of Louisiana and Alabama, and even from Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Should Mexico declare war, or commence hostilities by crossing the Rio Grande with a considerable force, you are instructed to lose no time in giving information to the authorities of each or any of the above mentioned States as to the number of volunteers you may want from them respectively. Should you require troops from any of these States, it would be important to have them with the least possible delay. It is not doubted that at least two regiments from New Orleans and one from Mobile could be obtained and expeditiously brought into the field. You will cause it to be known at these places what number and description of troops you desire to receive from them in the contemplated emergency. The authorities of these States will be apprized that you are authorized to receive volunteers from them, and you may calculate that they will promptly join you when it is made known that their services are required. Arms, ammunition, and camp equipage for the auxiliary troops that you may require, will be sent forward subject to your orders. You will so dispose of them as to be most available in case they should be needed, at the same time with a due regard to their safety and preservation. Orders have been issued to the naval force on the gulf of Mexico to co-operate with you. You will, as far as practicable, hold communication with the commanders of our national vessels in your vicinity, and avail yourself of any assistance that can be derived from their co-operation. The Lexington is ordered into service as a transport ship, and will sail in a few days from New York with a detachment of United States troops for Corpus Christi. She will be employed as the exigency of the public service may require. In order to keep up a proper communication between the army in Texas and the United States, the On-ka-hy-e, the Harney, and the Dolphin will be put into service, as soon as they can be made ready, as despatch vessels to convey intelligence, supplies, &c. You will avail yourself of these vessels, and all other proper means, to keep the government here advised of your operations, and of the state of things in Texas and Mexico.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, yours,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

General Z. Taylor.

[Sent to the quartermaster at New Orleans.]

War Department,
Washington, August 25, 1845.

Sir: General Taylor, to whom has been committed the command of the army of occupation in Texas, is authorized to draw any auxiliary force he may need from Texas. If such aid should be wanted, it is not doubted that the patriotic citizens of that State will rally to his assistance with alacrity, in sufficient numbers to enable him, in conjunction with United States troops, to repel the invasion of Texas by Mexico, should it be attempted. Though our information as to the force Mexico may bring into the field for such a purpose is not very accurate, yet there is reason to apprehend that it is more numerous than that under the command of General Taylor; and may, perhaps, exceed his effective force when augmented with the auxiliary aid he may derive from Texas. Besides, he may need additional troops to a greater number, and sooner than they can be furnished him from that State. Should he need assistance from your State, he is directed to signify to you the number and description of troops he may deem necessary to receive as volunteers into service. Relying upon the zeal and public spirit of the gallant militia of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, the government here do not doubt that he will be promptly furnished with such and so many as he may express a desire to have mustered into the service of the United States; and it has the most perfect reliance upon your countenance and co-operation in organizing and sending into Texas such a valunteer force from your State as he may desire. It is necessarily left to his judgment to designate the number. It is proper to observe, that the emergency rendering such assistance from the militia of your State necessary, does not appear to have been foreseen by Congress, and consequently no appropriation was made for paying them; but it is not to be doubted that such a provision will be promptly made when Congress shall again assemble. In order to be paid, the State troops must be mustered into service. In organizing companies and regiments for that purpose, the number of officers must be proportioned to that of the privates. Enclosed I send you, from the Adjutant General, a statement of the number and rank of officers for each company of men, as well as the regimental and staff officers, should a regiment of volunteers be called for. From the known patriotism and military ardor of the militia of your State, it is presumed that volunteers to the number that may be required will readily tender their services to their country in the contemplated emergency. Should aid from your State be required by the commanding general in Texas, it will be of the utmost importance that the troops should be sent into that State without delay. This consideration will render it proper that they should come from such part of the State as can most promptly furnish them.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK,
Governor of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Alabama.
His Excellency A. G. BROWN,
Governor of Mississippi, Jackson, Mississippi.
His Excellency ALEXANDER MOUTON,
Governor of Louisiana, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Letters were also addressed on the 28th of the same month, to the governors of Tennessee and Kentucky, on the same subject, and in the same words as the above.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, August 26, 1845.

GENERAL: I am instructed by the Secretary of War to say, it is very desirable that you should keep the department informed of the state of the service on the Texan frontiers, and the situation of the army under your command, by every opportunity which may offer. Official information, at short intervals, is now the more necessary, as the country is filled with rumors of the movement of Mexican troops in direction of your head-quarters, as also of matters in relation to our own service. But, however exaggerated these reports may be, we cannot, for want of official tidings, undertake to correct what we have good reason to believe not to be true. You are requested, therefore, to write, if but a single line, by almost every vessel which may sail from near your head-quarters for New Orleans.

Your last letter, received August 11th, is dated from Aransas Bay, July 28th, and to-night's mail brings letters and papers of the 19th from New Orleans, with news from Aransas Bay, and the mouth of the Rio Grande, of August 12th.

I send you general orders No. 41, of yesterday's date, giving you more troops, which I hope you will not need before their arrival.

I am, general, with great respect, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adg't. General.

General TAYLOR,
Commanding, &c., the army of occupation.

War Department,
Washington, August 30, 1845.

Sir: Only one letter has been received from you since you entered Texas, and that was written the day after you arrived at Aransas bay. Permit me to urge upon you the importance of availing yourself of every opportunity of communicating with this department. It is desirable to have early and correct information from you, to enable the government to form a true judgment of the designs and movements of Mexico, founded on ascertained facts. It is presumed that, in pursuance of previous instructions from this department, you have taken special pains to become acquainted with the proceedings of Mexico, particularly in regard to the number, and kind, of Mexican troops at Matamoras, Monterey, and other places, as well as those which are on the march towards them, and may be brought to act against your forces, or pushed across the Rio Grande, either in the vicinity of Matamoras or at distant points in that river. You will not, I trust, underrate the importance of such information, or fail to use the proper and necessary means for acquiring it. You are directed, should you deem it expedient, to employ competent and trustworthy persons to obtain such intelligence.

The instructions, heretofore issued, enjoin upon you to defend Texas from invasion and Indian hostilities; and, should Mexico invade it, you will employ all your forces to repulse the invaders, and drive all Mexican troops beyond the Rio Grande. Should you judge the forces under your command inadequate, you will not fail to draw sufficient auxiliary aid from Texas; and, if there be need, from the States, pursuant to your previous instructions. It is not to be doubted that, on your notification, volunteer troops, to the number you may require, will rally with alacrity to your standard. You have been advised that the assembling a large Mexican army on the borders of Texas, and crossing the Rio Grande with a considerable force, will be regarded by the Executive here as an invasion of the United States, and the commencement of hostilities. An attempt to cross that river with such a force, will also be considered in the same light. There may be other acts on the part of Mexico which would put an end to the relations of peace between that republic and the United States. Should depredations be committed on our commerce by her public armed vessels, or privateers, acting under her authority, this will constitute a state of war.

Orders have been issued to the vessels of the United States in the gulf, to furnish you with information of any hostile proceedings of Mexico, and the state of things in that republic. You will embrace every occasion that may present, to forward to the commanders of these vessels such intelligence as you may possess, concerning the movements of the military forces, and the state of things in Mexico and Texas, and to suggest to them such assistance and co-operation as you may desire to receive.

In case of war, either declared or made manifest by hostile acts, your main object will be the protection of Texas; but the pursuit of this object will not necessarily confine your action within the territory of Texas. Mexico having thus commenced hostilities, you may, in your discretion, should you have sufficient force, and be in a condition to do so, cross the Rio Grande, disperse or capture the forces assembling to invade Texas, defeat the junction of troops uniting for that purpose, drive them from their positions on either side of that river, and, if deemed practicable and expedient, take, and hold possession of, Matamoras and other places in the country. I scarcely need to say, that enterprises of this kind are only to be ventured on under circumstances presenting a fair prospect of success.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brigadier Gen. Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding the U. S. army in Texas.

P. S.—Herewith you will find a copy of the order of the Navy Department to Commodore Connor.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 16, 1845.

SIR: The information which we have here, renders it probable that no serious attempts will, at present, be made by Mexico to invade Texas, although she continues to threaten incursions. Previous instructions will have put you in possession of the views of the government of the United States, not only as to the extent of its territorial claims, but of its determination to assert them. In carrying out these instructions, you will be left very much to your own judgment, by reason of your superior knowledge of localities, and the earlier notice you may receive of the probable views of Mexico, and the movements of her troops.

On the supposition that no active operations on your part will be required during the approaching winter, an important question to be decided is the position or positions to be occupied by your forces. This must be determined mainly with reference to the objects for which the army under your command was sent into Texas. You will approach as near the western boundary of Texas (the Rio Grande) as circumstances will permit; having reference to reasonable security; to accommodations for putting your troops into winter huts, if deemed necessary; to the facility and certainty of procuring or receiving supplies; and to checking any attempted incursions by the Mexican forces or the Indian tribes. Ought your present position to be changed? the forces which are, or soon will be, assembled under your command, be kept together or divided? and, if divided, what positions are to be taken, and how are they to be divided? These are questions which must be in a measure left to your judgment, or, at least, the decision upon them here, if there be time, will be influenced in no inconsiderable degree by the information and views which you may furnish the department. You need not, therefore, wait for directions from Washington, to carry out what you may deem proper to be done. Upon all the points above enumerated, and others not suggested, your reports and views in full are desired, not only with reference to the continuance of the present aspect of affairs between the United States and Mexico, but in the contingency of your selecting, or being directed to take, a position on the banks of the Rio Grande near its mouth, or places above, or even in the event of open hostilities. It is expected that the officers of the engineer and topographical corps, who have been sent into Texas, will examine, as far as practicable, under your direction, the country, with a view to selecting eligible positions for permanent or temporary occupation, for depots of supplies, arms, and munitions of war. It is extremely desirable that the sea coast, or at least that part of it which will be likely to be visited by our vessels in aid of any contemplated military operations, should be better known here than it now is; as well as the character of the several rivers which may present obstacles to the movements of our forces, or furnish facilities for transporting supplies. You are requested to avail yourself of all proper occasions, and employ the means you possess, to collect information in regard to all these matters, and forward it to this department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brigadier General Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation in Texas.

War Department,
Washington, January 13, 1846.

Sir: I am directed by the President to instruct you to advance and occupy, with the troops under your command, positions on or near the east bank of the Rio del Norte, as soon as it can be conveniently done with reference to the season and the routes by which your movements must be made. From the views heretofore presented to this department, it is presumed Point Isabel will be considered by you an eligible position. This point, or some one near it, and points opposite Matamoras and Mier, and in the vicinity of Laredo, are suggested for your consideration; but you are left to your better knowledge to determine the post or posts which you are to occupy, as well as the question of dividing your forces with a view to occupying two or more positions.

In the positions you may take in carrying out these instructions and other movements that may be made, the use of the Rio del Norte may be very convenient, if not necessary. Should you attempt to exercise the right which the United States have in common with Mexico to the free navigation of this river, it is probable that Mexico would interpose resistance. You will not attempt to enforce this right without further instructions.

You are requested to report to this department, without delay, what means you may require, if any, beyond those you now possess, to enforce and maintain our common right to navigate this river, as well as your views of the importance of this right in the defence and protection of the State of Texas.

It is not designed, in our present relations with Mexico, that you should treat her as an enemy; but, should she assume that character by a declaration of war, or any open act of hostility towards us, you will not act merely on the defensive, if your relative means enable you to do otherwise.

Since instructions were given you to draw aid from Texas, in case you should deem it necessary, the relations between that State and the United States have undergone some modification. Texas is now fully incorporated into our union of States, and you are hereby authorized by the President to make a requisition upon the executive of that State for such of its militia force as may be needed to repel invasion or to secure the country against apprehended invasion.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brigadier General Z. TAYLOR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 20, 1846.

SIR: You will perceive by a letter which has been addressed to General Taylor, commanding the United States troops in your State, a copy of which I send to you herewith, that the President has authorized him, in case of hostilities between the United States and Mexico, and an invasion or threatened invasion of your State, to make a requisition for such militia force as in a possible state of things may be required from Texas.

By the request of the President I hereby apprise you of the directions which have been given to General Taylor, and express to you the confidence here entertained, that, should he make a requisition, it will be promptly responded to.

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency JAMES HENDERSON,
Governor of the State of Texas.

[Extracts.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 2, 1846.

SIR: Your letter of the 7th ultimo, addressed to the adjutant general, with accompanying documents, marked Nos. 1 and 2, has been submitted to the President for his consideration.

* * * * * * * * *

It is very desirable that you should use all the means at your command to acquire the most full and accurate information in relation not only to the military movements in the northern provinces of Mexico, but to the feelings and disposition of the people in them towards the present government, and to keep us advised thereof. It is the settled determination of the United States, in every possible event, to protect private property, to respect personal rights, and to abstain from all interference in religious matters. Upon these points you will give the most ample assurances, and improve every occasion that may arise to furnish proof of the good faith with which these assurances are made. If, in the course of events, you should have occasion to enter Mexico, it would be proper to quiet all apprehensions, so far as it can be done, by a public proclamation that the rights of property, persons, and religion, will be respected. Particular care should be taken not to alarm the religious feelings of the Mexicans.

At this time, we have no information direct from Mexico so late as that contained in the extra of the Corpus Christi Gazette of the 12th of February. Though this is not of a character to command much confidence, yet it may not be prudent wholly to disregard it. You cannot fail to have timely notice of the approach of any considerable Mexican force; and, in that event, will promptly and efficiently use the authority with which you are clothed to call to you such auxiliary forces as you may need. The governor of Texas has been notified that you are authorized by the President to make a requisition on him for troops, and it is not doubted that he will promptly respond to any call you may make for that purpose.

Your advance to the Rio del Norte will bring you, as a matter of course, nearer to your assailants in case of hostilities, and at the same time remove you to a greater distance from the region from which auxiliary aid can be drawn. This consideration will naturally induce you to take more than ordinary care to be in a safe position, and prepared to sustain yourself against any assault. I make this suggestion because I am not sure that you will have such co-operation on the part of our naval force as you may expect. The government has not such a vessel as you desire; but one or two, best suited to the service, have been ordered to the Texan coast. The Flirt, which has the least draught—eight or nine feet—is not of much efficiency. She carries not more than four guns. The Somers or Porpoise, brigs of ten guns, and drawing thirteen or fourteen feet of water, will be ordered to report to and co-operate with you; but it is not probable that either of them, or the Flirt, will be on the coast to attend your advance movement. You cannot calculate upon any assistance from them for two or three weeks to come.* Nothing herein contained is intended to revoke or modify the instructions heretofore given for aggressive operations on your part under the circumstances therein specified.

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To Brig. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. army in Texas.

LETTERS FROM THE ADJUTANT GENERAL TO GENERAL TAYLOR.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, September 13, 1845.

General: Your communications of the 29th and 30th ultimo, with accompanying "orders" 3 and 4, and "special orders" 5 and 6, have this day been received.

Your notice of the unwarrantable disclosure of the countersign to a person not entitled to it, by an officer of the camp, on the night of the 28th of August, and admonitory remarks on the occasion, it is hoped may have the desired effect; but an offence of so grave a nature, for which the martial code provides the severest punishment, would seem to have called for an investigation by a general court martial.

The concentration of so large a portion of the army at Corpus Christi may afford you the opportunity, while resting upon your arms, of practising a regular system of field and camp instruction, according to the strictest principles and rules of the service; and this I am instructed by the Secretary of War to say is the wish and expectation of the President. The general-in-chief does not doubt that all laid down in the general regulations, under the heads of "guards," "troops in campaign," "daily details and duties," and all other duties comprehended in the terms discipline, police, inspection, &c., you will cause to be scrupulously observed by every corps and regiment, and all the officers and men under your command.

To perfect the organization of your staff, I am directed to say that you will please to appoint an acting inspector general for the army under your command, who should be an active, experienced field officer, a good disciplinarian, and one who will minutely observe and enforce the regulations and rules of the service.

You will please to see that the regulations which establish the "dress" of the army be duly observed by every officer; and as the troops under your command will be organized, and, it may be presumed, will move only in battalions, regiments, brigades, or division, the excuses for their non-observance during the Florida service (in many instances unavoidable) will not, in the army of occupation, be so readily admitted.

* The naval force did attend the movement of the army, and rendered assistance pursuant to general orders before issued from the Navy Department.

I send herewith a copy of the estimated strength of the regular force ordered to Texas, prepared early in the month for the Secretary of War and the commanding general. The aggregate is 4,336, from which, as you will see, some three hundred are deducted on account of the various casualties incident to the service. This reduction would make the army of occupation, when all the troops en route shall have arrived, about 4,000.

No return of your command has yet been received for the month of July, which, I suppose, may have been unavoidably delayed or miscarried. While on the subject of "monthly returns" and "reports," I respectfully refer you to paragraph 823, &c., of the army regulations.

The battalion of the 4th infantry, drawn from Fort Scott, appears to have been greatly delayed in its movement from St. Louis (where it arrived the 30th of July) to Corpus Christi, being nearly a month. The only report from the commander, Brevet Major Graham, is dated on board the steamer, August 3d, being then thirty-five miles above the mouth of the Ohio. What detention he may have met with in New Orleans is not known, nor has the day been reported when he joined the army of occupation. For the information of the War Department and the general-in-chief, you are requested to inquire into the cause or causes of the (apparently) extraordinary slow progress of the two companies, after their arrival at St. Louis.

I send herewith, by direction of the Secretary of War, for your information, a copy of his letter of instructions to Brevet Major General Gaines, commanding the western division, of this date.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

To Brig. Gen. Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas.

NOTE.—Since writing the above, Captain Page's report of the 28th ultimo has been received, by which it is seen that Brevet Major Graham's command reached the army in Texas the 26th of August.

R. J.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, September 16, 1845.

GENERAL: The two companies of volunteer artillerists, mustered into the service by General Gaines, which were so unexpectedly sent to you by that officer from New Orleans, it is inferred from your despatch of the 26th August, will scarcely be longer required in your camp. If this be so, I am instructed by the Secretary of War to say that you will please cause them to be honorably discharged from the army, and sent home again to mingle with their friends and relatives, from whom a sense of duty to their country had so suddenly separated them.

It is understood that the United States schooner "On-ka-hy-e" has been ordered to ply regularly between Aransas bay and the city of Mobile; by which conveyance your despatches would, ordinarily, reach Washington one day sooner, it is said, than via New Orleans.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Brig. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, December 24, 1845.

General: I have the honor to inform you that, on the 16th instant, the United States steamer "Colonel Harney" was ordered to be transferred from the Navy to the War Department, and that measures have been taken by the quartermaster's department to place her at your disposal, for the purpose of keeping up prompt and regular communication between New Orleans and the army at Corpus Christi. It is hoped that this arrangement will fully meet your views on the subject, as communicated in your letter of November 8, (No. 32,) and which I acknowledged on the 11th instant.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Brig. General Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, February 26, 1846.

General: The Secretary of the Navy has despatched the sloop of war St. Mary's, with orders to be "put in communication with the army in Texas." I understand that the St. Mary's draws sixteen or seventeen feet, and I fear, therefore, she will not be suitable for the service, for which you require the presence of "a small armed vessel." I have communicated my opinion to the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Brig. General Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, March 3, 1846.

Sir: Herewith I enclose you a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of War, dated the 2d instant, by which you will perceive that, since my letter of the 26th ultimo, informing you that the sloop of War "St. Mary's" has been ordered to be "put into communication with the army in Texas," two small vessels (the "Somers" and "Flirt") have been directed to "co-operate with the army in Texas."

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Brevet Brig. General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding army of occupation, Corpus Christi, Texas.

[Extract.]

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 8, 1846.

GENERAL: All the disposable recruits for the general service from New York and Newport, Ky., are en route for your army, which you will please to assign on their arrival to such regiments and companies as you may judge best. I regret to say that the number will but little exceed 200; to which 100 may be added at New Orleans from the regimental depots—in all, over 300 men. Every exertion has been made to push the recruiting service, but results show it has fallen off for several months past. Even in New York, where, usually, a large number are recruited, but few have entered; and at Albany, another good station, but one man enlisted in March.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brevet Brigadier General Z. TAYLOR,
Comm'dg army of Texas, Point Isabel, Texas.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 20, 1846.

GENERAE: Since my last acknowledgment of the 31st ultimo, the following despatches and orders have been received from your headquarters, viz:

Despatches, numbered from 22 to 25, inclusive;
"Orders," from number 32 to 36, inclusive; and
"Special orders," number 38.

Your despatch No. 16, and special orders No. 17, are still wanting to complete the series.

On the subject of recruits, required to fill the regiments in Texas, and to which you refer in your despatch of the 29th of March, I respectfully refer you to my letter of the 8th instant, which informed you that about 300 were en route for the army under your command, being every man that could be collected.

On the 18th, orders were despatched to send you four companies of the 1st infantry, from Jefferson barracks, without delay, with a field officer to command the battalion.

This battalion will not be less than 250 strong, as the two remaining companies of the 1st infantry, at Jefferson barracks, have been broken up, and all the privates, except six, transferred to the marching companies to fill them up. The overplus will be attached as supernumeraries until the passage of the law to increase the rank and file, when they will be permanently incorporated with the four companies now ordered to Texas.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brevet Brigadier General Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation,
Camp opposite Matamoras, Texas.

DESPATCHES FROM GENERAL TAYLOR TO THE ADJUTANT GENERAL.

Head-quarters, 1st Military Department,
New Orleans, La., July 20, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully acknowledge your communication of July 8, covering the instructions of the Secretary of War of the same date, relative to the Mexican settlements on this side of the Rio Grande. Those instructions will be closely obeyed; and the department may rest assured that I will take no step to interrupt the friendly relations between the United States and Mexico. I am gratified at receiving these instructions, as they confirm my views, previously communicated, in regard to the proper line to be occupied at present by our troops.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Steamship Alabama, Aransas Pass, Texas, July 28, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully report my arrival at this place on the 25th instant, with eight companies of the 3d infantry, it having been found necessary to leave two companies of that regiment, to be brought over in other transports.

The troops are temporarily established on St. Joseph's island. I am waiting the report of a boat expedition sent to Corpus Christi bay before I determine on the site of an encampment. I hope to receive the necessary information in the course of the day, when I shall immediately commence the removal of the 3d infantry to the point selected. The position will probably be "Live Oak Point," in Aransas bay, some ten miles from our present position. I am very anxious to establish myself at the mouth of the Nueces, but the extreme shoalness of the water will, I fear, present an insuperable obstacle, unless we can procure lighters of much lighter draught than those we have at present.

The difficulties of effecting a debarkation on this coast, and of establishing depots for supplying the army, are much greater than I anticipated, and will render our operations at once embarrassing and expensive. Between Pass Cavallo and Brazos Santiago, there is no entrance for vessels drawing more than seven or eight feet; and the prevailing winds render the operation of lightening extremely uncertain and hazardous. We have been favored with fine weather, and, should it continue, the other transports, which may now be expected, will be enabled to discharge without difficulty.

We had a very favorable run from New Orleans; and I am happy to state that the health of the command was greatly improved by the voyage. The eight companies have scarcely any sickness at this time.

The day before leaving New Orleans, I received from Major Donelson a communication dated at Austin, on the 7th of July, informing me that the convention had unanimously accepted the proposition of annexation, and suggesting that two companies should be posted at Austin. I still deem it best to concentrate my force until our relations with Mexico shall become settled, and until the country can be examined, and the best mode of supply ascertained.

I hear nothing important from the Mexican frontier. Some Indian depredations are committed from time to time near Corpus Christi, and will claim my first attention after I can get established.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 15, 1845.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, by New Orleans papers of the 7th instant, I have received intelligence of the preparatory steps taken by Mexico towards a declaration of war against the United States. I shall spare no exertions to meet suitably this probable change in the relations between the two countries; and the additional force ordered to join me, as announced in your communication of July 30, will, I trust, enable me to do something more than maintain a merely defensive attitude on the Nueces. This will depend upon the demonstrations made by Mexico along the Rio Grande, in regard to which the Secretary of War has solicited a report. I am enabled to say, upon information which is regarded as authentic, that General Arista was to leave Monterey on the 4th of this month for Matamoras with 1,500 men—500 being cavalry. I learn, from the same source, that there are 500 regular troops at Matamoras. In regard to the force at other points on the Rio Grande, except the militia of the country, I have no information; nor do I hear that the reported concentration at Matamoras is for any purpose of invasion. I have but just arrived at this place, and hope in a few days to be able to obtain more full and precise intelligence concerning the movements of the Mexicans. I shall not fail to communicate promptly to the department all such intelligence upon which I think reliance can be placed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

P. S.—I enclose a sketch, prepared by Lieutenant Eaton, of Aransas and Corpus Christi bays, showing our intended depot, and also our present position—Fort Marcy.

Z. T.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 15, 1845.

Sir: I have deferred, perhaps, too long making a report of my operations since arriving on this coast; but I have been unwilling to speak only of difficulties attending the establishment of my force; and such and so many have been those difficulties, that not until this moment have I been able to report anything satisfactory in regard to our movements. After a careful examination—for the most part personal—of Aransas and Corpus Christi bays, I have settled upon this point west of the Nueces river, as the most favorable for present occupation, and have pushed forward the troops and supplies as rapidly as our means of transportation would permit. I am now enabled to report that the artillery, the 3d infantry, and seven companies of the 4th infantry, are in position here, well supplied with ammunition and provisions. One more company of the 4th (left temporarily at St. Joseph's island) will join in a day or two. Some works of defence are in progress; and if I succeed in procuring some light guns from the sloop of war St. Mary's, (for the field battery has not yet arrived,) I shall feel able to maintain my position against any Mexican force that may be brought against it. The arrival of Graham's companies of the 4th, of the 2d dragoons, and 7th infantry, will doubtless enable me to assume an offensive attitude should it become expedient.

Our last mail (which was saved with difficulty from the wreck of a schooner on the 13th instant) brought your communications of July 28 and 30; the latter enclosing a letter from the Secretary of War of the same date. I am gratified to find that my measures thus far have met the approbation of the government and general-in-chief, and, particularly, to find that I have but anticipated the wishes of the President in taking up a position west of the Nueces.

I have determined to establish my depot, for the present, on the point of St. Joseph's island, whence supplies can be thrown either into Corpus Christi or Aransas bay, as may become necessary. Owing to the shoalness of the water between the two bays, the transportation of troops and supplies has been attended with much delay and expense. Instructions have been given to the quartermaster in New Orleans to procure transports adapted to our purpose, on the arrival of which our supplies can be thrown forward with facility and economy.

Nothing has been heard from the 2d dragoons since they marched from Fort Jesup, except a rumor (which I really hope may prove unfounded) that Colonel Twiggs had been taken sick, and was forced to turn back. I am very anxious for the arrival of this regiment, as its services are greatly needed for outposts and reconnoissances. I shall despatch an express to communicate with the regiment and ascertain its position and condition.

Graham's companies of the 4th infantry were daily expected in New Orleans at the last advices, and will, doubtless, sail about the same time with the 7th infantry. I shall bring all the infantry to this point, except a suitable guard for the depot in my rear, and probably all the cavalry also, as I do not deem it prudent to detach in our existing relations with Mexico.

I am gratified to be able to report that the troops are more healthy than could reasonably be expected, considering their great exposure and the inferior quality of the water on the coast. The prevalent complaints are not at all serious, and the command is, perhaps, more healthy than it would have been had it remained at Fort Jesup and vicinity.

The 4th infantry sailed from New Orleans under convoy of the "St. Mary's," sloop-of-war, Captain Saunders. The "Falmouth," Captain Sands, and "Lawrence," Captain Jarvis, have also been off Aransas pass, and their commanders have communicated with me.

I take pleasure in acknowledging my obligations to these officers, for valuable assistance which they have extended to us, and for the assurances of support and co-ōperation.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 19, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully enclose, for the information of the department, a copy of a letter addressed by me to the President of Texas, and forwarded to him by special express on the 17th instant. I have deemed it proper to make this communication to President Jones, in consequence of the desire manifested by the authorities of Texas to have a garrison established, at once, at Austin. As I cannot consent to detach any portion of my command, while a superior Mexican force is probably concentrating in my front, and as I still feel bound to extend every assistance, compatible with a successful prosecution of the main object of the expedition, towards putting the frontier in a suitable state of defence, I have judged it prudent to make the suggestions and recommendations which you will find in the enclosed letter. Trusting that they will meet the approbation of the War Department,

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 16, 1845.

Sir: I have the honor to report my arrival at this place, in obedience to the special instructions from the War Department, of which you have already been apprised by my letter, of July 20, to the Secretary of War and Marine.

One company of artillery and a brigade of infantry are now in position here, and will soon be reinforced by seven companies of dragoons and an additional regiment of infantry.

You have undoubtedly received intelligence of the hostile steps taken by Mexico, and the probable declaration of war against us by that power. Under these circumstances, I do not deem it prudent to detach any portion of my force at present, and it is the principal object of this communication to recommend that any volunteers or spies now in the service of Texas be continued in employment, should you consider it necessary for the defence of the frontier. If you concur in this view, I will, at your instance, despatch an officer to muster into the service of the United States any companies which you may designate as necessary for the security of the frontier, to conform in numbers and organization to the laws of the United States. Should such musters be made, I will recommend that the officers and men while in service continue to receive the same rate of pay which they have drawn from the Texan government.

My presence, and that of my command, is now imperatively required on this frontier. When our relations with Mexico, and the state of the service in this quarter, shall permit my absence, I will take great pleasure in proceeding to the seat of government, and conferring with you personally in relation to the proper dispositions to be made for the permanent occupation of the frontier.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

His Excellency Anson Jones,
President of Texas, Washington, Texas.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 20, 1845.

Sir: I beg leave to call your attention to the condition of the artillery company serving in this army, in regard to the number of men soon to be discharged, and the necessity of supplying their places as early in the autumn as practicable. From an official report of Lieutenant Bragg, it appears that twelve men will be discharged by the end of November, there being now fifty enlisted men in the company. There will thus, at the end of November, be fourteen vacancies in the company, unless some re-enlistments should reduce the number; upon which we cannot reckon with any certainty. To render a company efficient with four pieces, sixty men are required; to complete which number, should the general-in-chief see fit to add a detachment to the company for this service, twenty-two recruits will be required.

The great importance of keeping this small force in an efficient condition, will excuse me for urging the necessity of sending out good recruits to the company as soon as the advanced season will render it safe to pass through New Orleans.

The field battery, much to my regret, has not yet arrived. I could get no guns of suitable calibre from the "St. Mary's" sloop-of-war, but have procured three pieces indifferently equipped, and a small supply of ammunition, from the citizens of this place. These guns add materially to our strength in case we should be attacked here, which I do not anticipate, but they are not fit for field service. I cannot doubt that our battery will arrive before it shall become necessary for us to move.

The 2d dragoons are to-day at Goliad, on the San Antonio river, and will arrive at San Patricio on the 23d, where I expect to meet them. The officers and men are generally well, and the horses are in quite as good condition as we could expect. We have no news of the 7th, or Graham's companies, of the 4th.

Caravans of traders arrive occasionally from the Rio Grande, but bring no news of importance. They represent that there are no regular troops on that river, except at Matamoras, and do not seem to be aware of any preparations for a demonstration on this bank of the river. I still deem it my duty to look to the possibility of such an event, and to prepare for a forward movement, should circumstances require it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 26, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully acknowledge the receipt of your communications of August 6 and 9—the former by the hands of Lieutenant Ringgold, who arrived here yesterday. A duplicate of the despatch of the 6th has also been received by mail, as well as general orders Nos. 37 and 38.

In regard to employing volunteers from Texas, you will perceive that I have in part anticipated the wishes of the government in my letter of the 16th instant to President Jones, a copy of which was furnished you on the 19th. In that communication I looked only to the defence of the frontier against Indian aggressions, but I shall now communicate with President Jones, and ascertain the number of volunteers that can be called into service in case of an invasion by Mexico, and shall take the necessary steps to arm and employ that force should the safety of the country require it. I feel confident, however, that such necessity will not arise. The three companies of dragoons from Fort Washita will afford adequate protection to the country about Austin, and will, I doubt not, enable us ultimately to dispense even with the very small irregular force now in service in that quarter.

Judging from the best information I can obtain as to the future wants of the service on this frontier, looking more particularly to the possibility of an invasion of the soil of Texas by Mexican troops, I deem the force soon to be under my orders, viz: four batteries of field artillery, one regiment of cavalry, and five regiments of infantry, to be fully adequate to meet any crisis that may arise. The ordnance and ordnance stores already shipped are ample for all our purposes, unless indeed it should be necessary to invest Matamoras, in which case a battering train of heavier calibre would be required. A moderate supply of pontons and ponton wagons might greatly facilitate any active operations in this country, where it is next to impossible to bridge the streams, owing to the scarcity of timber.

I have received special orders Nos. 66 and 68, assigning officers of the engineers, topographical engineers, and ordnance to my command: two of those officers, Lieutenants Scarritt and Kingsbury, have already reported with promptness. Our greatest want has been, and still is, a strong and efficient corps of quartermasters. Captain Cross was necessarily sent with the dragoons, though under orders from his own department, which would have retained him at Fort Jesup. I do not consider him as properly belonging to my command, and shall relieve him from duty on the arrival of the dragoons. We shall then have four regiments in camp, without one quartermaster on duty with them. I am informed that Captain Myers and Ketchum have been ordered to join me, but it does not seem unreasonable to request that, in addition to a proper supply of captains, a field officer of rank and efficiency be despatched to assume direction of that important branch of the public service.

Five companies of the 7th infantry have arrived at St. Joseph's island, and will join me in a day or two. Graham's companies have also arrived, and we have reason to expect three companies from Pensacola in a few days. Two companies of volunteer artillerists, mustered into service by General Gaines, have reported to me very unexpectedly; and as I have made no application for this force, and do not deem it necessary, I am placed in a rather embarrassing situation. As they are now here, I think it best, on the whole, to retain them for a short period, perhaps until the arrival of our own artillery, when they can be handsomely discharged and sent home.

I met the dragoons at San Patricio on the 24th, and was much pleased with their efficient condition. They have found ample supplies of forage and water, and the horses are in excellent flesh, most of them being now fit for any service. The regiment will probably join me here to-morrow.

I regret to learn that the most false and exaggerated rumors have prevailed in New Orleans in relation to reported disasters encountered by this command. These rumors are not only calculated to cause much pain and anxiety in the community, but also to entail a heavy and needless expense upon the government in procuring the muster of volunteers, &c. I beg you to understand that, even with the small force originally under my command, I have had too much confidence in my officers and men to feel any apprehension of serious disaster.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington City.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, August 30, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully report the arrival at this point of seven companies of the 7th infantry under Major Brown, and two companies of volunteer artillery under Major Gally. Major Seawell's company, I am informed, was ordered back to Baton Rouge by General Gaines, and some small detachments of that regiment were also left at several posts. I have retained one company as a guard for the depot at St. Joseph's island.

The battalion of volunteer artillery has a fine battery of eight pieces—two twelves and six sixes, completely equipped in every respect. The officers are zealous, and the men seem to be quite well instructed in their duties. In case of need, I look for valuable service from this battalion.

I have just received a communication from President Jones, under date of the 23d instant, notifying me that he had taken preparatory steps towards organizing a volunteer force of 1,000 men to assist me if necessary. This matter will form the subject of a special communication to your office in a few days.

Apprehending that the erroneous impressions current in New Orleans in regard to our situation might induce General Gaines to order the muster of a battalion or brigade of infantry, I addressed a communication to his staff officer by the steamship Alabama, expressing my thanks for the reinforcement of the volunteer battalion of artillery, but with the hope that no more volunteers would be sent without a requisition from me. That communication will reach New Orleans to-night or to-morrow, in time, I trust, to stop the employment of any more volunteers.

We have no news from the Rio Grande. Idle stories are brought in from that quarter, but with the means of accurate information which we now possess, I do not deem it necessary to repeat them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, September 6, 1845.

Sir: I have the honor to report that a confidential agent, despatched some days since to Matamoras, has returned, and reports that no extraordinary preparations are going forward there; that the garrison does not seem to have been increased, and that our consul is of opinion there will be no declaration of war. A decree had been issued prohibiting, under penalty of death, any communication, by writing, across the frontier—a precaution which has been adopted on former occasions, and caused, no doubt, by our presence here. Nothing definite can be learned in relation to the march of troops from the interior. A body of 3,000 men was reported in march to Matamoras, but the information is too vague to merit much confidence. The agent, who is intelligent, and upon whose statements a good deal of reliance may, I think, be safely placed, says that the mass of the people, with whom he mingled, is opposed to a war with us, and that if war be declared, the frontier departments of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, and Nuevo Leon, will probably declare themselves independent of the central government and establish pacific relations with us.

This is the substance of the information brought from Matamoras. Notwithstanding its character, I shall not relax my exertions to prepare for active operations and a state of war with Mexico. I must express the hope that no militia force will be ordered to join me without my requisition for it. I am entirely confident that none will be required.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brigadier General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, September 14, 1845.

SIR: I respectfully acknowledge the following communications from the Secretary of War—one of August 23, conveying the instructions of the department in relation to the employment of volunteers from the United States; one of August 26, enclosing copies of circulars to the governors of Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi; and two of August 30, giving further instructions for my government, and enclosing copies of instructions to Commodore Connor, and of a letter of August 28 to Major General Gaines; also, your communications of August 26 and 30, enclosing a copy of the same letter to General Gaines, and desiring more frequent communications from my head-quarters.

I now regret that I suffered the interval between July 28 and August 15 to elapse without making any report to your office; but I was incessantly occupied, during that time, in examining the country, and afterwards in making an establishment at this point, and could not have reported anything important, of a positive nature, until my arrival here. Could I have imagined the possibility of such extravagant rumors as prevailed in New Orleans, and, above all, that they could gain credence in the public mind, when the same means of communication brought no report from me, I would certainly have apprized the department, by every opportunity, of our operations, unimportant as they might have seemed. No intelligence, worthy of credit, was received from the Rio Grande, until just before my report of August 15. Since that date I have kept the department advised, at short intervals, of our situation and the news from the frontier.

In view of the large reinforcements of regular troops ordered to join me, I cannot believe that it will become necessary, under any circumstances, to employ volunteers from the United States. In reply to my communication, of August 16, to President Jones, a copy of which was forwarded to your office, the President indicated a few companies of rangers, amounting in all to about 300 men, as proper to be mustered into the service for the protection of the frontier. I have accordingly given orders for the muster of one company at Austin and one at Bexar. A company at this place, and one at Goliad, are designated by the President, and will be mustered when their enrolment is completed. Three small detachments, of 30 men each, are to be considered in service, but cannot, from their position, be conveniently mustered at present. It will be recollected that when I addressed the president of Texas on this subject, I could not anticipate the transfer of dragoons from Fort Washita; and although two of the companies indicated above might, perhaps, be dispensed with, I think it best, from motives of policy, to retain them for three months, the term for which all are to be mustered. You will see from my "special orders," No. 14, that I have directed two of the three companies from Red river to San Antonio, retaining one at Austin. With a company of mounted rangers at each place, the frontier will be secure from insult. The commander of the rangers at San Antonio, Major Hays, has reputation as a partisan, and to him I have specially intrusted the duty of keeping me advised of any movements on the Rio Grande in the neighborhood of Laredo, with strict injunctions, however, to molest no Mexican establishments on this side of the river. Should San Antonio be seriously menaced, it can be readily succored from this point. A route will be immediately opened hence to San Antonio. I would at once put a larger force in that town, but for the difficulty of supplying it.

An examination is now making by an officer of engineers of the country in our front, chiefly to select suitable sites for encampments, should it become necessary to winter in this neighborhood. The great scarcity of wood will render it necessary, in that case, to change our position. Reconnoissances will soon be made of the Nueces and the Laguna Madra, to ascertain their navigability, and the facility of establishing depots in the event of a forward movement to the Rio Grande.

We have no news of interest from the frontier. Arista, at the last accounts, was at Mier, but without any force; nor is there, as yet, any concentration of troops on the river. A report reached San Antonio, a few days since, that preparations were making to receive troops at Laredo. This I consider very doubtful; but if troops arrive there, I shall expect to receive early information of the fact from San Antonio.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brigadier General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, October 4, 1845.

SIR: I beg to leave suggest some considerations in relation to the present position of our force, and the dispositions which may become necessary for the more effectual prosecution of the objects for which it has been concentrated. It will be recollected that the instructions of June 15, issued by Mr. Bancroft, then acting Secretary of War, directed me to "select and occupy, on or near the Rio Grande, such a site as will consist with the health of the troops, and will be best adapted to repel invasion," &c. Brazos Santiago is the nearest entrance to the mouth of the Rio Grande; and Point Isabel, within that entrance, and twenty-one miles from Matamoras, would have fulfilled more completely than any other position the conditions imposed by the Secretary. But we had no artillery, no engineer force or appliances, and but a moderate amount of infantry; and the occupation of Point Isabel, under these circumstances, and with at least the possibility of resistance from the Mexicans, might have compromised the safety of the command. I therefore determined to take up the next accessible position in the rear, which is the mouth of the Nueces river. All the information which I could obtain before leaving New Orleans, seemed to point to Corpus Christi as the most suitable point for concentration; and, although before the President's instructions of July 30 reached me, I would have preferred a position on the left bank of the river, yet a careful examination of the country had already convinced me that none could be found combining so many advantages as this. Every day's experience has confirmed these impressions. Corpus Christi is healthy, easily supplied, and well situated to hold in observation the course of the Rio Grande from Matamoras to Laredo—being about 150 miles from several points on the river. I have reason to believe, moreover, that a salutary moral effect has been exercised upon the Mexicans. Their traders are continually carrying home the news of our position and increasing numbers, and are confessedly struck by the spectacle of a large camp of well-appointed and disciplined troops, accompanied by perfect security to their persons and property, instead of the impressment and pillage to which they are subject in their own country. For these reasons, our position thus far has, I think, been the best possible; but, now that the entire force will soon be concentrated, it may well be a question whether the views of government will be best carried out by our remaining at this point. It is with great deference that I make any suggestions on topics which may become matter of delicate negotiation; but if our government, in settling the question of boundary, makes the line of the Rio Grande an ultimatum, I cannot doubt that the settlement will be greatly facilitated and hastened by our taking possession at once of one or two suitable points on or quite near that river. Our strength and state of preparation should be displayed in a manner not to be mistaken. However salutary may be the effect produced upon the border people by our presence here, we are too far from the frontier to impress the government of Mexico with our readiness to vindicate, by force of arms, if necessary, our title to the country as far as the Rio Grande. The "army of occupation" will, in a few days, be concentrated at this point, in condition for vigorous and efficient service. Mexico having as yet made no positive declaration of war, or committed any overt act of hostilities, I do not feel at liberty, under my instructions, particularly those of July 8, to make a forward movement to the Rio Grande without authority from the War Department.

In case a forward movement should be ordered or authorized, I would recommend the occupation of Point Isabel and Laredo as best adapted to the purposes of observing the course of the river and covering the frontier settlements of Texas. Point Isabel is accessible by water, and can be safely occupied by two brigades of infantry, with a suitable force of field artillery. On the arrival of the steamer Harney, I shall order a careful reconnoissance of Brasos Santiago, as a necessary preliminary measure to the occupation of Point Isabel. To occupy Laredo will require a land march from this point. Supplies may probably be transported by water as high as San Patricio, and possibly to the junction of the Rio Frio with the Nueces. I propose to establish a depot on the Nueces river, probably at the crossing of the San Antonio and Laredo road, from which to operate towards the Rio Grande. You will perceive from my "special orders" No. 24, that a reconnoissance has been ordered in that direction. A brigade of infantry, with the cavalry, and a battery or two of field artillery, will be sufficient for the occupation of Laredo. That town is on the left bank of the Rio Grande, and possesses the military advantage of holding in observation the main route from the interior of Mexico through Monterey to Matamoras.

In case it should be found impracticable to establish a suitable depot on the Nueces, the entire force, after strengthening San Antonio, might be thrown forward to Point Isabel, where it could be readily supplied, and held in readiness for any further service.

I have deemed it my duty to make the above suggestions. Should they be favorably considered, and instructions based upon them, I will thank you to send the latter in duplicate to Lieut. Colonel Hunt—one copy to be despatched direct, without delay; the other to be sent via Galveston, should a steamer be running to that port from New Orleans.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

P. S.—It is proper to add, that, should any auxiliary force be required, I propose to draw it wholly from Texas. I do not conceive that it will become necessary, under any circumstances, to call for volunteers from the United States.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, October 11, 1845.

SIR: I respectfully report the arrival at St. Joseph's island, on the 9th instant, of five companies of the 5th infantry, under Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, two companies of the 8th infantry, under Captain Montgomery, and one company of the 7th infantry, under Brevet Major Seawell. Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh's command (of 17 officers and 239 men) arrived here to-day. These troops are in good health, and complete the entire number ordered to this coast. I feel a satisfaction, which I cannot doubt will be shared by the department, in being able thus to report the completion, without disaster or notable accident, of the transfer of so many bodies of troops from remote points to this coast at an unfavorable season of the year.

Lieutenant Colonel Payne will be announced in orders to-morrow as acting inspector general of this army. I shall assign Major Ewing to the command of the field batteries, leaving Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Childs in command of the battalion of artillery companies in the 1st brigade.

In regard to the discharge of the volunteer artillery from New Orleans, I would respectfully remark that their term of service will soon be drawing to a close; and as their service here has been most creditable to them in every respect, and they would feel a mortification in being summarily discharged, I would ask leave to retain them until such a time as will allow them to reach New Orleans by the expiration of the period for which they were mustered.

You will, I hope, readily appreciate the motives of policy which may, in the long run, render their detention an absolute benefit to the public service. I need hardly say that I much regretted their employment in the first instance; but, under all the circumstances of the case, I think it best to keep them for the short period of their term which yet remains. The excellence of their discipline and instruction has won the most favorable opinions from the officers here.

Recent arrivals from the Rio Grande bring no news or information of a different aspect from that which I reported in my last. The views expressed in previous communications relative to the pacific disposition of the border people on both sides of the river, are continually confirmed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, October 15, 1845.

Sir: I respectfully enclose the return of the army of occupation for July. At the end of that month all the corps of the army had not reached Texas, some of them being yet at sea; which is the reason that no return was furnished at the proper time.

All the troops destined for this point are now in position here, except Major Ringgold's company, which is expected daily from St. Joseph's island. The morning report of to-day exhibits an aggregate present of 3,733, which Ringgold's company and an absent detachment of cavalry will increase to 3,860. Captain Burk's company remains as a guard at St. Joseph's island.

Three hundred recruits are now wanted in the regiments and detachments here; which number, I can hardly doubt, will be increased to nearly five hundred by the close of the year. I hope measures may be taken to supply the requisite number of recruits, or as many as can be spared, from the depot.

The utmost activity prevails in the instruction of the brigades and regiments. Colonel Whistler's brigade commenced to-day with evolutions of the line, and will be followed by the others as rapidly as possible. Several of the regiments have been so long cut up in small detachments as to render it necessary to dwell for some time upon the school of the battalion before proceeding to the higher manœuvres.

I have nothing of interest to report from the frontier.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen., U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, November 7, 1845.

SIR: I respectfully enclose a copy of a letter from Commodore Connor, commanding the home squadron, which I received by the "Saratoga," sloop of war, on the 5th instant. The intelligence communicated by the commodore will, doubtless, reach the seat of government long before the receipt of this letter.

The communication from the Secretary of War, dated October 16, was received and acknowledged on the 1st and 2d instant. I purposely deferred a detailed reply to the various points embraced in that communication until I could receive an answer to mine of October 4, which covered (at least in part) the same ground. The intelligence from Mexico, however, tends to modify, in some degree, the views expressed in that communication. The position now occupied by the troops may, perhaps, be the best while negotiations are pending, or, at any rate, until a disposition shall be manifested by Mexico to protract them unreasonably. Under the supposition that such may be the view of the department, I shall make no movement from this point, except for the purpose of examining the country, until further instructions are received. You will perceive, from my orders, that reconnoissances are almost constantly in the field, the officers of engineers and topographical engineers rendering valuable service on those duties. I refer you to the reports made by those officers to the chiefs of their own bureaux for the information which is thus procured in relation to the country. An examination of the harbor of Brazos Santiago will be ordered in a few days—as soon as a proper vessel shall become disposable for that service.

In case no movement is made this season towards the Rio Grande, I may find it necessary to detatch a portion of the army a short distance into the interior, where wood can be more readily procured than here. But in no case do I deem it necessary to hut the troops. Sheds, with platforms, on which to pitch the tents, were extensively used in camps of position in Florida, and will, I cannot doubt, form a sufficient protection here.

On the hypothesis of an early adjustment of the boundary, and the consequent establishment of permanent frontier posts, I cannot urge too strongly upon the department the necessity of occupying those posts before the warm weather shall set in. A large amount of sickness is, I fear, to be apprehended, with every precaution that can be taken; but the information which I obtain leads me to believe that a summer movement would be attended with great expense of health and life. As in Florida, the winter is the best season for operations in Texas.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

U. S. Ship Falmouth,
Off Vera Cruz, October 24, 1845.

General: I hasten to inform you that the Mexican government has accepted the proposal made by that of our country to arrange the existing difficulties by negotiation. This information left here for Washington yesterday, by Mr. Parrott, and we may consequently soon expect an envoy to be sent out from the United States. I deem it advisable you should be thus early apprized of this change in the state of our relations.

No troops have marched towards the frontier for a length of time; and I am told by Mr. Parrott, who left Mexico a few days since, that many of Arista's officers had returned to that city in a a state of utter poverty.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

D. CONNOR,
Commanding Home Squadron.

Brigadier General Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, November 8, 1845.

Sir: I beg leave to call your attention to the present condition of our communications with the United States.

While in New Orleans, I represented the necessity of a despatch vessel—a steamer, if practicable—to ply between our position and New Orleans. I was informed from your office, under date of July 30th, that measures had been taken to supply the want, and under date of August 23d, from the War Office, that the "On ka-hy-e," the "Harney," and the "Dolphin," would be put into the service as despatch vessels for the above purpose. Of all these vessels, the "On-ka-hy-e" alone has reported to me; and her degree of utility for this particular service may be judged from the fact that she sailed from Aransas pass more than a month since for Mobile and New Orleans, and has not yet returned. In fact, she is a dull sailer, and wholly unfit for the purposes for which she was sent out. By a report received yesterday from the commander of the "Harney," it appears that she is now lying in the Mississippi river, and that her boiler is in such condition that it is deemed entirely unsafe for her to go to sea. Of the "Dolphin" I have heard nothing.

It thus appears that the means provided for keeping up a regular and frequent communication with the army of occupation have proved totally inadequate. The necessity of such a communication is now much greater than when I first addressed you on the subject, and I must respectfully request that some efficient arrangement be made by which our mails may be received and sent with at least tolerable regularity. For this purpose it is necessary to have a good seagoing steamer entirely under the control of the quartermaster's department. If the "Harney," or the "General Taylor," which once belonged to that department, can be returned to it again, I have little doubt that either of them would answer the purpose. New Orleans should, by all means, be the port of departure; and the public freight which a vessel of the kind could bring would go far to pay her expenses.

In the event of a forward movement to the Rio Grande with any possibility of hostile operations, a small armed vessel would be indispensable to cover the depot which would in that case be established at Brazos Santiago, as well as our landing at that point. And I would suggest at any rate, that until the most perfect friendly relations are again established with Mexico, a naval vessel of the above description be placed under my orders.

I have to acknowledge your communication of October 20th, with enclosures relative to a charge against Brevet Major Beall; copy of your communication of October 21st to late Lieutenant Quimby, 7th infantry; certificate of disability in the case of Sergeant Branton, company B, 2d dragoons; "general orders" No. 48, and "special orders" Nos. 101 and 102.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, November 19, 1845.

SIR: By a report from Major Fauntleroy, 2d dragoons, commanding at San Antonio, dated the 1st instant, it appears that, upon the requisition, or at the suggestion of a Major Neighbors, represented to be an "Indian agent" under the government of Texas, he despatched a party from his command, on the 30th of October, under the direction of said agent, to arrest some Camanches who were in the Lipan camp, not far from San Antonio, and who were reported by the Lipans to have committed some depredations near Corpus Christi. The Camanches suffered themselves to be taken without resistance, but afterwards suddenly broke from the guard, and made their escape. The guard, agreeably to orders, fired upon them, and wounded two of the number, there being six or eight in all.

This circumstance is greatly to be regretted, and may be the germ of serious difficulty on the Indian frontier. My instructions to Major Fauntleroy have been very pointed—to exercise great caution in all matters relating to alleged Indian depredations. In the present case, the reports against the Camanches were entirely false—at least, no depredations have been committed by them near Corpus Christi, to my knowledge; and, even if true, Major Fauntleroy had no evidence of the facts sufficiently strong to warrant him in the course he took. The moment that the service will permit my absence from the main army here, I shall visit San Antonio and Austin, with a view to adopt such measures as may be required by the public interest in that quarter. In the meantime, I shall give such instructions to Major Fauntleroy as will prevent a recurrence of such hasty and ill-judged proceedings hereafter.

I have already reported to the department the steps which I have found it necessary to take for the protection of the Indian frontier of Texas; and that I deemed it advisable for that purpose to muster into service a few companies of rangers. These companies were mustered into service for three months; and their respective terms will expire about the end of the year. Should the present pacific aspect of our Mexican relations continue, it will not be necessary to continue this force in service, except possibly one company as guides. It will then become necessary to strengthen the regular force on the frontier; and, to avoid useless marches and expense, I would respectfully ask to be informed, if consistent with propriety, what corps are destined for the permanent occupation of Texas on a peace establishment. Such corps can then be placed in position at once, at a time when they are most wanted, and when they can establish posts with least prejudice to health. San Antonio, Austin, and, perhaps, an intermediate point on the Guadaloupe, must be military stations; and the sooner they are occupied by the regular garrisons who are destined for that service, the better. A large force of cavalry cannot be sustained on the frontier without very heavy expense at this time; and I would not at present add more than one to the number of companies already there. Infantry may be subsisted at a comparatively small rate.

Recent arrivals from the Rio Grande bring no news whatever.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, January 7, 1846.

Sir: For the information of the general-in-chief and War Department, I make the following extract from a private letter lately received at this place from our consul at Matamoras, and dated December 24, 1845:

"Our accounts from the interior are, that General Paredes, at San Luis, is about rising against the government; it is given out that he and his party are against treating with the United States. Our minister, Mr. John Slidell, of New Orleans, has arrived at Mexico; so, if the revolution does not break out, we shall shortly have a treaty, I hope. General Arista rests quiet, to see, perhaps, what success attends General Paredes. In this part of the country the people are in favor of peace, and, I should judge, of a treaty with the United States, but a considerable excitement has been produced by the news from General Paredes.

* * * * * * * *

"A little schooner (the Susanna, of New Orleans,) has come in here in distress. She was seized by our custom-house, and the captain was imprisoned, but is released upon bail. I have forwarded some documents to Mexico respecting her."

We have intelligence from Matamoras as late as the 1st instant, to the effect that a courier had arrived from the interior, bringing the news that Paredes, with a large force, was within thirty leagues of the city of Mexico; that much excitement prevailed in Matamoras in favor of Paredes, and against Herrera. It is also stated that the officers of the garrison had declared for Paredes. I look with great anxiety for further news from Mexico.

The above intelligence is received from Matamoras. We have many arrivals from other points on the river, but they bring no intelligence of interest. A recent scout of volunteers from San Antonio struck the river near Presidio, Rio Grande, and the commander reports everything quiet in that quarter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, February 4, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully acknowledge the communication of the Secretary of War, dated January 13th, and containing the instructions of the President to move forward with my force to the Rio Grande. I shall lose no time in making the necessary preparations for carrying out those instructions.

The occupation of Point Isabel or Brazos Santiago as a depot will be indispensable. That point and a position on or near the river opposite Matamoras will I think answer all present purposes. At any rate, I shall not separate my force further until the position of affairs shall render it entirely safe to do so.

I propose to abandon this position entirely, as soon after our march as the stores, hospital, &c., can be transferred to St. Joseph's island. It will not be necessary to keep up an establishment at that point for the present, although our supplies will come to Point Isabel direct from New Orleans.

In reply to the call of the Secretary for information as to what means, if any, will be required "to enforce and maintain our common right to navigate" the Rio Grande, I would respectfully state that, until I reach the river and ascertain the condition of things in the frontier States of Mexico, temper of the people, &c., I cannot give any satisfactory answer to the question. I have every reason to believe that the people residing on the river are well disposed towards our government. Our advance to the Rio Grande will itself produce a powerful effect, and it may be that the common navigation of the river will not be disputed. It is very important to us, and will be indispensable when posts are established higher up, as must ultimately be the case.

I shall not call for any militia force in addition to what I already have, unless unforeseen circumstances shall render its employment necessary.

I beg leave again to call the attention of the department to the necessity of having our movement and position at Brazos Santiago covered by a small armed vessel. I deem this vitally important, and hope it will meet with favorable consideration.

We have no news from the interior of Mexico more recent than that derived from the New Orleans papers of the 26th January.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, February 16, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully report that I received last evening by the sloop-of-war "St. Mary's" a communication from Commodore

Connor, commanding the home squadron, dated the 4th instant, in which he announces his intention to proceed with the squadron to Vera Cruz, and desires to know in what way he can co-operate with the land force under my command. I have informed the commodore that I am about to move to the Rio Grande under instructions from the War Department, and have desired him to give me the support of one or two small vessels to assist us, if necessary, in taking possession of Brazos Santiago, and at all events to cover the establishment of a depot at that point. I deem this co-operation very opportune and necessary, and am gratified to obtain it. Commodore Connor will be enabled, at the same time, to communicate directly with me and furnish the latest intelligence from Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico.

Examinations are now in progress of the two routes to Point Isabel—that by the main land and that by Padre island. The reports of the officers charged with them will determine the route of march. Our train, which is necessarily very heavy, is rapidly organizing, and we shall be able to commence the movement about the 1st of March.

Many reports will doubtless reach the department, giving exaggerated accounts of Mexican preparations to resist our advance, if not indeed to attempt an invasion of Texas. Such reports have been circulated even at this place, and owe their origin to personal interests connected with the stay of the army here. I trust that they will receive no attention at the War Department. From the best information I am able to obtain, and which I deem as authentic as any, I do not believe that our advance to the banks of the Rio Grande will be resisted. The army, however, will go fully prepared for a state of hostilities, should they unfortunately be provoked by the Mexicans.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Corpus Christi, Texas, February 26, 1846.

Sir: I have to report that the preparations for a forward movement of this command are now nearly completed. The examinations spoken of in my report of the 16th instant have shown the practicability of both routes—by the main land and by Padre island. The reconnoisance of Padre island extended to its southern extremity, and included the harbor of Brazos Santiago and Point Isabel; that of the main route reached to a point near the Little Colorado. A depot, with four days' forage, and subsistence for the army, will be thrown forward some forty miles, to the Santa Gertrudes. A detachment of two companies, to establish and cover this depot, will march, on the 28th, under Brevet Major Graham. In about a week thereafter, say the 7th of March, the cavalry will march, to be followed, at intervals of one day, by the brigades of infantry. By the 25th of March, at latest, I hope to be in position on the Rio Grande.

I have taken occasion to represent to some citizens of Matamoras, who were here with a large number of mules for sale, and who are represented to have considerable influence at home, that the United States government, in occupying the Rio Grande, has no motive of hostility towards Mexico, and that the army will, in no case, go beyond the river, unless hostilities should be commenced by the Mexicans themselves; that the Mexicans, living on this side, will not be disturbed in any way by the troops; that they will be protected in all their rights and usages; and, that everything which the army may need, will be purchased from them at fair prices. I also stated that, until the matter should be finally adjusted between the two governments, the harbor of Brazos Santiago would be open to the free use of Mexicans, as heretofore. The same views were impressed upon the Mexican custom-house officer at Brazos Santiago, by Captain Hardee, who commanded the escort that covered the reconnoissance of Padre island.

We are entirely without news of interest from the frontier, or the interior of Mexico; our latest date from the capital being the 21st of January, and the same from Vera Cruz.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, March 8, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully report that the advance of the army, composed of the cavalry and Major Ringgold's light artillery, the whole under the command of Colonel Twiggs, took up the line of march this morning, in the direction of Matamoras; its strength being 23 officers, and 378 men. The advance will be followed in succession by the brigades of infantry, the last brigade marching on the 11th instant. The roads are in good order, the weather fine, and the troops in excellent condition for service.

Major Munroe will embark for Brazos Santiago in season to reach that harbor about the time the army will be in the vicinity of Point Isabel. He takes with him a siege train and a field battery. Captain Sanders, of the engineers, the officers of ordnance, and the pay department, accompany Major Munroe.

The movement, by water, to Brazos Santiago, will be covered by the revenue cutter "Woodbury," Captain Foster, whose commander has kindly placed her at my disposal for this service.

All proper arrangements have been made by the staff departments for supplying the army on the route, as well as establishing a depot for its further wants at Point Isabel.

I have deemed it proper to cause my "orders" No. 30, to be translated into Spanish, and circulated on the Rio Grande. Sixty copies have already been sent in advance of the army to Matamoras, Camargo, and Mier. This form of giving publicity to the spirit which actuates our movement, in occupying the country, I thought preferable to a proclamation. I trust the order itself will meet the approval of the department. A few copies of the translation are herewith enclosed.

I shall again communicate with general head-quarters before I march, and I expect to do so, at least, once on the route.

My head-quarters will march with the rear brigade, but will soon pass to the advance of the army.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., comd'g.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, March 8, 1846.

Order No. 30.

The army of occupation of Texas being now about to take a position upon the left bank of the Rio Grande, under the orders of the Executive of the United States, the general-in-chief desires to express the hope that the movement will be advantageous to all concerned; and with the object of attaining this laudable end, he has ordered all under his command to observe, with the most scrupulous respect, the rights of all the inhabitants who may be found in peaceful prosecution of their respective occupations, as well on the left as on the right side of the Rio Grande. Under no pretext, nor in any way, will any interference be allowed with the civil rights or religious privileges of the inhabitants; but the utmost respect for them will be maintained.

Whatsoever may be needed for the use of the army will be bought by the proper purveyor, and paid for at the highest prices. The general-in-chief has the satisfaction to say that he confides in the patriotism and discipline of the army under his command, and that he feels sure that his orders will be obeyed with the utmost exactness.

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Corpus Christi, Texas, March 11, 1846.

SIR: I have respectfully to report that the last column of the army marched this morning, to be followed by the head-quarters in a few hours.

I enclose a field return of the army, exhibiting its actual marching strength. Major Munroe's company, which goes round by water, is not included. The weather continues favorable, and everything promises well for our march.

Please address me as usual, to the care of the quartermaster in New Orleans.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp at Los Pintos, route to Matamoras,
31 miles from Corpus Christi, March 12, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully report that the United States brig Porpoise arrived yesterday off Aransas. Her commander, Lieutenant Hunt, has been ordered by Commodore Connor to communicate with the army, and render us all the aid in his power. I gladly avail myself of this vessel, in conjunction with the cutter "Woodbury," to convoy our transports to Brazos Santiago, and assist Major Munroe's command in effecting a landing and establishing a depot in that harbor.

Commodore Connor writes by the brig Porpoise, from Vera Cruz, under date of March 2d. I enclose an extract of so much of his letter as relates to Mexican affairs. I have nothing of interest to communicate from the frontier, except the enclosed proclamation of General Canales, which, so far as I know, had not at the last advices been made public on the Rio Grande. It was put in my hands just as I was leaving Corpus Christi, or it would have been forwarded from that place.

The different columns are advancing with great regularity, and without any obstacle worthy of note. I have passed the rear brigade, and hope to encamp to-morrow with General Worth's, which is now fourteen miles in my advance. I shall overtake the cavalry before it reaches the Little Colorado.

I have to acknowledge your communications of February 24th and 26th; your letter to Colonel Twiggs of February 23d; the communications of Lieutenant Garnett of January 29th and February 9th, returned as contrary to regulations; and "special orders" Nos. 12 to 15 inclusive.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,

[Extract.]

U. S. SHIP FALMOUTH,
Off Vera Cruz, March 2, 1846.

SIR: * * * * * * * *

As I have but little intercourse with the shore at this place, my means of obtaining information as to passing events are consequently very limited. From the papers published in the city of Mexico, I learn that General Almonte has resigned the office of Minister of War and Marine, and has been succeeded by General Tornel. The government has been for some time endeavoring to obtain (but without success) a loan of nearly two millions of dollars, for which the property of the church was offered as security.

The papers of the capital also state that within the last ten days a force of nearly eight thousand men, including a large portion of the garrison of Mexico, has marched for the northern frontier. I attach little credit to the statement. It is the general opinion here that the present state of affairs cannot last for any length of time. With the exception of the military, the recent revolution is received by all classes with much dissatisfaction. Even a union of the federalists with the Santa Annaists is spoken of as probable for the overthrow of the present party.

Mr. Slidell is still at Jalapa; and, though unlikely as it may appear, I have it from very good authority that it is probable he will yet be received by the Mexican government.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. CONNOR,
Commanding home squadron.

Brig. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding army of occupation, Texas.

[Translation.]

Antonio Canales, brigadier general of the republic of Mexico, colonel of active militia, and in command of an auxilliary regiment on the northern frontier.

Citizens: An arbitrary power has been established in Mexico, derogatory to our legally constituted authorities. One part of the army (or, if you like, the whole of it) has been the author of so scandalous an achievement. Like the Prætorian guards, who destroyed the nationality of Rome, our soldiers have been made the arbitrators and regulators of the destinies of our country. Can you suffer this with supineness? The inhabitants of the northern frontier are not to be so persuaded. I am satisfied of their sentiments, and they will perish a thousand times before they will recognize a government without a national election, and without more authority to command than the ephemeral and momentary triumph of his arms over the capital of the republic.

Citizens: This is worthless, as we have before seen—a council of generals is not able to judge of the institutions of the country. These are not military crimes that the regulations will bring under their cognizance.

More than this it is useless to say of the grievances of those unnatural soldiers who have turned their arms against their country. But if you are sensible of it, what necessity for explanations? Eloquence and even language itself is superfluous. No one knows the intenseness of grief better than him who suffers. By your efforts, you passed from a federal to a central government, under which you were promised the loftiest riches, glory, and respectability, but a mournful and very grievous experience has convinced us that to nations once thus constituted, such a change, instead of benefits, has brought nothing but humiliation before strangers, misery, and, if we succumb, our slavery and that of our children. The federal constitution was sanctioned in 1824, by the constitutional congress; let us turn and read its glorious manifest, and then hate more and more the authors of our disgrace.

Let us then declare an eternal war to the death; thus should the people do who rise against their oppressors. Let our voice be unanimous; liberty or death to our tyrants, and triumph will crown your efforts.

This plan which I have this day announced to my regiment has no other object. To save Mexico or perish is our resolution. God will help us; for his providence only, in wrath, has given these tyrants dominion over us.

These are the sentiments of the northern frontier, and those of your fellow-citizen and friend,

ANTONIO CANALES.

Camargo, February, 1846.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp at "El Sauce," 119 miles from Corpus Christi,
March 18, 1846.

Sir: I avail myself of a chance opportunity to Corpus Christi to report that I have advanced to this point with the cavalry and 1st brigade of infantry. The 2d brigade encamps to-night about seven miles in my rear; the 3d brigade about nineteen. I shall concentrate all my force on reaching the Little Colorado, thirteen miles in my front, so as be prepared for any contingency. I am happy to say that all the corps of the army are in fine condition and spirits, equal to any service that may be before them.

Within the last two days, our advance has met with small armed parties of Mexicans, who seemed disposed to avoid us. They were, doubtless, thrown out to get information of our advance.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp 3 miles south of the Arroyo Colorado, March 21, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully report that my forces are now concentrated at this point, the 3d brigade having joined me to-day. We are nearly north of Matamoras, and about 30 miles distant.

The Arroya Colorado is a salt river, or rather lagoon, nearly one hundred yards broad, and so deep as barely to be fordable. It would have formed a serious obstruction to our march had the enemy chosen to occupy its right bank, even with a small force. On the 19th, the advanced corps encamped within three miles of the ford, and a reconnoissance was pushed forward to the river. A party of irregular cavalry (rancheros) was discovered on the opposite bank, but threw no obstacle in the way of examining the ford. They, however, signified to the officer charged with the reconnoissance that it would be considered an act of hostility if we attempted to pass the river, and that we should, in that case, be treated as enemies. Under these circumstances, not knowing the amount of force that might be on the other bank, I deemed it prudent to make dispositions to pass the river under fire, for which please see my "orders," No. 33. At an early hour on the 20th, the cavalry and 1st brigade of infantry were in position at the ford, the batteries of field artillery being so placed as to sweep the opposite bank. While these dispositions were in progress, the party that had shown themselves the day before again made their appearance. I sent Captain Mansfield to communicate with the officer in command, who said that he had positive orders to fire upon us if we attempted to cross the river. Another party then made its appearance, and passed the river to communicate with me. One of them (who was represented as the adjutant general of the Mexican troops) repeated substantially what had been sent before, viz: that they had peremptory orders to fire upon us, and that it would be considered a declaration of war if we passed the river. He placed in my hands, at the same time, a proclamation of General Mejia, issued at Matamoras a day or two previous, which I enclose. I informed the officer that I should immediately cross the river, and if any of his party showed themselves on the other bank after the passage commenced, they would receive the fire of our artillery. In the meantime, the 2d brigade (which had encamped some miles in my rear) came up and formed on the extreme right. The crossing was then commenced and executed in the order prescribed. Not a shot was fired; and a reconnoissance of cavalry, sent immediately forward, discovered the party which had occupied the bank retreating in the direction of Matamoras. Agreeably to my orders, they were not molested. The cavalry and 1st and 2d brigades of infantry, with a train of two hundred wagons, crossed over and encamped at this point, three miles distant, at an early hour in the afternoon.

I have thought proper to make a detailed report of this operation, as being the first occasion on which the Mexicans have shown themselves in an attitude decidedly hostile. It has also furnished an excellent opportunity for the instruction of the troops, and for displaying their discipline and spirit, which, I am gratified to be able to say, were everything that could be desired.

I am compelled to remain at this point until joined by the supply train of the 3d brigade, which is unavoidably in the rear. On the 23d, at latest, I expect to resume the march, but am not fully decided as to the direction. While Matamoras is the point to be ultimately attained, it is necessary, at the same time, to cover our supplies, which will soon arrive at Point Isabel.

From the best information I am able to obtain, the enemy is not in force on this side of the Rio Grande. A few rancheros are still on the route hence to Matamoras. It is believed that there may be nearly 2,000 troops in that place, but what proportion of regular troops I cannot state with confidence. The arrival of General Ampudia is expected from the interior, but the accounts I receive of his movements are quite contradictory.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

El General en Gefe de las fuerzas avanzadas sobre el enemigo, á los habitantes de este departamento y á las tropas de su mando.

CONCIUDADANOS: La agregacion del departamento de Tejas á los Estados-Unidos, promovida y consumada por la tortuosa política del gabinete del Norte, no satisface todavia los proyectos ambiciosos de los degenerados hijos de Washington. El mundo civilizado ha reconocido ya en aquel acto de usurpacion todos los caracteres de la injusticia, de la iniquidad, de la mas escandalosa violacion del derecho de gentes. Indelible es la mancha que oscurecerá perpetuamente las mentidas virtudes del pueblo norte-americano; y la posteridad verá con asombro la pérfida conducta, la inmoralidad de los medios empleados para llevar á cabo la mas degradante depredacion. El derecho de conquista siempre ha sido un crimen contra la humanidad; pero las naciones celosas de su dignidad y reputacion, han procurado siquiera cubrirlo con el brillo de las armas y el prestigio de la victoria. A los Estados-Unidos estaba reservado poner en practica la disimulacion, el engaño, las mas bajas insidias para apoderarse, en medio de la paz, del territorio de una nacion amiga, y honrosamente confiada en la fe de las promesas, en la solemnidad de los tratados.

No se detiene sin embargo el gabinete del Norte en su carrera de usurpacion. No es solamente el departamento de Tejas la presa á que aspira: su codicia se estiende hasta la rivera izquierda del Rio Bravo. El ejército estacionado hace algun tiempo en Corpus-Cristi, avanza ya para tomar posesion de una gran parte de Tamaulipas; y su vanguardia ha llegado hasta el Arroyo Colorado, punto distante catorce leguas de esta plaza. ¿Que esperanza queda, pues, á la republica Mexicana de tratar con un enemigo, que al mismo tiempo de procurar adormecer abriendo negociaciones diplomáticas, procede á ocupar un territoria que nunca podrá ser objeto de la cuestion pendiente? Los limites de Tejas son ciertos y reconocidos: jamas han pasado del Rio de las Nueces; y sin embargo, el ejército Americano ha salvado la línea que separa á Tamaulipas de aquel departamento. Aun cuando México pudiera olvidar que los Estados-Unidos promovieron y auxiliaron la rebelion de los antigüos colonos, y que el principio de que un pueblo independiente tiene derecho para agregarse á otra nacion, no es aplicable al caso de haber sido esta la protectora de la independencia de aquel, con el objeto de admitirlo despues en su seno: aun cuando fuera dable aceptar como acsioma del derecho internacional, que la violacion de toda regla de moralidad y justicia puede servir de título legítimo de adquisicion; todavia el territorio de Tamaulipas quedaría fuera de la ley de agregacion, sancionada por el congreso Americano, porque ella solo comprende á Tejas independiente, al terreno ocupado por la colonia sublevada, y de ninguna manera á otros departamentos, en que el gobierno Mejicano ha ejercido sin interrupcion su legìtima autoridad.

Compatriotas: Con un enemigo que no respeta ni sus propias leyes, que se burla sin pudor de los mismos principios que ha invocado ante el mundo entero para cohonestar sus miras ambiciosas, no nos queda otro recurso que el de las armas. Por fortuna siempre estamos dispuestos á empuñarlas con gloria en defensa de la patria: poca es la sangre que corre por nuestras venas cuando se trata de derramarla para vindicar nuestro honor, para afianzar nacionalidad é independencia. Si al torrente devastador que nos amenaza es necesario oponer un dique de acero, lo formarán nuestras espadas, y en sus puntas agudas recogerán los invasores el fruto de su soñada conquista. Si las margenes del Pánuco se han inmortalizado con la derrota de un enemigo respetable y digno del valor Mejicano: las orillas del Bravo seran testigos de la ignominia de los orgullosos hijos del Norte, y sus profundas aguas servirán de sepulcro á los que osaren acercarse á ellas. La llama del patriotismo que arde en nuestros corazónes recibirá nuevo pábulo con la odiosa presencia de los conquistadores; y el eco de Dolores y de Iguala resonará con armonía ennuostros oidos, al romper la marcha para oponer nuestros desnudos pechos á los rifles de los cazadores del Mississippi.

Habitantes de la frontera: No estamos abandonados á nuestros propios recursos: el supremo gobierno vela infatigable por nuestra seguridad y salvacion. Un ejercito fuerte y aguerrido avanza rápidamente para tomar parte en la lucha; y con su poderoso auxilio alcanzarémos la mas completa victoria. Pero mientras llega el anhelado dia de emprender la gran campaña para reconquistar todo el territorio usurpado, y que nuestras aguilas estiendan sus triunfantes alas sobre las margenes del Sabina; nosotros que tenemos la gloria de encontrarnos al frente de los invasores debemos servir de barrera impenetrable. Nuestra obligacion es tan grande como sagrada: no hay sacrificio que no debamos hacer en las aras de la pátria. Se trata de defender los intereses mas caros al corazon del hombre: se trata de nuestro hogar doméstico: se trata de nuestros costumbres: se trata de nuestro idioma: se trata de la augusta creencia que heredamos de nuestros antepasados. Todos estos inapreciables bienes desaparecerian, si los invasores llegasan à afianzar su conquista. ¿Y qué Mejicano digno de este nombre podrà resignarse, sin combatir hasta la muerte, á ver degenerar su noble raza bajo la aborrecible dominacion del extrangero? Ninguno: el elevado sentimiento dél honor nacional domina en nuestros corazones; y desde los confines mas remotos de la república volarán á conservarlo ileso, millares de heroes alentados con el ejemplo de Hidalgo y de Morelos.

Soldados: Ha sonado la hora del peligro: conoceis vuestro deber, y sabreis cumplirlo con lealtad y patriotismo. Tengo el honor de encontrarme a vuestro frente, y estoy persuadido del ardor con que deseais el momento del combate. La conciencia de vuestra superioridad os asegura la mas esplendida victoria. Que avance, pues, el enemigo á quien deseais saludar en el campo de batalla: combatirémos, y la corona del triunfo será el merecido premio de vuestro valor y diciplina. ¡A las armas! ¡Viva la nacion Mejicana! ¡Viva la independencia!

[Translation.]

The general-in-chief of the forces assembled against the enemy, to the inhabitants of this department and the troops under his command.

Fellow Citizens: The annexation of the department of Texas to the United States, projected and consummated by the tortuous policy of the cabinet of the Union, does not yet satisfy the ambitious desires of the degenerate sons of Washington. The civilized world has already recognised in that act all the marks of injustice, iniquity, and the most scandalous violation of the rights of nations. Indelible is the stain which will forever darken the character for virtue falsely attributed to the people of the United States; and posterity will regard with horror their perfidious conduct, and the immorality of the means employed by them to carry into effect that most degrading depredation. The right of conquest has always been a crime against humanity; but nations jealous of their dignity and reputation have endeavored at least to cover it by the splendor of arms, and the prestige of victory. To the United States it has been reserved to put in practice dissimulation, fraud, and the basest treachery, in order to obtain possession, in the midst of peace, of the territory of a friendly nation, which generously relied upon the faith of promises and the solemnity of treaties.

The cabinet of the United States does not, however, stop in its career of usurpation. Not only does it aspire to the possession of the department of Texas, but it covets also the regions on the left bank of the Rio Bravo. Its army, hitherto for some time stationed at Corpus Christi, is now advancing to take possession of a large part of Tamaulipas; and its vanguard has arrived at the Arroyo Colorado, distant 18 leagues from this place. What expectations, therefore, can the Mexican government have of treating with an enemy, who, whilst endeavoring to lull us into security, by opening diplomatic negotiations, proceeds to occupy a territory which never could have been the object of the pending discussion? The limits of Texas are certain and recognised; never have they extended beyond the river Nueces; notwithstanding which, the American army has crossed the line separating Tamaulipas from that department. Even though Mexico could forget that the United States urged and aided the rebellion of the former colonists, and that the principle giving to an independent people the right to annex itself to another nation is not applicable to the case, in which the latter has been the protector of the independence of the former, with the object of admitting it into its own bosom; even though it could be accepted as an axiom of international law, that the violation of every rule of morality and justice might serve as a legitimate title for acquisition; nevertheless, the territory of Tamaulipas would still remain beyond the law of annexation, sanctioned by the American Congress; because that law comprises independent Texas, the ground occupied by the rebellious colony, and in no wise includes other departments, in which the Mexican government has uninterruptedly exercised its legitimate authority.

Fellow-countrymen: With an enemy which respects not its own laws, which shamelessly derides the very principles invoked by it previously, in order to excuse its ambitious views, we have no other resource than arms. We are fortunately always prepared to take them up with glory, in defence of our country; little do we regard the blood in our veins, when we are called on to shed it in vindication of our honor, to assure our nationality and independence. If to the torrent of devastation which threatens us it be necessary to oppose a dike of steel, our swords will form it; and on their sharp points will the enemy receive the fruits of his anticipated conquest. If the banks of the Panuco have been immortalized by the defeat of an enemy, respectable and worthy of the valor of Mexico, those of the Bravo shall witness the ignominy of the proud sons of the north, and its deep waters shall serve as the sepulchre of those who dare to approach it. The flame of patriotism which burns in our hearts will receive new fuel from the odious presence of the conquerors; and the cry of Dolores and Iguala shall be re-echoed with harmony to our ears, when we take up our march to oppose our naked breasts to the rifles of the hunters of the Mississippi.

Inhabitants of the frontier: We are not left to our own resources; the supreme government watches indefatigably for our safety and protection. A strong and warlike army is rapidly advancing to take part in the struggle, and with its powerful aid we shall achieve the most complete victory. Until the long wished for day shall arrive, when we enter upon the great campaign for the re-conquest of the territory of which we have been despoiled, and to carry our eagles in triumph to the banks of the Sabine, we, who have the glory to be in front of the invaders, must serve as an impenetrable barrier. Our obligation is great as it is sacred, and there is no sacrifice which we are not bound to make upon the altars of our country. We have to defend the interests most dear to the heart of man: our domestic hearths, our customs, our language, the august faith handed down to us by our ancestors, all are at stake. All these inestimable blessings will vanish if the invaders succeed in establishing their conquest. And what Mexican, worthy of the name of Mexican, can resign himself without fighting to the death to see his noble race degenerate under the abhorred dominion of foreigners? No one; the high sentiment of national honor rules in our hearts, and from the remotest confines of the republic thousands of heroes will fly, animated by the example of Hidalgo and Morelos, to preserve its integrity.

Soldiers: The hour of danger is come; you know your duty, and will fulfil it with honor and patriotism. I have the honor to be at your head, and I am persuaded of the ardor with which you will look forward to the moment of combat. Consciousness of your superiority assures to you the most splendid victory. Let the enemy then come, whom you are burning to meet on the field of battle. We will fight and the crown of triumph shall be the merited reward of your valor and discipline. To arms! The Mexican nation forever! Independence forever!

FRANCISCO MEJIA.

MATAMORAS, March 18, 1846.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, March 25, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully report that I marched on the morning of the 23d instant with the entire army, from the camp near the Colarado, in the order prescribed in my order No. 35, herewith enclosed. After a march of fifteen miles, we reached, on the morning of the 24th, a point on the route from Matamoras to Point Isabel, eighteen miles from the former and ten from the latter place. I here left the infantry brigades under Brigadier General Worth, with instructions to proceed in the direction of Matamaras until he came to a suitable position for encampment, where he would halt, holding the route in observation, while I proceeded with the cavalry to this point to communicate with our transports, supposed to have arrived in the harbor, and make the necessary arrangements for the establishment and defence of a depot.

While on my way hither, our column was approached by a party on its right flank, bearing a white flag. It proved to be a civil deputation from Matamoras, desiring an interview with me. I informed them that I would halt at the first suitable place on the road and afford them the desired interview. It was, however, found necessary, from the want of water, to continue the route to this place. The deputation halted while yet some miles from Point Isabel, declining to come further, and sent me a formal protest of the prefect of the northern district of Tamaulipas against our occupation of the country, which I enclose herewith. At this moment, it was discovered that the buildings at Point Isabel were in flames. I then informed the bearer of the protest that I would answer it when opposite Matamoras, and dismissed the deputation. I considered the conflagration before my eyes as a decided evidence of hostility, and was not willing to be trifled with any longer, particularly as I had reason to believe that the prefect, in making this protest, was but a tool of the military authorities at Matamoras.

The advance of the cavalry fortunately arrived here in season to arrest the fire, which consumed but three or four houses. The port captain, who committed the act under the orders, it is said, of General Mejia, had made his escape before its arrival. We found two or three inoffensive Mexicans here, the rest having left for Matamoras.

I was gratified to find that the water expedition had exactly answered to our land movement; the steamers arriving in the harbor only two or three hours before we reached Point Isabel, with the other transports close in the rear. The "Porpoise" and "Lawrence," brigs-of-war, and cutter "Woodbury," are lying outside. I have thought it necessary to order Captain Porter's company to this place to reinforce Major Munroe. Our great depot must be here, and it is very important to secure it against any enterprise of the enemy. The engineer officers are now examining the ground with a view to tracing lines of defence and strengthening the position.

As soon as a sufficient amount of supplies can be thrown forward toward Matamoras, I shall march in the direction of that town and occupy a position as near it as circumstances will permit.

I enclose a sketch prepared by my aid-de-camp, Lieutenant Eaton, exhibiting the route of march since leaving the Colorado, and the bearings of important points.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. Army, commanding.

Prefectura del Norte de Tamaulipas.

Aunque la cuestion pendiente sobre agregacion del departamento de Tejas á los E. U., se encuentra sujeta á la resolucion del gobierno supremo Mejicano, el hecho de habor abanrado el ejercito que se halla á las ordenes de V. S., traspasando la linea que ocupaba en Corpus Christi, me pone en la obligacion como prima autoridad politica del distrito del Norte de Tamaulipas de dirigirme á V. S. como tengo el honor de verificarlo por medio de la comision que pondrá esta nota en sus manos, manifestandole; que alarmados justamente los pueblos que dependen de esta prefectura con la invacion de un ejercito que sin previa declaracion de guerra, y sin anunciar explicitamente el objeto que se propone viene ocupando un territorio que nunca ha pertenecido á la colonia subleveda, no han podido veer con indiferencia un procedimiento tan contrario á la conducta que observan las naciones civilizadas y á los principios mas claras del derecho de gentes; que dirigidos por el honor y patriotismo, y ciertos de que nada se ha dicho oficialmente por el gabinete de la Union al gobierno Mejicano, respecto á en sanchar los limites de Tejas hasta la orilla izquierda del Rio Bravo, y que confiados los ciudadanos de este distrito en la notoria justicia de ser causa y en uso del derecho natural de la defenza, protestan por un organo de la manera mas solemne que ni ahora ni en tiempo alguno consienten, ni consentiran en separarse de la republica Mejicano y unirse á la de los E. U. del Norte, y que se encuentran resueltos á llevar á cabo esta firme determinacion, resistiendo hasta donde alcansen sus fuerzas siempre y cuando el ejercito que marcha á las ordenes de V. S., no retroceda á ocupar sus antiguas posiciones; pues permaneciendo en el territorio de Tamaulipas deben considerar sus habitantes, que cualquiera que sean las protestas sobre la paz con que viene convidando, por parte de V. S. se han roto abiertamente las hostilidades, cuyas lamentables consecuencias serán ante el mundo entero de la esclusiva responsabilidad de los invasores.

Tengo el honor de dicirlo á V. S. con el fin indicado, manifestandole mi consideracion y aprecio.

Office of the prefect of the northern district of the department of Tamaulipas.

GOD AND LIBERTY!

SANTA RITA, March 23, 1846.

SIR: Although the pending question respecting the annexation of the department of Texas to the United States is subject to the decision of the supreme government of Mexico, the fact of the advance of the army under your excellency's orders, over the line occupied by you at Corpus Christi, places me under the necessity, as the chief political authority of the northern district of Tamaulipas, to address you, as I have now the honor to do, through the commissioners, who will place this in your hands, and to inform you that the people, under this prefecture, being justly alarmed at the invasion of an army, which, without any previous declaration of war, and without announcing explicitly the object proposed by it, comes to occupy a territory which never belonged to the insurgent province, cannot regard with indifference a proceeding so contrary to the conduct observed towards each other by civilized nations, and to the clearest principles of the law of nations; that, directed by honor and patriotism, and certain that nothing has been said officially by the cabinet of the Union to the Mexican government, respecting the extension of the limits of Texas to the left bank of the Rio Bravo, trusting in the well-known justice of their cause, and using their natural right of defence, they (the citizens of this district) protest, in the most solemn manner, that neither now nor at any time do they, or will they, consent to separate themselves from the Mexican republic, and to unite themselves with the United States, and that they are resolved to carry this firm determination into effect, resisting, so far as their strength will enable them, at all times and places, until the army under your excellency's orders shall recede and occupy its former positions; because, so long as it remains within the territory of Tamaulipas, the inhabitants must consider that whatsoever protestations of peace may be made, hostilities have been openly commenced by your excellency, the lamentable consequences of which will rest before the world exclusively on the heads of the invaders.

I have the honor to say this to your excellency, with the object indicated, and to assure you of my consideration and esteem.

JENES CARDENAS.

[Extract.]

CAMP ON THE LEFT BANK OF THE RIO GRANDE,
Opposite Matamoras, March 29, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I arrived at this camp yesterday with the forces under my command, no resistance having been offered to my advance to the banks of the river, nor any act of hostility committed by the Mexicans, except the capture of two of our dragoons, sent forward from the advanced guard. I deem it possible that these two men may have deserted to the enemy, as one of them, at least, bears a bad character. Our approach seems to have created much excitement in Matamoras, and a great deal of activity has been displayed since our arrival in the preparation of batteries. The left bank is now under reconnoissance of our engineer officers, and I shall lose no time in strengthening our position by such defensive works as may be necessary, employing for that purpose a portion of the heavy guns brought round by sea.

The attitude of the Mexicans is so far decidedly hostile. An interview has been held, by my direction, with the military authorities in Matamoras, but with no satisfactory result.

Under this state of things, I must again and urgently call your attention to the necessity of speedily sending recruits to this army.

The militia of Texas are so remote from the border * * * that we cannot depend upon their aid.

The strength gained by filling up the regiments here, even to the present feeble establishment, would be of very great importance.

I respectfully enclose a field report of the force now in this camp.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp on the left bank of the Rio Grande,
Opposite Matamoras, Texas, April 6, 1846.

Sir: I have to report no material change in the aspect of affairs here since my despatch of the 29th ult. The Mexicans still retain a hostile attitude, and have thrown up some works, evidently designed to prevent us from crossing the river. From information on which I can rely, these works are scantily armed with guns of inferior calibre, and would oppose very feeble obstacles in case the turn of affairs should carry our operations to the other bank.

On our side a battery for four 18-pounders will be completed, and the guns placed in battery to-day. These guns bear directly upon the public square of Matamoras, and within good range for demolishing the town. Their object cannot be mistaken by the enemy, and will, I think, effectually restrain him from any enterprises upon our side of the river. A strong bastioned field fort, for a garrison of 500 men, has been laid out by the engineers in rear of the battery, and will be commenced immediately. This work will enable a brigade to maintain this position against any Mexican odds, and will leave me free to dispose of the other corps as considerations of health and convenience may render desirable.

The two dragoons that were taken prisoners, as reported in my communication of the 29th ultimo, have been returned by General Mejia upon my application; but no further intercourse has been carried on with the authorities on the other side since my last despatch. Efforts are continually making to entice our men to desert, and, I regret to say, have met with considerable success. Four, however, have been drowned in swimming the river, and two have been killed by our pickets while attempting to desert, which has operated to check the practice. A majority of those who have deserted are old offenders.

I respectfully enclose the minutes of an interview held on the day of our arrival, between General Worth and General De La Vega, the second in command in Matamoras. I deemed it proper and respectful to announce formally the purpose of our advance to the Rio Grande, and afford an opportunity to establish friendly relations, if practicable. You will perceive that the Mexican authorities persist in considering our march as an act of war in itself; and I believe they would so treat it, and attempt to drive us from our position, if they felt sufficient confidence in their strength.

I have no very accurate information as to the number of regular troops in Matamoras, but I am quite confident that it does not reach 2,000, and that of very bad description, and miserably armed. We hear that General Ampudia is daily expected, and that they are only waiting his arrival with heavy reinforcements to attack us. The position of our camp is naturally strong, and, without the aid of artificial defences, I feel quite secure against any offensive movement of the enemy.

We have no news upon which we can depend from the interior of Mexico, the last authentic date being still March 2, from Vera Cruz.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Minutes of an interview between Brigadier General W. J. Worth, United States army, and General Romulo Vega, of the Mexican army, held on the right bank of the Rio Grande, 28th March, 1846.

On exhibiting a white flag on the left bank of the Rio Grande, a boat, with two officers, (represented as cavalry officers,) with an interpreter, the same who appeared at the crossing of the Colorado, and a fourth person, crossed from the right bank of the river.

It was stated through an interpreter (Mr. Mitchell) that a general officer of the United States army had been sent by his commanding general with despatches to the commanding general at Matamoras and the civil authorities, and an interview requested.

After some conversation explanatory of the above, the Mexican party re-crossed the river to report to the commanding general at Matamoras, and return with his reply. An open note for the American consul in Matamoras, with an endorsement on the back in pencil, was delivered to the Mexican officer by General Worth, who replied that he should hand it to the commanding general. "Certainly, of course," was General Worth's remark in reply.

On the return of the same party, General Mejia sent word that, if the commanding general of the American forces desired a conference with the commanding general of the Mexican forces, it would readily be complied with; but, as the American commander had designated a subordinate officer to meet General Mejia, the commanding officer of the Mexican forces, General Mejia, could not entertain such a proposition, but that an officer of corresponding rank and position in the Mexican forces would be designated to receive any communication sent by General Taylor.

It was perceived that the relation of the parties was misapprehended, they supposing that a conference was requested; this was corrected immediately, and it was reiterated that General Worth was merely the bearer of despatches, with authority to relate verbally certain matters of interest to the commanding general at Matamoras.

The proposition of General Mejia was then acceded to, with the remark that this was a mere question of form, which should not be permitted to interfere with any arrangements necessary to the continuance of the friendly relations now existing between the two governments.

The Mexican party returned to the right bank, and, after a short absence, returned, stating that General Romulo Vega would receive General Worth on the right bank of the river (their own proposition) for the reception of any communication which General Worth might have to make from the commanding general.

General Worth then crossed the river, accompanied by Lieutenant Smith, A. D. C., Lieutenants Magruder, Deas, and Blake, attached to his staff, together with Lieutenant Knowlton as interpreter.

On arriving at the right bank of the river, General Worth was received by General Vega with becoming courtesy and respect, and introduced to "the authorities of Matamoras," represented in the person of the Licenciádo Casares.

On the Mexican part were present General Vega, the Licenciádo Casares, two officers, (represented as cavalry officers,) an interpreter, with a person named Juan N. Garza, official de Defensores.

After the usual courtesies on meeting, it was stated by General Worth that he was bearer of despatches from the commanding general of the American forces to General Mejia and the civil authorities of Matamoras; a written and unsealed document was produced, and General Vega desiring to know its contents, it was carefully read and translated into Spanish by the Mexican interpreter.

General Vega then stated that he had been directed to receive such communications as General Worth might present from his commanding general, going on to say that the march of the United States troops through a part of the Mexican territory (Tamaulipas) was considered as an act of war.

General Worth.—I am well aware that some of the Mexican people consider it an aggressive act, but—(interrupted by the Mexican interpreter, and after a slight discussion of the international question on the part of General Vega)—General Worth repeated the above remark, adding that it was not so considered by his government; that the army had been ordered there by his government, and there it would remain; whether rightfully or otherwise, that was a matter to be settled between the two governments. General Vega, still disposed to argue the merits of the case, was told by General Worth that he came to state facts, not to argue them.

General Worth here stated that he had been sent with a despatch from his commanding general to General Mejia; that General Mejia had refused to receive it from him in person; adding, with emphasis, and some degree of warmth, "I now state that I withdraw this despatch," having read it merely as an act of courtesy to General Vega; that, in addition to the written despatch to General Mejia, I am authorized to express verbally the sentiments with which the commanding general proposed to carry out the instructions of his government, in which he hoped to preserve the peaceable relations between the two governments, leaving all questions between the two countries to be settled by their respective governments; and if, hereafter, General Mejia wished to communicate with General Taylor, he, General Mejia, must propose the means, assuring General Vega that, should General Mejia present himself or his communications by a subaltern officer, in either case they would be received with becoming courtesy and hospitality.

The question of right of territory was again opened by General Vega, who asked how the United States government would view the matter should the Mexican troops march into or occupy a portion of the territory of the United States?

General Worth replied that General Vega might probably be familiar with the old proverb, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," and that it would be time enough to reply to such a proposition when the act itself was perpetrated.

This proverb did not appear to have been translated by the Mexican interpreter, but was received by General Vega with a smile and slight shrug.

General Worth.—Is the American consul in arrest, or in prison?

General Vega.—No.

General Worth.—Is he now in the exercise of his proper functions?

General Vega, after apparently consulting with the Licenciàdo Casares for a moment, replied that he was.

General Worth.—Then, as an American officer, in the name of my government and my commanding general, I demand an interview with the consul of my country. (No reply.)

General Worth.—Has Mexico declared war against the United States?

General Vega.—No.

General Worth.—Are the two countries still at peace?

General Vega.—Yes.

General Worth.—Then I again demand an interview with the consul of my government, in Matamoras; in the presence, of course, of these gentlemen, or any other that the commanding general in Matamoras may be pleased to designate. General Vega reiterated that the consul was in the proper exercise of his functions; that he was not in arrest, nor were any other Americans in arrest in Matamoras; that he would submit the demand to General Mejia, adding that he thought there would be great difficulty.

This demand was repeatedly made in the most emphatic manner, and a reply requested; General Vega stating the consul continued in the exercise of his functions, and that General Worth's demand would be submitted to General Mejia.

Here the interview was suspended, while the Licenciàdo left the party to submit (as was understood) the demand for an interview with the consul to General Mejia. While engaged in friendly intercourse, General Worth stated to General Vega, in an informal manner, as an evidence of the good faith, intentions, and disposition of his commanding general, that he, General Taylor, was well aware of the importance of Brazos Santiago to the commerce and business community of Matamoras; that he respected their laws and customs, and would freely grant entrance and exit to all Mexican and other vessels trading with Matamoras on the same terms as before its occupation by the United States, leaving all questions arising therefrom to be settled hereafter by the two governments.

At the expiration of about a quarter of an hour, the Licenciádo Casares returned and reported that General Mejia would not accede to the request for an interview on the part of General Worth; saying nothing, however, relative to the question of the consul.

General Vega was then again informed that the despatch intended to be delivered to General Mejia by General Worth, in person, would be returned by him, General W., to his commanding general, considering any other disposition of it as disrespectful to him; repeating that it had been read to General Vega as an act of courtesy to him, and that General Mejia must take his own measures of communicating with General Taylor, adding that whether General Mejia should send a superior or subaltern officer to General Taylor, at all times accessible, he would be received with becoming courtesy and hospitality. General Worth then presented a written and sealed document for the civil authorities of Matamoras, which was received by General Vega and immediately transferred to the Licenciádo Casares.

General Vega.—Is it the intention of General Taylor to remain with his army on the left bank of the Rio Grande?

General Worth.—Most assuredly, and there to remain until directed otherwise by his government.

General Vega remarked that "we" felt indignation at seeing the American flag placed on the Rio Grande, a portion of the Mexican territory.

General Worth replied, that was a matter of taste; notwithstanding, there it would remain. The army had been ordered to occupy its present position by its government; it has come in a peaceable rather than belligerent attitude, with a determination to respect the rights and customs of those on the right bank of the Rio Grande, while it offers protection to all on the left bank within the territory of the United States.

No reply having been received from General Vega relative to the demand for an interview with the American consul, the question was again introduced by General Worth, and the demand for the last time reiterated.

General Vega then promptly refused to comply with the demand; replying, without waiting for the interpretation, "No, no."

General Worth.—I have now to state that a refusal of my demand to see the American consul is regarded as a belligerent act; and, in conclusion, I have to add, the commanding general of the American forces on the left bank of the river will regard the passage of any armed party of Mexicans in hostile array across the Rio Grande as an act of war, and pursue it accordingly.

The interview here terminated, and General Worth and staff returned to the left bank of the river.

The above is the substance of the interview between Generals Worth and Vega; is a fair statement of the conversation, and, as nearly as possible, stating the exact words and expressions used on the occasion.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Matamoras, Texas, April 15, 1846.

SIR: I have to report that, on the 11th inst., General Ampudia arrived at Matamoras with two hundred cavalry, the remainder of his force, variously estimated from 2,000 to 3,000 men, being some distance in rear on the route from Monterey. Immediately after assuming the chief command, General Ampudia ordered all Americans to leave Matamoras within twenty-four hours, and repair to Victoria, a town in the interior of Tamaulipas. He had taken the same severe measure at Reinosa, on his way hither. On the 12th I received from General Ampudia a despatch, summoning me to withdraw my force within twenty-four hours, and to fall back beyond the river Nueces. To this communication I replied on the 12th, saying that I should not retrograde from my position. Copies of this correspondence are enclosed herewith. I considered the letter of General Ampudia sufficient to warrant me in blocking up the Rio Grande, and stopping all supplies for Matamoras, orders for which have been given to the naval commander at Brazos Santiago.

Notwithstanding the alternative of war presented by General Ampudia, no hostile movement has yet been made by his force. Whether he will feel strong enough to attempt anything when all his force shall arrive, is very doubtful. Our brigades occupy strong positions, beyond reach of fire from the town, and can hold themselves against many times their number of Mexican troops. In the meantime, our defences here and at Point Isabel are daily gaining strength. The latter point is well supplied with artillery, and in a good condition to resist attack.

I regret to report that Colonel Cross has been missing since the 10th inst., on which day he rode out alone in the vicinity of our camp. All attempts to trace him have hitherto proved fruitless, and I much fear that he has been waylaid and murdered by banditti known to be in our neighborhood. To-day I address a letter on the subject to General Ampudia, desiring him to assist in our efforts to ascertain the colonel's fate.

I shall authorize the raising of two companies of Texan mounted men, for service in this quarter, particularly for the purpose of keeping open our communication with Point Isabel, and relieving the regular cavalry of a portion of their duties, which are now oppressive.

Several resignations of officers have been tendered since our arrival here. While I regret that such has been the case, I have still deemed it my duty to throw no obstacle in the way of their acceptance.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Matamoras, Texas, April 12, 1846.

Senor: I have had the honor to receive your note of this date, in which you summon me to withdraw the forces under my command from their present position, and beyond the river Nueces, until the pending question between our governments, relative to the limits of Texas, shall be settled.

I need hardly advise you that, charged, as I am, in only a military capacity, with the performance of specific duties, I cannot enter into a discussion of the international question involved in the advance of the American army. You will, however, permit me to say that the government of the United States has constantly sought a settlement, by negotiation, of the question of boundary; that an envoy was despatched to Mexico for that purpose, and that up to the most recent dates said envoy had not been received by the actual Mexican government, if indeed he has not received his passports and left the republic. In the meantime, I have been ordered to occupy the country up to the left bank of the Rio Grande, until the boundary shall be definitively settled. In carrying out these instructions I have carefully abstained from all acts of hostility, obeying, in this regard, not only the letter of my instructions, but the plain dictates of justice and humanity.

The instructions under which I am acting will not permit me to retrograde from the position I now occupy. In view of the relations between our respective governments, and the individual suffering which may result, I regret the alternative which you offer; but, at the same time, wish it understood that I shall by no means avoid such alternative, leaving the responsibility with those who rashly commence hostilities. In conclusion, you will permit me to give the assurance that, on my part, the laws and customs of war among civilized nations shall be carefully observed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Señor General D. Pedro de Ampudia.

[Translation.]

Fourth Military Division,
General-in-Chief.

To explain to you the many grounds for the just grievances felt by the Mexican nation, caused by the United States government, would be a loss of time, and an insult to your good sense; I therefore pass at once to such explanations as I consider of absolute necessity.

Your government, in an incredible manner—you will even permit me to say an extravagant one, if the usage or general rules established and received among all civilized nations are regarded—has not only insulted, but has exasperated the Mexican nation, bearing its conquering banner to the left bank of the Rio Bravo del Norte; and in this case, by explicit and definitive orders of my government, which neither can, will, nor should receive new outrages, I require you in all form, and at latest in the peremptory term of twenty-four hours, to break up your camp and retire to the other bank of the Nueces river, while our governments are regulating the pending question in relation to Texas. If you insist in remaining upon the soil of the department of Tamaulipas, it will clearly result that arms, and arms alone, must decide the question; and in that case I advise you that we accept the war to which, with so much injustice on your part, you provoke us, and that, on our part, this war shall be conducted conformably to the principles established by the most civilized nations; that is to say, that the law of nations and of war shall be the guide of my operations; trusting that on your part the same will be observed.

With this view, I tender you the considerations due to your person and respectable office.

God and Liberty!

Head-quarters at Matamoras,
2 o'clock, P. M. April 12, 1846.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

Senor General-in-Chief of the United States Army,
Don Z. Taylor.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Matamoras, Texas, April 26, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to report that General Arista arrived in Matamoras on the 24th inst., and assumed the chief command of the Mexican troops. On the same day he addressed me a communication, conceived in courteous terms, but saying that he considered hostilities commenced, and should prosecute them. A translation of his note, and a copy of my reply, will be transmitted the moment they can be prepared. I despatch this by an express which is now waiting.

I regret to report that a party of dragoons, sent out by me on the 24th inst., to watch the course of the river above on this bank, became engaged with a very large force of the enemy, and after a short affair, in which some sixteen were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender. Not one of the party has returned, except a wounded man sent in this morning by the Mexican commander, so that I cannot report with confidence the particulars of the engagement, or the fate of the officers, except that Captain Hardee was known to be a prisoner, and unhurt. Captain Thornton, and Lieutenants Mason and Kane, were the other officers. The party was 63 strong.

Hostilities may now be considered as commenced, and I have this day deemed it necessary to call upon the governor of Texas for four regiments of volunteers, two to be mounted and two to serve as foot. As some delay must occur in collecting these troops, I have also desired the governor of Louisiana to send out four regiments of infantry as soon as practicable. This will constitute an auxiliary force of nearly 5,000 men, which will be required to prosecute the war with energy, and carry it, as it should be, into the enemy's country. I trust the department will approve my course in this matter, and will give the necessary orders to the staff departments for the supply of this large additional force.

If a law could be passed authorizing the President to raise volunteers for twelve months, it would be of the greatest importance for a service so remote from support as this.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

DESPATCHES FROM GENERAL TAYLOR.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

Despatches from General Taylor relative to Colonel Cross and missing lieutenants—General Taylor ordered by the Mexican general to leave his position on the Rio Grande—blockade, &c.

MAY 12, 1846.
Read, and laid upon the table.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit to Congress a copy of a communication from the officer commanding the army in Texas, with the papers which accompanied it. They were received by the southern mail of yesterday, some hours after my message of that date had been transmitted, and are of a prior date to one of the communications from the same officer, which accompanied that message.

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1846.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Matamoras, April 23, 1846.

SIR: I have to report that, since my despatch of the 15th instant, the relations between me and the Mexicans have not been changed. General Ampudia remains in command in Matamoras, though it may be regarded as certain that he is no longer in chief command on the frontier. I have reason to believe that Arista has succeeded to the command; whether by orders from the central government, or, as is reported, in consequence of a movement among the troops themselves, I have not the means of ascertaining. General Arista is said to be expected hourly in Matamoras.

In my last despatch I advised you that, on the receipt of General Ampudia's summons to fall back from my position, I ordered a blockade of the mouth of the Rio Grande, deeming this a measure perfectly proper under the circumstances, and, at the same time, the most efficient means of letting the Mexican commander understand that this state of quasi war was not to be interpreted to his advantage only, while we reaped the inconveniences attending it. On the 17th instant, pursuant to my instructions, Lieutenant Renshaw, of the navy, warned off two American schooners about to enter the river with provisions. Yesterday, I received from General Ampudia a communication on the subject, a translation of which, and my reply, are herewith transmitted. I trust that my course in this matter will meet the approval of the department. It will, at any rate, compel the Mexicans either to withdraw their army from Matamoras, where it cannot be subsisted, or to assume the offensive on this side of the river.

You will perceive from my "orders," No. 50, that the fate of Colonel Cross has been ascertained. His body was discovered in the forest, about four miles from this camp, and with marks of violence, leaving no doubt that he was robbed, and cruelly murdered. I deem it best not to detail the various rumors which have been current in regard to the particulars of his death, as nothing conclusive can be gathered from them. I am willing, for the present, to believe that it was the act of robbers—not authorised by the Mexican general. I enclose a translation of the answer of General Ampudia to my inquiry concerning Colonel Cross.

With a view to check the depredations of small parties of Mexicans on this side of the river, Lieutenants Dobbins, 3d infantry, and Porter, 4th infantry, were authorised by me a few days since, to scour the country for some miles, with a select party of men, and capture or destroy any such parties that they might meet. It appears that they separated, and that Lieutenant Porter, at the head of his own detachment, surprised a Mexican camp, drove away the men and took possession of their horses. Soon afterwards, there fell a heavy rain, and, at a moment when the party seem to have been quite unprepared for an attack, they were fired upon from the thicket. In attempting to return it, the muskets missed fire, and the party dispersed in the thicket. The men have gradually found their way back to camp, with the exception of one, who, with Lieutenant Porter, is still missing. From the statements of the men who have returned, there can be little doubt but that both were killed. A party is now out in search of them, and I hope, on its return, to be able to communicate something more definite.

I have also to report, that Lieutenant Deas, 4th artillery, crossed the river on the night of the 13th instant, and was immediately taken up by the Mexican guard. He is now a prisoner of war at Matamoras. It is supposed that he was laboring under mental alienation at the time he committed this unfortunate act. Be this as it may, as he voluntarily placed himself in the hands of the enemy, I shall make no effort to reclaim him at present. It is understood that he is well treated, though under restraint.

The field work is now in a condition of defence, and is approaching rapidly to completion.

The recruits under Lieutenant Paul arrived on the 21st instant. Of the 56 for the general service, 41 have been assigned to the batteries of field artillery, filling up those companies; the remaining 15, to the 4th infantry. The descriptive roll will be completed and forwarded as soon as the prescribed inspections are made.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[Translation.]

Division of the North,
Second General-in-Chief.

From various sources, worthy of confidence, I have learned that some vessels, bound for the mouth of the river, have not been able to effect an entrance into that port, in consequence of your orders that they should be conducted to Brazos Santiago. The cargo of one of them is composed in great part, and of the other entirely, of provisions, which the contractors charged with providing for the army under my orders had procured, to fulfil the obligations of their contracts. You have taken possession of these provisions by force, and against the will of the proprietors, one of whom is vice consul of her Catholic Majesty, and the other of her Britannic Majesty; and whose rights, in place of being religiously respected, as was proffered, and as was to be hoped from the observance of the principles which govern among civilized nations, have, on the contrary, been violated in the most extraordinary manner, opposed to the guarantee and respect due to private property.

Nothing can have authorized you in such a course. The commerce of nations is not suspended or interrupted, except in consequence of a solemn declaration of blockade, communicated and established in the form prescribed by international law. Nevertheless, you have infringed these rules; and, by an act which can never be viewed favorably to the United States government, have hindered the entrance to a Mexican port of vessels bound to it, under the confidence that commerce would not be interrupted. My duties do not allow me to consent to this new species of hostility, and they constrain me to require of you, not only that the vessels taken by force to Brazos Santiago shall be at liberty to return to the mouth of the river, but the restoration of all the provisions which, besides belonging to private contractors, were destined for the troops on this frontier. I consider it useless to inculcate the justice of this demand, and the results which may follow an unlooked for refusal.

I have also understood that two Mexicans, carried down in a boat by the current of the river near one of the advanced posts of your camp, were detained, after being fired upon, and that they are still kept and treated as prisoners. The individuals in question do not belong to the army, and this circumstance exempts them from the laws of war. I therefore hope that you will place them absolutely at liberty, as I cannot be persuaded that you pretend to extend to persons not military the consequences of an invasion, which, without employing this means of rigor against unarmed citizens, is marked in itself with the seal of universal reprobation.

I avail myself of this opportunity to assure you of my distinguished consideration.

God and Liberty! MATAMORAS, April 22, 1846.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

Sr. Gen. Don Z. TAYLOR.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Matamoras, (Texas,) April 22, 1846.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your communication of this date, in which you complain of certain measures adopted by my order to close the mouth of the Rio Bravo against vessels bound to Matamoras, and in which you also advert to the case of two Mexicans supposed to be detained as prisoners in this camp.

After all that has passed since the American army first approached the Rio Bravo, I am certainly surprised that you should complain of a measure which is no other than a natural result of the state of war so much insisted upon by the Mexican authorities as actually existing at this time. You will excuse me for recalling a few circumstances, to show that this state of war has not been sought by the American army, but has been forced upon it, and that the exercise of the rights incident to such a state cannot be made a subject of complaint.

On breaking up my camp at Corpus Christi, and moving forward with the army under my orders, to occupy the left bank of the Rio Bravo, it was my earnest desire to execute my instructions in a pacific manner; to observe the utmost regard for the personal rights of all citizens residing on the left bank of the river, and to take care that the religion and customs of the people should suffer no violation. With this view, and to quiet the minds of the inhabitants, I issued orders to the army, enjoining a strict observance of the rights and interests of all Mexicans residing on the river, and caused said orders to be translated into Spanish, and circulated in the several towns on the Bravo. These orders announced the spirit in which we proposed to occupy the country, and I am proud to say, that up to this moment the same spirit has controlled the operations of the army. On reaching the Arroyo Colorado I was informed by a Mexican officer, that the order in question had been received in Metamoras, but was told at the same time that if I attempted to cross the river it would be regarded as a declaration of war. Again, on my march to Frontone I was met by a deputation of the civil authorities of Matamoras, protesting against my occupation of a portion of the department of Tamaulipas, and declaring that if the army was not at once withdrawn, war would result. While this communication was in my hands, it was discovered that the village of Frontone had been set on fire and abandoned. I viewed this as a direct act of war, and informed the deputation that their communication would be answered by me when opposite Matamoras, which was done in respectful terms. On reaching the river I despatched an officer, high in rank, to convey to the commanding general in Matamoras the expression of my desire for amicable relations, and my willingness to leave open to the use of the citizens of Matamoras the port of Brazos Santiago, until the question of boundary should be definitively settled. This officer received for reply, from the officer selected to confer with him, that my advance to the Rio Bravo was considered as a veritable act of war, and he was absolutely refused an interview with the American consul, in itself an act incompatible with a state of peace. Notwithstanding these repeated assurances on the part of the Mexican authorities, and notwithstanding the most obviously hostile preparations on the right bank of the river, accompanied by a rigid non-intercourse, I carefully abstained from any act of hostility—determined that the onus of producing an actual state of hostilities should not rest with me. Our relations remained in this state until I had the honor to receive your note of the 12th instant, in which you denounce war as the alternative of my remaining in this position. As I could not, under my instructions, recede from my position, I accepted the alternative you offered, and made all my dispositions to meet it suitably. But, still willing to adopt milder measures before proceeding to others, I contented myself in the first instance with ordering a blockade of the mouth of the Rio Bravo, by the naval forces under my orders—a proceeding perfectly consonant with the state of war so often declared to exist, and which you acknowledge in your note of the 16th instant, relative to the late Colonel Cross. If this measure seem oppressive, I wish it borne in mind, that it has been forced upon me by the course you have seen fit to adopt. I have reported this blockade to my government, and shall not remove it until I receive instructions to that effect, unless indeed you desire an armistice pending the final settlement of the question between the governments, or until war shall be formally declared by either, in which case I vill cheerfully open the river. In regard to the consequences you nention as resulting from a refusal to remove the blockade, I beg 'ou to understand that I am prepared for them, be they what they nay.

In regard to the particular vessels referred to in your communiation, I have the honor to advise you that, in pursuance of my rders, two American schooners, bound for Matamoras, were warned off on the 17th instant, when near the mouth of the river, and put to sea, returning probably to New Orleans. They were not seized, or their cargoes disturbed in any way, nor have they been in the harbor of Brazos Santiago to my knowledge. A Mexican schooner, understood to be the "Juanita," was in or off that harbor when my instructions to block the river were issued, but was driven to sea in a gale, since which time I have had no report concerning her. Since the receipt of your communication, I have learned that two persons, sent to the mouth of the river to procure information respecting this vessel, proceeded thence to Brazos Santiago, when they were taken up and detained by the officer in command until my orders could be received. I shall order their immediate release. A letter from one of them to the Spanish vice-consul is respectfully transmitted herewith.

In relation to the two Mexicans said to have drifted down the river in a boat, and to be prisoners at this time in my camp, I have the pleasure to inform you that no such persons have been taken prisoners, or are now detained by my authority. The boat in question was carried down empty by the current of the river, and drifted ashore near one of our pickets, and was secured by the guard. Some time afterwards an attempt was made to recover the boat under cover of the darkness; the individuals concerned were hailed by the guard, and, failing to answer, were fired upon as a matter of course. What became of them is not known, as no trace of them could be discovered on the following morning. The officer of the Mexican guard directly opposite was informed the next day that the boat would be returned on proper application to me, and I have now only to repeat that assurance.

In conclusion, I take leave to state that I consider the tone of your communication highly exceptionable, where you stigmatize the movement of the army under my orders as "marked with the seal of universal reprobation." You must be aware that such language is not respectful in itself, either to me or to my government; and while I observe in my own correspondence the courtesy due to your high position, and to the magnitude of the interests with which we are respectively charged, I shall expect the same in return.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. Army, Commanding.

Señor Gen. D. Pedro de Ampudia,
Commanding in Matamoras.

Division of the North—2d General-in-Chief.

In reply to your note which I received yesterday, I have the honor to state that if Colonel Cross, quartermaster general of the forces under your command, had been found at any of the military posts under my orders, his lot would have been that of a prisoner of war, treated with the consideration due to his rank, and according to the rules prescribed by the law of nations and of war, well considered in his situation of prisoner.

The rumor was current in this place, also, that the colonel in question had disappeared from your camp; but I have been able to learn nothing certainly, so that I cannot answer satisfactorily the respectful request in your note on the subject.

The particular circumstances in which we are placed should not prevent me, in my private capacity, yielding to the sentiments of humanity, from manifesting to a certain point my sympathy for the feelings of the family of Colonel Cross, caused by his disappearance.

I renew to you, on this occasion, the consideration due. God and liberty! Head-quarters in Matamoras, April 16, 1846.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

Sr. Gen. D. Z. Taylor.

OCCUPATION OF MEXICAN TERRITORY.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, relative to the occupation of the Mexican territory.

DECEMBER 22, 1846.
Read, and laid upon the table.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, I communicate herewith reports from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, with the documents which accompany them.

These documents contain all the "orders or instructions" to any military, naval, or other officer of the government, "in relation to the establishment or organization of civil government in any portion of the territory of Mexico which has or might be taken possession of by the army or navy of the United States."

These orders and instructions were given to regulate the exercise of the rights of a belligerent, engaged in actual war, over such portions of the territory of our enemy as, by military conquest, might be "taken possession of" and be occupied by our armed forces—rights necessarily resulting from a state of war and clearly recognised by the laws of nations. This was all the authority which could be delegated to our military and naval commanders, and its exercise was indispensable to the secure occupation and possession of territory of the enemy which might be conquered. The regulations authorized were temporary, and dependent on the rights acquired by conquest. They were authorized as belligerent rights, and were to be carried into effect by military or naval officers. They were but the amelioration of martial law, which modern civilization requires, and were due as well to the security of the conquest, as to the inhabitants of the conquered territory.

The documents communicated also contain the reports of several highly meritorious officers of our army and navy, who have conquered and taken possession of portions of the enemy's territory.

Among the documents accompanying the report of the Secretary of War, will be found a "form of government," "established and organized" by the military commander who conquered and occupied with his forces the territory of New Mexico. This document was received at the War Department in the latter part of the last month, and, as will be perceived by the report of the Secretary of War, was not, for the reasons stated by that officer, brought to my notice until after my annual message of the 8th instant was communicated to Congress.

It is declared on its face to be a "temporary government of the said territory;" but there are portions of it which purport to "establish and organize" a permanent territorial government of the United States over the territory, and to impart to its inhabitants political rights which, under the constitution of the United States, can be enjoyed permanently only by citizens of the United States. These have not been "approved and recognized" by me. Such organized regulations as have been established in any of the conquered territories for the security of our conquest, for the preservation of order, for the protection of the rights of the inhabitants, and for depriving the enemy of the advantages of these territories, while the military possession of them by the forces of the United States continue, will be recognised and approved.

It will be apparent from the reports of the officers who have been required by the success which has crowned their arms to exercise the powers of temporary government over the conquered territories, that if any excess of power has been exercised, the departure has been the offspring of a patriotic desire to give to the inhabitants the privileges and immunities so cherished by the people of our own country, and which they believed calculated to improve their condition and promote their prosperity. Any such excess has resulted in no practical injury, but can and will be early corrected, in a manner to alienate as little as possible the good feelings of the inhabitants of the conquered territory.

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, December 22, 1846.

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 21, 1846.

SIR: In compliance with your request to be furnished with all the information in the War Department in regard to the objects of inquiry embraced in the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, I have the honor to report that the accompanying papers, numbered from 1 to 24, contain all the orders and instructions which have issued from this department to any officer of the army "in relation to the establishment or organization of civil government in any portion of the territory of Mexico, which has been or might be taken possession of by the army or navy of the United States." They also furnish all the information in this department in relation to any form of government which any such officer has established or organized, and also in relation to any approval or recognition of such government.

As the information called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives is contained in various despatches which relate principally to military operations, I have preferred, in most instances, to give the whole document, though parts of it have little or no direct relation to the matters embraced in that resolution. What is omitted does not relate to any branch of the inquiry, but chiefly to the plans of the campaign, and contemplated military movements, which it would not be proper to make public.

You will perceive that I stated, in my letter of the 3d of June last, to General Kearny, that a proclamation in the Spanish language would be furnished to him for the purpose of being distributed among the Mexican people. A few copies of the proclamation prepared for General Taylor were sent to General Kearny; but, owing to the different circumstances under which the two generals might be placed, it was afterwards deemed proper to instruct General Kearny not to use them, and I am not aware that he did so in any instance. My letter to him on this subject, dated the 6th of June, is one of the papers herewith transmitted.

Among the accompanying documents you will find two proclamations issued by General Kearny, but neither the form nor substance of them was furnished from this department.

In relation to the annexed paper, No. 24, called the "Organic Law of the Territory of New Mexico," it is proper that I should state that it was received at the Adjutant General's office on the 23d of November, and thence sent to me. As the document was voluminous, and my whole time was required for the indispensable current business of the department, then unusually pressing, and for preparing my annual report to accompany your message to Congress, I did not, at that time, nor until a few days since, examine it; and it was not laid before you to receive your directions in regard to it.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY.

No. 1.

Letter of the Secretary of War to General Kearny.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

War Department,
Washington, June 3, 1846.

Sir: I herewith send you a copy of my letter to the governor of Missouri for an additional force of one thousand mounted men.

The object of thus adding to the force under your command is not, as you will perceive, fully set forth in that letter, for the reason that it is deemed prudent that it should not, at this time, become a matter of public notoriety; but to you it is proper and necessary that it should be stated.

It has been decided by the President to be of the greatest importance in the pending war with Mexico to take the earliest possession of Upper California. An expedition with that view is hereby ordered, and you are designated to command it. To enable you to be in sufficient force to conduct it successfully this additional force of a thousand mounted men has been provided, to follow you in the direction of Santa Fé, to be under your orders, or the officer you may leave in command at Santa Fé.

It cannot be determined how far this additional force will be behind that designed for the Santa Fé expedition, but it will not probably be more than a few weeks. When you arrive at Santa Fé with the force already called, and shall have taken possession of it, you may find yourself in a condition to garrison it with a small part of your command, (as the additional force will soon be at that place,) and with the remainder press forward to California. In that case you will make such arrangements, as to being followed by the reinforcements before mentioned, as in your judgment may be deemed safe and prudent. I need not say to you that, in case you conquer Santa Fé, (and with it will be included the department or State of New Mexico,) it will be important to provide for retaining safe possession of it. Should you deem it prudent to have still more troops for the accomplishment of the objects herein designated, you will lose no time in communicating your opinion on that point, and all others connected with the enterprise, to this department. Indeed, you are hereby authorized to make a direct requisition for it upon the governor of Missouri.

It is known that a large body of Mormon emigrants are en route to California, for the purpose of settling in that country. You are desired to use all proper means to have a good understanding with them, to the end that the United States may have their co-operation in taking possession of, and holding, that country. It has been suggested here that many of these Mormons would willingly enter into the service of the United States, and aid us in our expedition against California. You are hereby authorized to muster into service such as can be induced to volunteer; not, however, to a number exceeding one-third of your entire force. Should they enter the service they will be paid as other volunteers, and you can allow them to designate, so far as it can be properly done, the persons to act as officers thereof. It is understood that a considerable number of American citizens are now settled on the Sacramento river, near Suter's establishment, called "Nueva Helvetia," who are well disposed towards the United States. Should you, on your arrival in the country, find this to be the true state of things there, you are authorized to organize and receive into the service of the United States such portion of these citizens as you may think useful to aid you to hold the possession of the country. You will, in that case, allow them, so far as you shall judge proper, to select their own officers. A large discretionary power is invested in you in regard to these matters, as well as to all others in relation to the expeditions confided to your command.

The choice of routes by which you will enter California will be left to your better knowledge and ampler means of getting accurate information. We are assured that a southern route (called the Caravan route, by which the wild horses are brought from that country into New Mexico) is practicable; and it is suggested as not improbable that it can be passed over in the winter months, or at least late in autumn. It is hoped that this information may prove to be correct.

In regard to the routes, the practicability of procuring needful supplies for men and animals, and transporting baggage, is a point to be well considered. Should the President be disappointed in his cherished hope, that you will be able to reach the interior of Upper California before winter, you are then desired to make the best arrangement you can for sustaining your forces during the winter, and for an early movement in the spring. Though it is very desirable that the expedition should reach California this season, (and the President does not doubt you will make every possible effort to accomplish this object,) yet, if in your judgment it cannot be undertaken with a reasonable prospect of success, you will defer it, as above suggested, until spring. You are left unembarrassed by any specific directions in this matter.

It is expected that the naval forces of the United States, which are now, or will soon be in the Pacific, will be in possession of all the towns on the sea coast, and will co-operate with you in the conquest of California. Arms, ordnance, munitions of war, and provisions, to be used in that country, will be sent by sea to our squadron in the Pacific for the use of the land forces.

Should you conquer and take possession of New Mexico and Upper California, or considerable places in either, you will establish temporary civil governments therein—abolishing all arbitrary restrictions that may exist, so far as it may be done with safety. In performing this duty it would be wise and prudent to continue in their employment all such of the existing officers as are known to be friendly to the United States, and will take the oath of allegiance to them. The duties at the custom-houses ought, at once, to be reduced to such a rate as may be barely sufficient to maintain the necessary officers, without yielding any revenue to the government. You may assure the people of those provinces that it is the wish and design of the United States to provide for them a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to that which exists in our Territories. They will then be called on to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own representatives to the territorial legislature. It is foreseen that what relates to the civil government will be a difficult and unpleasant part of your duty, and much must necessarily be left to your own discretion.

In your whole conduct you will act in such a manner as best to conciliate the inhabitants, and render them friendly to the United States.

It is desirable that the usual trade between the citizens of the United States and the Mexican provinces should be continued, as far as practicable, under the changed condition of things between the two countries. In consequence of extending your expedition into California, it may be proper that you should increase your supply for goods to be distributed as presents to the Indians. The United States superintendent of Indian affairs at St. Louis will aid you in procuring these goods. You will be furnished with a proclamation* in the Spanish language, to be issued by you, and circulated among the Mexican people on your entering into or approaching their country. You will use your utmost endeavors to have the pledges and promises therein contained carried out to the utmost extent.

I am directed by the President to say that the rank of brevet brigadier general will be conferred on you as soon as you commence your movement towards California, and sent round to you by sea, or over the country, or to the care of the commandant of our squadron in the Pacific. In that way cannon, arms, ammunition, and supplies for the land forces will be sent to you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Colonel S. W. Kearny,
Fort Leavenworth, Missouri.

No. 2.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of War to General Taylor.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

War Department,
Washington, July 9, 1846.

Sir: The proclamation which you were directed to spread among the Mexican people, will have put you in possession of the views of the government in relation to the mode of carrying on the war, and also in relation to the manner of treating the inhabitants. The war is only carried on to obtain justice, and the sooner that can be obtained, and with the least expenditure of blood and money, the better. One of the evils of war is the interruption of diplomatic communications between the respective authorities, and the consequent ignorance under which each party may lie in relation to the views of the other. The natural substitute of these interrupted diplomatic communications, is the military intercourse which the usages of war allow between contending armies in the field, and in which commanding generals can do much towards re-opening negotiations, and smoothing the way to a return of peace.

* Note.—No proclamation for circulation was ever furnished to General Kearny. A few copies of that prepared for and sent to General Taylor, were forwarded to General Kearny, but he was requested not to use them. These copies were the only proclamations sent by the War Department to him, and I am not aware that he ever used any of them. See letter of the Secretary of War to General Kearny of the 6th of June, 1846, a copy of which is with the papers sent to the President, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th of December, 1846.

W. L. MARCY.

The President has seen, with much satisfaction, the civility and kindness with which you have treated your prisoners, and all the inhabitants with whom you have come in contact. He wishes that course of conduct continued, and all opportunities taken to conciliate the inhabitants, and to let them see that peace is within their reach the moment their rulers will consent to do us justice. The inhabitants should be encouraged to remain in their towns and villages, and these sentiments be carefully made known to them. The same things may be said to officers made prisoners, or who may visit your head-quarters according to the usages of war; and it is the wish of the President that such visits be encouraged; and, also, that you take occasions to send officers to the head-quarters of the enemy for the military purposes, real or ostensible, which are of ordinary occurrence between armies, and in which opportunity may be taken to speak of the war itself as only carried on to obtain justice, and that we had much rather procure that by negotiation than by fighting. Of course authority to speak of your government will be disavowed, but a knowledge of its wishes will be averred, and a readiness will be expressed to communicate to your government the wishes of the Mexican government to negotiate for honorable peace, whenever such shall be their wish, and with the assurance that such overtures will be met in a corresponding spirit by your government. A discreet officer, who understands Spanish, and who can be employed in the intercourse so usual between armies, can be your confidential agent on such occasions, and can mask his real under his ostensible object of a military interview.

You will also readily comprehend that in a country so divided into races, classes, and parties, as Mexico is, and with so many local divisions among departments, and personal divisions among individuals, there must be great room for operating on the minds and feelings of large portions of the inhabitants, and inducing them to wish success to an invasion which has no desire to injure their country; and which, in overthrowing their oppressors, may benefit themselves. Between the Spaniards, who monopolize the wealth and power of the country, and the mixed Indian race, who bear its burdens, there must be jealousy and animosity. The same feelings must exist between the lower and higher orders of the clergy; the latter of whom have the dignities and the revenues, while the former have poverty and labor. In fact, the curates were the chief authors of the revolution which separated Mexico from Spain, and their relative condition to their superiors is not much benefited by it. Between the political parties into which the country is divided, there must be some more liberal and more friendly to us than others; the same may be said of rival chiefs, political and military; and even among the departments there are local antipathies and dissensions. In all this field of division—in all these elements of social, political, personal, and local discord—there must be openings to reach the interests, passions, or principles of some of the parties, and thereby to conciliate their good will, and make them co-operate with us in bringing about an honorable and a speedy peace. The management of these delicate movements is confided to your discretion; but they are not to paralyze the military arm, or in any degree to arrest or retard your military movements. These must proceed vigorously. Policy and force are to be combined; and the fruits of the former will be prized as highly as those of the latter.

It is seen from the Mexican papers, that great attempts are made to prejudice and exasperate the minds of the people against us. The war is represented on their part as one of "national existence;" as if it was our wish to destroy the Mexican nation! It is represented as a war of "rapine and plunder;" as if we intended to rob and oppress the people? It is represented as a war of "impiety;" as if we were going to rob churches and pull down altars! The conduct of yourself, your officers, and men, has shown to all Mexican citizens that you have met, and as far as you have gone, the injustice and absurdity of all these imputations; but they are still systematically propagated through the country, and must find believers in a country where ignorance is so great, and the means of disseminating truth so small. The counteraction of these injurious imputations will be your particular duty; first, by a continuation of your just and honorable conduct towards the people, their property and religion, and kindness to prisoners; and next, by making it a point in your interviews with the commanders of the army of the enemy to speak of these unjust imputations, for the purpose of correcting them. It is the President's wish not only to bring the war to a speedy conclusion, but so to conduct it as to leave no lasting animosities behind to prejudice the future friendship and commerce of the two countries; nor to permit injurious reports to go forth to excite the ill will of the other republics, of Spanish origin, against us.

Availing yourself of divisions which you may find existing among the Mexican people—to which allusion has been made—it will be your policy to encourage the separate departments or States, and especially those which you may invade and occupy, to declare their independence of the central government of Mexico, and either to become our allies, or to assume, as it is understood Yucatan has done, a neutral attitude in the existing war between the United States and Mexico. In such of the departments or states as may take this course, you will give the inhabitants assurances of the protection of your army until the return of peace, so far as may be consistent with your military plans of operation. When peace is made, they may decide for themselves their own form of government. In such departments as may be conquered, or assume a neutral attitude, you may, at your discretion, observe the same course of conduct as that presented in the instructions given to General Kearny by the department on the 3d day of June, 1846. A copy of the instructions to General Kearny is herewith transmitted to you.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY.

No. 3.

Letter of the Secretary of War to General Taylor.

War Department,
Washington, July 6, 1848.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose you a circular of the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the commerce and trade with Matamoras, and such other places in Mexico as may be in the actual occupancy or under the control of the American forces. I believe the circular contains all the instruction you may need for the guidance of your conduct. Should there be other points not embraced in it, they will receive prompt attention when brought to the notice of this department.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Maj. Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding, &c., &c.

No. 4.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

Treasury Department, June 30, 1846.

The circular of this department, of the 11th instant, contained the following paragraph:

"By the law of nations, as recognized by repeated decisions of our judicial tribunals, the existence of a state of war interdicts all trade or commerce between the citizens of the two nations engaged in the war. It consequently follows, that neither vessel nor merchandise of any description can be allowed to proceed from ports or places in the United States to ports or places in the territories of Mexico, with the exception of such ports or places in the latter country as may be at the time in the actual possession of the United States forces."

Matamoras is now in the actual possession of the forces of the United States, and perhaps other ports and places on the same side of the Rio Grande.

In case of the application of vessels for clearances for the port of Matamoras, you will issue them under the following circumstances:

1st. To American vessels only.

2d. To such vessels carrying only articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of imports from foreign countries to our own upon which the duties have been fully paid; and upon all such goods, whether of our own or of foreign countries, no duties will be chargeable at the port of Matamoras, so long as it is in the possession of the forces of the United States.

In issuing this order, it is not intended to interfere with the authority of General Taylor to exclude such articles, including spiritous liquors or contraband of war, the introduction of which he may consider injurious to our military operations in Mexico.

Foreign imports which may be re-exported in our vessels to Matamoras will not be entitled to any drawback of duty; for, if this were permitted, they would be carried from that port into the United States, and thus evade the payment of all duties.

Whenever any other port or place upon the Mexican side of the Rio Grande shall have passed into the actual possession of the forces of the United States, such ports and places will be subject to all the above instructions which are applicable to the port of Matamoras.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 5.

Letter of the Secretary of War to Colonel Stevenson.

War Department, September 11, 1846.

Sir: The transports having on board the regiment under your command are destined to the Pacific, and will repair to our naval squadron now on the coast of California. Instructions, with a copy of which you are herewith furnished, have been given to the naval commander on the station in regard to his operations, and you are directed to co-operate with him in carrying out his plans, so far as the land forces may be needed for that purpose. Without undertaking to give specific instructions as to the movements of our forces in that quarter—for much must be left to the judgment of the commanding officers—it is proper to state that the military occupation of California is the main object in view. There are three points deemed to be worthy of particular attention. These are San Francisco, Monterey, and San Diego. It is important to have possession of the bay of San Francisco, and the country in that vicinity. The necessity of having something like a permanent and secure position on the coast of California, and probably at this place, will not be overlooked. Assuming that such a position will be found and selected in the bay of San Francisco, it is expected that a fortification, such as the means at your command may enable you to construct, will be erected, and that the heavy guns heretofore sent out, and those taken by the transports, to the extent needed, will be used for its armament. This work should be designed for a two-fold object—the protection of the vessels in the bay, and the security of the land forces. The selection of the site will be an important matter. It should be preceded by a careful examination of the place with reference to both objects, and the location made under the advice and direction of the commanding naval officer. It may, however, be that your first debarkation will not be at this point. The circumstances which may be found to exist on your arrival in that region must control in this matter.

It is probable that Monterey will have been taken by our naval force before the land troops reach that coast, and they may be needed to hold possession of it. This place is also secured by fortifications or temporary works from an attack either by sea or land. Judging from the information we have here of what will be the state of things on your arrival on the coast of California, it is concluded that these will be found to be the important points, and the possession of them essential to the objects in view in prosecuting the war in that quarter; but the particular mention of them is by no means intended as instructions to confine our military operations to them. As to the third place suggested, San Diego, less is known of it than the other two. Should the naval commander determine to take and hold possession of it, and need the land force, or a part of it, for that purpose, you will, of course, yield to his views in that respect. Whatever is done upon the coast of California, or of any other part of Mexico, will require, it is presumed, the co-operation of the land and naval forces, and it is not doubted that this co-operation will be cordially rendered.

The point, or points, of debarkation of the regiment under your command should be settled as speedily as practicable after your arrival upon the Mexican coast, and the transports discharged. The land forces will thereafter be attended with the vessels of the squadron. The ordnance, ammunition, arms, and all descriptions of public property which are not required on shore, or cannot be safely deposited there, will be transferred to the public ships. Upon them the land forces must rely for bringing supplies where water transportation is necessary. If the exigency of the service requires these forces to remove from one place to another on the coast, the public vessels will furnish the means of doing so.

The regiment under your command, as well as the company of Captain Tompkins, which has preceded it, is a part of General Kearny's command; but it may be that he will not be in a situation to reach you, by his orders, immediately on your debarkation. Until that is the case, yours will be an independent command, except when engaged in joint operations with the naval force.

It is not expected that you will be able to advance far into the country; nor is it advisable for you to undertake any hazardous enterprises. Until you shall fall under the command of General Kearny, your force will be mostly, if not wholly, employed in seizing and holding important possessions on the sea coast.

The government here have received information which is deemed to be reliable, though not official, that our squadron in the Pacific had taken possession of Monterey as early as the 6th of July last.

There is reason to believe that California is not favorably disposed to the central government of Mexico, and will not be disposed to make a vigorous resistance to our operations in that quarter. Should you find such to be the state of things there, it will be of the greatest importance that the good will of the people towards the United States should be cultivated. This is to be done by liberal and kind treatment. They should be made to feel that we come as deliverers. Their rights of person, property, and religion, must be respected and sustained. The greatest care must be taken to restrain the troops from all acts of license or outrage; the supplies drawn from the country must be paid for at fair prices; and, as far as practicable, friendly relations should be established. In the event of hostile resistance, your operations must be governed by circumstances; and you must use the means at your command to accomplish the objects in view—the military occupation of the country. It is not, however, expected that much can be done, if preparations have been made to resist, until the force under General Kearny shall have entered the country.

You are directed to embrace every opportunity to communicate with this department; and to furnish it with not only a full account of your movements and operations previous to your coming under the direct command of General Kearny, but with such other information as may be useful for the department to possess in regard to conducting the war in that quarter.

Your attention is particularly directed to that portion of the instructions to the commanding officer of the squadron in the Pacific, herewith, which has reference to the joint operation of the land and naval force, and you will conform your conduct thereto.

You are also furnished with an extract from instructions to General Kearny, giving directions for the course of conduct to be pursued while in the military occupation of any portion of the enemy's country; together with a copy of a letter to General Taylor, enclosing one from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to commercial intercourse with such parts of the enemy's ports, &c., as may be in possession of our forces. These are to be regarded as instructions to you, should you find yourself placed in the circumstances therein contemplated. You will take the earliest opportunity to make the commanding officer of the squadron in the Pacific fully acquainted with your instructions, and the accompanying papers. Where a place is taken by the joint action of the naval and land force, the naval officer in command, if superior in rank to yourself, will be entitled to make arrangements for the civil government of it while it is held by the co-operation of both branches of the military force. All your powers, in this respect, will of course be devolved on General Kearny, whenever he shall arrive in California and assume the command of the volunteer regiment. As soon as practicable, you will furnish him with a copy of this communication, and the other papers herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Letter of the Secretary of War to General Kearny.

War Department,
Washington, September 12, 1846.

Sir: A volunteer regiment raised in the State of New York, engaged to serve during the war with Mexico, and to be discharged wherever they may be at its termination, if in a territory of the United States, has been mustered into service, and is about to embark at the port of New York for California. This force is to be a part of your command; but, as it may reach the place of its destination before you are in a condition to subject it to your orders, the colonel of the regiment, J. D. Stevenson, has been furnished with instructions for his conduct in the mean time. I herewith send you a copy thereof, as well as a copy of the instructions of the Navy Department to the commander of the naval squadron in the Pacific; a copy of a letter to General Taylor, with a circular from the Treasury Department; a copy of a letter from General Scott to Captain Tompkins; and a copy of general regulations relative to the respective rank of naval and army officers. These, so far as applicable, will be looked upon in the light of instructions to yourself. The department is exceedingly desirous to be furnished by you with full information of your progress and proceedings, together with your opinion and views as to your movements into California, having reference as to time, route, &c. Beyond the regiment under the command of Colonel S. Price, and the separate battalion called for at the same time by the President from the governor of Missouri, a requisition for one regiment of infantry was issued on the 18th of July last; but the information subsequently received here induced the belief that it would not be needed; and the difficulty of passing it over the route at so late a period in the season, with the requisite quantity of supplies, &c., was deemed so great, that the orders to muster it into service have been countermanded. It will not be sent. Your views as to the sufficiency of your force, and the practicability of sustaining a larger one, &c., are desired.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Letter of the Adjutant General to the Secretary of War.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, December 17, 1846.

Sir: In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, calling for copies of all orders and instructions given to Generals Taylor, Wool, Kearny, or any other officer, relative to the establishment or organization of civil government in Mexico by United States officers; also, what forms of government such officers, or either of them, may have established, &c., I have the honor to submit the enclosed copy of the letter of instructions of Major General Scott to Brigadier General Kearny, dated November 3, 1846, being the only communication from this office, or that of the commanding general of the army, having any reference to the subject of the House resolution.

In respect to the second head of the inquiry, I have to state that, on the 23*d of November*, a communication was received from Brigadier General Kearny, dated at "Santa Fé, New Mexico," September 22, 1846, sending a copy of the laws established by his authority for the government of that territory, and also a list of the persons he had appointed to office. This communication was immediately laid before the Secretary of War, and has not since been returned to this office. No other communication touching the subject of civil government in Mexico has been received at the adjutant general's office.

Respectfully submitted:

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Hon. W. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War.

No. 8.

Letter from Major General Scott to General Kearny.

Head-quarters of the Army,
Washington, November 3, 1846.

Sir: We have received from you many official reports, the latest dated September the 16th. A special acknowledgment of them, by dates, will go, herewith, from the adjutant general's office.

Your march upon and conquest of New Mexico, together with the military dispositions made for holding that province, have won for you, I am authorised to say, the emphatic approbation of the Executive, by whom, it is not doubted, your movement upon and occupation of Upper California will be executed with like energy, judgment, and success.

You will, at Monterey, or the bay of San Francisco, find an engineer officer (Lieutenant Halleck) and a company of the United States artillery, under Captain Tompkins. It is probable that an officer of engineers, or of topographical engineers, has accompanied you from Santa Fé. Those officers, and the company of artillery, aided by other troops under your command, ought promptly to be employed in erecting and garrisoning durable defences for holding the bays of Monterey and San Francisco, together with such other important points in the same province as you may deem it necessary to occupy. Intrenching tools, ordnance, and ordnance stores, went out in the ship Lexington, with Captain Tompkins. Further ordnance supplies may be soon expected.

It is perceived, by despatches received at the Navy Department from the commander of the United States squadron on the coast of the Pacific, that certain volunteers were taken into service by him from the settlers about the bays of Monterey and San Francisco, to aid him in seizing and holding that country. With a view to regular payment, it is desirable that those volunteers, if not originally mustered, should be caused by you to be regularly mustered into service (retrospectively) under the volunteer act of May 13, 1846, amended by an act of the following month. This may be done with the distinct understanding that, if not earlier discharged, as no longer needed, you will discharge them at any time they may signify a wish to that effect.

You will probably find certain port charges and regulations established for the harbors of the province by the commanders of the United States squadron upon its coast. The institution and alteration of such regulations appertain to the naval commander, who is instructed by the proper department to confer on the subject with the commander of the land forces. As established, you will, in your sphere, cause those regulations to be duly respected and enforced. On the other hand, the appointment of temporary collectors at the several ports appertains to the civil governor of the province, who will be, for the time, the senior officer of the land forces in the country. Collectors, however, who have been already appointed by the naval commander, will not be unnecessarily changed.

As a guide to the civil governor of Upper California, in our hands, see the letter of June the 3d (last) addressed to you by the Secretary of War. You will not, however, formally declare the province to be annexed. Permanent incorporation of the territory must depend on the government of the United States.

After occupying with our forces all necessary points in Upper California, and establishing a temporary civil government therein, as well as assuring yourself of its internal tranquility and the absence of any danger of reconquest on the part of Mexico, you may charge Colonel Mason, United States 1st dragoons, the bearer of this open letter, or land officer next in rank to your own, with your several duties, and return yourself, with a sufficient escort of troops, to St. Louis, Missouri; but the body of the United States dragoons that accompanied you to California will remain there until further orders.

It is not known what portion of the Missouri volunteers, if any, marched with you from Santa Fé to the Pacific. If any, it is necessary to provide for their return to their homes and honorable discharge; and, on the same supposition, they may serve you as a sufficient escort to Missouri.

It is known that Lieutenant Colonel Frémont, of the United States rifle regiment, was, in July last, with a party of men in the service of the United States topographical engineers, in the neighborhood of San Francisco or Monterey bay, engaged in joint operations against Mexico with the United States squadron on that coast. Should you find him there, it is desired that you do not detain him, against his wishes, a moment longer than the necessities of the service may require.

I need scarcely enjoin deference, and the utmost cordiality, on the part of our land forces towards those of our navy in the joint service on the distant coast of California. Reciprocity may be cordially expected; and towards that end, frequent conferences between commanders of the two arms are recommended. Harmony in co-operation, and success cannot but follow.

Measures have been taken to supply the disbursing officers, who have preceded and who may accompany you, with all necessary funds. Of those measures you will be informed by Colonel Mason.

I remain, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

[Translation of a proclamation, in Spanish, furnished to General Taylor.]

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GENERAL COMMANDING THE ARMY OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA.

To the people of Mexico:

After many years of patient endurance, the United States are at length constrained to acknowledge that a war now exists between our government and the government of Mexico. For many years our citizens have been subjected to repeated insults and injuries, our vessels and cargoes have been seized and confiscated, our merchants have been plundered, maimed, imprisoned, without cause and without reparation. At length your government acknowledged the justice of our claims, and agreed by treaty to make satisfaction, by payment of several millions of dollars; but this treaty has been violated by your rulers, and the stipulated payments have been withheld. Our late effort to terminate all difficulties by peaceful negotiation has been rejected by the dictator Paredes, and our minister of peace, whom your rulers had agreed to receive, has been refused a hearing. He has been treated with indignity and insult, and Paredes has announced that war exists between us. This war, thus first proclaimed by him, has been acknowledged as an existing fact by our President and Congress, with perfect unanimity, and will be prosecuted with vigor and energy against your army and rulers; but those of the Mexican people who remain neutral will not be molested.

Your government is in the hands of tyrants and usurpers. They have abolished your State governments, they have overthrown your federal constitution, they have deprived you of the right of suffrage, destroyed the liberty of the press, despoiled you of your arms, and reduced you to a state of absolute dependence upon the power of a military dictator. Your army and rulers extort from the people, by grievous taxation, by forced loans, and military seizures, the very money which sustains the usurpers in power. Being disarmed, you are left defenceless, an easy prey to the savage Cumanches, who not only destroy your lives and property, but drive into a captivity, more horrible than death itself, your wives and children. It is your military rulers who have reduced you to this deplorable condition. It is these tyrants, and their corrupt and cruel satellites, gorged with the people's treasure, by whom you are thus oppressed and impoverished, some of whom have boldly advocated a monarchical government, and would place a European prince on the throne of Mexico. We come to obtain reparation for repeated wrongs and injuries, we come to obtain indemnity for the past and security for the future, we come to overthrow the tyrants who have destroyed your liberties; but we come to make no war upon the people of Mexico, nor upon any form of free government they may choose to select for themselves.

It is our wish to see you liberated from despots, to drive back the savage Cumanches, to prevent the renewal of their assaults, and to compel them to restore to you from captivity your long lost wives and children. Your religion, your altars and churches, the property of your churches and citizens, the emblems of your faith and its ministers, shall be protected and remain inviolate. Hundreds of our army, and hundreds of thousands of our people, are members of the Catholic church. In every State, and in nearly every city and village of our Union, Catholic churches exist, and the priests perform their holy functions in peace and security, under the sacred guarantee of our constitution. We come among the people of Mexico as friends and republican brethren, and all who receive us as such shall be protected, whilst all who are seduced into the army of your dictator shall be treated as enemies. We shall want from you nothing but food for our army, and for this you shall always be paid, in cash, the full value. It is the settled policy of your tyrants to deceive you in regard to the policy and character of our government and people. These tyrants fear the example of our free institutions, and constantly endeavor to misrepresent our purposes, and inspire you with hatred for your republican brethren of the American Union. Give us but the opportunity to undeceive you, and you will soon learn that all the representations of Paredes were false, and were only made to induce you to consent to the establishment of a despotic government.

In your struggle for liberty with the Spanish monarchy, thousands of our countrymen risked their lives and shed their blood in your defence. Our own commodore, the gallant Porter, maintained in triumph your flag upon the ocean, and our government was the first to acknowledge your independence. With pride and pleasure we enrolled your name on the list of independent republics, and sincerely desired that you might in peace and prosperity enjoy all the blessings of free government. Success on the part of your tyrants against the army of the Union is impossible; but if they could succeed, it would only be to enable them to fill your towns with their soldiers, eating out your substance, and harassing you with still more grievous taxation. Already they have abolished the liberty of the press, as the first step towards the introduction of that monarchy which it is their real purpose to proclaim and establish.

Mexicans, we must treat as enemies and overthrow the tyrants who, whilst they have wronged and insulted us, have deprived you of your liberty; but the Mexican people who remain neutral during the contest shall be protected against their military despots, by the republican army of the Union.

Sir: I enclosed to you a few copies of a proclamation prepared for General Taylor, to issue to the Mexicans. I discover that there are parts of it that will not answer our purpose for Santa Fé or Upper California. You will not, therefore, use these copies. It is intended to make the needful alterations in it, and, thus altered, send on copies* to you before you will have occasion to distribute them. I must, however, urge you not to use those which have been forwarded.

PROCLAMATION OF GENERAL KEARNY, OF 31st JULY.

Proclamation to the citizens of New Mexico, by Colonel Kearny, commanding the United States forces.

The undersigned enters New Mexico with a large military force, for the purpose of seeking union with and ameliorating the condition of its inhabitants. This he does under instructions from his government, and with the assurance that he will be amply sustained in the accomplishment of this object. It is enjoined on the citizens of New Mexico to remain quietly at their homes, and to pursue their peaceful avocations. So long as they continue in such pursuits, they will not be interfered with by the American army, but will be respected and protected in their rights, both civil and religious.

All who take up arms or encourage resistance against the government of the United States will be regarded as enemies, and will be treated accordingly.

Colonel First Dragoons.

Letter of General Kearny to the Adjutant General.

Head-quarters, Army of the West,
Santa Fé, New Mexico, August 24, 1846.

Sir: I have to report that on the 18th instant, the army under my command marched into this city, the capital of New Mexico, having met with no armed resistance; the Mexican troops, numbering about 4,000, which had been collected on the road by Governor Armijo to oppose us, having dispersed on our approaching them, and the governor himself having fled, with a troop of his dragoons, towards Chihuahua. On the 22d I issued a proclamation, claiming the whole of New Mexico, with its then boundaries, as a territory of the United States of America, and taking it under our protection. I send, herewith, copies of all official papers on the subject. The people of the territory are now perfectly tranquil, and can easily be kept so. The intelligent portion know the advantages they are to derive from the change of government, and express their satisfaction at it.

In a few days I shall march down the Del Norte and visit some of the principal cities below, for the purpose of seeing the people and explaining to them personally our intentions relating to the territory. On my return (which will be in two or three weeks) a civil government shall be organized, and the officers appointed for it; after which, I will be ready to start for Upper California, which I hope may be by the latter end of next month, and in such case, I shall expect to have possession of that department by the close of November.

I have not heard from or of Colonel Price and his command, which he was to raise and bring here, and have received but vague rumors of Captain Allen and the Mormons. I suppose, however, they will all be here in a few weeks. Captain Allen's command will accompany me to the Pacific, and the number of efficient men he brings will determine the additional number I must take from here. After deciding upon that, and upon the number which will be necessary to hold this territory, I shall send the surplus to Chihuahua, to report to Brigadier General Wool. I enclose a copy of my communication to him of the 22d instant.

On the 15th instant I received yours of 2d and 3d July, the former enclosing a copy of a letter to Captain Tompkins, 3d artillery, from the general-in-chief—the latter enclosing for me a commission of Brigadier General, which I hereby accept of, and for which I offer to the President and Senate my acknowledgment and thanks for the honor they have conferred on me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. KEARNY,
Brigadier General.

No. 14.

PROCLAMATION OF GENERAL KEARNY, OF 22d AUGUST.

Proclamation to the inhabitants of New Mexico by Brigadier General S. W. Kearny, commanding the troops of the United States in the same.

As, by the act of the republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that government and the United States; and as the undersigned, at the head of his troops, on the 18th instant, took possession of Santa Fé, the capital of the department of New Mexico, he now announces his attention to hold the department, with its original boundaries, (on both sides of the Del Norte,) as a part of the United States, and under the name of "the territory of New Mexico."

The undersigned has come to New Mexico with a strong military force, and an equally strong one is following close in his rear. He has more troops than is necessary to put down any opposition that can possibly be brought against him, and therefore it would be but folly or madness for any dissatisfied or discontented persons to think of resisting him.

The undersigned has instructions from his government to respect the religious institutions of New Mexico—to protect the property of the church—to cause the worship of those belonging to it to be undisturbed, and their religious rights in the amplest manner preserved to them—also to protect the persons and property of all quiet and peaceable inhabitants within its boundaries against their enemies, the Eutaws, the Navajoes, and others; and when he assures all that it will be his pleasure, as well as his duty, to comply with those instructions, he calls upon them to exert themselves in preserving order, in promoting concord, and in maintaining the authority and efficacy of the laws. And he requires of those who have left their homes and taken up arms against the troops of the United States, to return forthwith to them, or else they will be considered as enemies and traitors, subjecting their persons to punishment and their property to seizure and confiscation for the benefit of the public treasury.

It is the wish and intention of the United States to provide for New Mexico a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to those in the United States; and the people of New Mexico will then be called on to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own representatives to the territorial legislature. But until this can be done, the laws hitherto in existence will be continued until changed or modified by competent authority; and those persons holding office will continue in the same for the present, provided they will consider themselves good citizens and are willing to take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

The United States hereby absolves all persons residing within the boundaries of New Mexico from any further allegiance to the republic of Mexico, and hereby claims them as citizens of the United States. Those who remain quiet and peaceable, will be considered good citizens and receive protection—those who are found in arms, or instigating others against the United States, will be considered as traitors, and treated accordingly.

Don Manuel Armijo, the late governor of this department, has fled from it: the undersigned has taken possession of it without firing a gun, or spilling a single drop of blood, in which he most truly rejoices, and for the present will be considered as governor of the territory.

Given at Santa Fé, the capital of the territory of New Mexico, this 22d day of August, 1846, and in the 71st year of the independence of the United States.

Brigadier General U. S. Army.

GENERAL: I have to inform you, that on the 18th instant, without firing a gun or spilling a drop of blood, I took possession of this city, the capital of the department of new Mexico; and that I have this day issued a proclamation claiming the whole department, with its original boundaries, for the United States, and under the title of "the territory of New Mexico."

Every thing here is quiet and peaceable. The people now understand the advantages they are to derive from a change of government, and are much gratified with it.

I have more troops (Missouri volunteers) following in my rear. On their arrival, there will be more than necessary for this territory. I will send the surplus to you. Should you not want them, you can order them to Major General Taylor, or to their homes, as you may think the good of the public service requires.

I am destined for Upper California, and hope to start from here in the course of a few weeks. Success attend you.

SIR: I avail myself of a private opportunity to Missouri to send to you copies of all papers, civil and military, which have passed from under my hands since the 24th ultimo, the date of my last communication to you.

The troops composing this command are, and have been since the day after our reaching here, necessarily divided—one half the officers and men (excepting of the infantry) are, with all the horses and mules, about 25 miles from here, where they went for grass; the other half are in and around this city, and a large number of them daily employed, under the engineers, in erecting fortications to insure the safety of it.

We leave here to-morrow, taking about 700 mounted men with us to visit the lower country, and to quiet the minds of the people, which are still a little excited by idle rumors and reports. I shall be absent about a fortnight; after which an express will be sent to Fort Leavenworth, with such information as I may obtain.

I am now endeavoring to raise from the inhabitants of the territory a company of infantry, (volunteers for one year.) I have appointed a Mexican captain, and an American first lieutenant of it. I think much good will result from it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Letter of General Kearny, to the Adjutant General.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF THE WEST,
Santa Fe, New Mexico, September 16, 1846.

SIR: Since my communication to you of the 1st instant, I have marched with 700 men about 100 miles down the Del Norte, to the village of Tomé. The inhabitants of the country were found to be highly satisfied and contented with the change of government, and apparently vied with each other to see who could show to us the greatest hospitality and kindness.

There can no longer be apprehended any organized resistance in this territory to our troops; and the commander of them, whoever he may be, will hereafter have nothing to attend to but to secure the inhabitants from further depredations from the Navajoe and Eutaw Indians; and, for this object, paragraph three of Orders No. 23, was this day issued, a copy of which is enclosed herewith.

As this territory is now so perfectly quiet, I have determined (knowing the wishes of the Executive) to leave here for Upper California as soon as possible, and have fixed upon the 25th as the day of departure. As I am ignorant when to expect Captain Allen and his command, I have determined upon taking with me Major Sumner and the efficient men (about 300) of the 1st dragoons. Orders will be left for Captain Allen to follow on our trail. From the most reliable information yet received as to the best route, we have determined upon marching about 200 miles down the Del Norte; then to the Gila; down that river near to its mouth; leaving which, we cross the Colorado; and then, keeping near the Pacific, up to Monterey. This route will carry us not far from and along the southern boundary of New Mexico and Upper California; and we hope to reach the Pacific by the end of November. No exertions will be wanting on the part of any one attached to this expedition in insuring to it full and entire success.

I have now respectfully to ask that, in the event of our getting possession of Upper California—of establishing a civil government there—securing peace, quiet, and order among the inhabitants, and precluding the possibility of the Mexicans again having control there, I may be permitted to leave there next summer with the 1st dragoons, and march them back to Fort Leavenworth, on the Missouri; and I would respectfully suggest that troops, to remain in California and Oregon, should be raised expressly for the purpose—say for three years—to be discharged at the expiration of that time; each man, from the colonel to the private, receiving a number of acres of land in proportion to his rank. Regiments could easily be raised on such terms; and when discharged, military colonies would thus be established by them.

Surgeon Decamp will be left in charge of the hospitals at this place, and to superintend the medical department in this territory. He is very desirous, as are the other officers of the army now here, to leave next summer. The doctor wishes to return to Jefferson barracks, St. Louis, or to the arsenal, and I recommend that he be gratified.

A large number of troops are daily employed, under the direction of Lieutenant Gilmer, of the engineers, in erecting a fort for the defence and protection of this city; and, as this is the capital of the territory—a new acquisition to the United States—the fort will be an important and a permanent one, and I have this day named it "Fort Marcy," and now ask for a confirmation of it.

I have not heard or received a line from Colonel Price, at any time, and know not if he, or any part of his regiment, has even left Fort Leavenworth.

I will write to you again before leaving here, and will then inform you of the arrangements made relating to the civil government for this territory, which has been and continues a delicate and difficult task.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. KEARNY.

Sir: I enclose herewith a copy of the laws prepared for the government of the territory of New Mexico, and a list of appointments to civil offices in the territory, both of which I have this day signed and published.

I take great pleasure in stating that I am entirely indebted for these laws to Colonel A. W. Doniphan, of the 1st regiment of Missouri mounted volunteers, who received much assistance from private Willard P. Hall, of his regiment.

These laws are taken, part from the laws of Mexico—retained as in the original—a part with such modifications as our laws and constitution made necessary; a part are from the laws of the Missouri territory; a part from the laws of Texas, and also of Texas and Coahuila; a part from the statues of Missouri; and the remainder from the Livingston code.

The organic law is taken from the organic law of Missouri territory. (See act of Congress, June 4, 1842.)

Each house shall judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. Each house shall make its own rules of proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and two-thirds of all the members elected may expel a member; but no member shall be expelled twice for the same offence. Each house shall keep, and publish from time to time, a journal of its proceedings; all votes in the house shall be "viva voce," and, on the final passage of all bills, shall be entered on the journals.

Sec. 14. Any bill may originate in either house, and may be altered, amended, or rejected by the other, and shall be read on three different days in each house; and, having passed both houses, shall be signed by their respective speakers, and presented to the governor for his approval. If he approve the same, he shall sign it; if he disapprove it, he shall return it to the house in which it originated, within six days, with his objections; if he fail to return it within six days, or, after it shall have been returned, it again pass both houses, it shall be a law without the governor's approval.

Sec. 15. Sec. 16. The sittings of each house shall be public, except when secrecy shall be required; and each house may punish any person, not a member, for disorderly or contemptuous behavior in their presence while in session, by a fine not exceeding three hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding forty-eight hours, for one offence.

Sec. 17. Each member of the general assembly shall receive three dollars a day for each day he may attend the house of which he is a member, and three dollars for every twenty-five miles he must travel in going from his residence to the place of meeting, and returning from thence; and the speaker of each house shall receive five dollars a day for every day he may attend the house of which he is a member, and the same mileage with other members. The other officers of the general assembly shall receive such compensation as the law may provide.

Sec. 18. The style of all laws shall be, "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the territory of New Mexico."

LAWS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

Administration.

Sec. 1. The laws heretofore in force concerning descents, distributions, wills, and testaments, as contained in the treatise on these subjects, written by Pedro Murillo de Larde, shall remain in force, so far as they are in conformity with the constitution and laws of the United States, and the statute laws in force for the time being.

Sec. 2. The prefects shall grant letters testamentary and of administration.

Sec. 3. Letters testamentary and of administration shall be granted in the county in which the mansion house or place of abode of the deceased is situated. If he had no mansion house or place of abode at the time of his death, and be possessed of lands, letters shall be granted in the county in which the lands, or a part thereof, lie. If the deceased had no mansion house or place of abode, and was not possessed of land, letters may be granted in the county in which he died, or the greater part of his estate may be. If he died out of the Territory, having no mansion house or place of abode, or lands, within this Territory, letters may be granted in any country in which any of the personal estate of the deceased may be.

Sec. 4. All orders, settlements, trials and proceedings, touching the administration of estates, shall be had or made in the county in which the letters testamentary or of administration were granted.

Sec. 5. Letters of administration shall be granted, first, to the husband or wife surviving; second, if there be no husband or wife surviving, to those who are entitled to the distribution of the estate, or one or more of them, as the prefect shall believe will best manage the estate.

Sec. 6. If no person apply for such letters within thirty days after the death of the deceased, any creditor shall be allowed to take out such letters; and in defect of these, the prefect may select as administrator such discreet person as he may choose.

Sec. 7. After probate of any will, letters testamentary shall be granted to the person or persons therein appointed executor or executors. If a part of the persons thus appointed refuse to act, or be disqualified, the letters shall be granted to the other persons therein appointed. If all such persons refuse to act, or be disqualified, letters of administration shall be granted to the person to whom administration would have been granted if there had been no will. Where there are two or more persons named executors in a will, none shall have power to act as such except those who give bond.

Sec. 8. If the validity of a will be contested, or the executor be a minor, or absent from the Territory, letters of administration shall be granted during the time such contest, minority or absence, to some other person, who shall take charge of the property, and administer the same according to law, under the direction of the prefect, and account for and pay and deliver all the money and property of the estate to the executor or regular administrator, when qualified to act.

Sec. 9. Every applicant for letters of administration, at the time of the application, shall make an affidavit, stating, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the names and places of residence of the heirs of the deceased; that the deceased died without a will, and that he will make a perfect inventory, and faithfully administer all the estate of the deceased, and account for and pay all assets which shall come to his possession or knowledge.

Sec. 10. A similar affidavit, with variations, as the case may require, shall be made by administrators of the goods remaining unadministered, and by administrators during the time of a contest about a will, or the minority or absence of the executor.

Sec. 11. Every administrator, with the will annexed, and executor, at the time letters are granted to him, shall make an affidavit that he will make a perfect inventory of the estate, and faithfully execute the last will of the testator, and render just accounts, and faithfully perform all things required by law touching such executorship or administration. The prefect shall take a bond of the person to whom letters testamentary or of administration are granted, with two or more sufficient securities, resident in the county, to the Territory of New Mexico, in such sum as the prefect shall deem sufficient; not less than double the estimated value of the estate, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as executor or administrator, and no person shall act as executor or administrator until he shall have given such bond. If any prefect shall refuse or neglect to take such bond at the time of granting such letters, he shall himself be liable for all the damages resulting from such neglect or refusal, at the suit of any person injured.

Sec. 12. All letters testamentary and of administration, and all bonds and affidavits of executors and administrators, shall be recorded by the clerk of the prefect, in a well bound book, kept for that purpose, before such letters are delivered to the executor or administrator; and the clerk shall certify on the letters that they have been recorded; and if any prefect shall deliver, without complying with the foregoing requisitions, any such letters, he shall forfeit to the party injured double the damages occasioned by such default.

Sec. 13. Every executor and administrator shall exhibit a statement of the accounts of his administration for settlement, with proper vouchers, to the court of the prefect, at the first term after the end of one year from the date of his letters, and at the corresponding term of such court every year thereafter, until the administration be completed; and upon every failure so to do, may be fined not more than one hundred dollars, for the use of the county, and shall forfeit to the party injured double the damages sustained by such default.

Attachments.

Sec. 1. Creditors, whose demands amount to fifty dollars or more, may sue their debtors in the circuit court by attachment, in the following cases:

First. When the debtor is not a resident of, nor resides in this Territory.

Second. When the debtor has concealed himself, or absconded, or absented himself from his usual place of abode in this Territory, so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him.

Third. When the debtor is about to remove his property or effects out of this Territory, or has fraudulently conveyed or assigned his property or effects, or has fraudulently concealed or disposed of his property or effects, so as to defraud, hinder or delay his creditors.

Fourth. When the debtor is about fraudulently to convey or assign, conceal or dispose of his property or effects, so as to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors.

Fifth. When the debt was contracted out of this Territory, and the debtor has absconded, or secretly removed his property or effects into this Territory, with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors.

Sec. 2. A creditor wishing to sue his debtor by attachment, may file in the clerk's office of the circuit court of any county in this Territory a petition or other lawful statement of his cause of action; and shall also file an affidavit and bond; and thereupon such creditor may sue out an original attachment against the lands, tenements, goods, moneys, effects and credits of the debtor, in whosesoever hands they may be.

Sec. 3. The affidavit shall be made by the plaintiff, or some person for him, and shall state that the defendant is justly indebted to the plaintiff, after allowing all just credits and offsets, in a sum to be specified in the affidavit, and on what account; and shall also state the affiant has good reason to believe, and does believe, the existence of one or more of the causes which, according to the provisions of the first section, will entitle the plaintiff to sue by attachment.

Sec 4. The bond shall be executed by the plaintiff, or some responsible person as principal, and two or more securities, residents of the county in which the action is to be brought, in a sum at least double the amount sworn to, payable to this Territory, conditioned that the plaintiff shall prosecute his action without delay, and with effect, and refund all sums of money that may be adjudged to be refunded, to the defendant, and pay all damages that may accrue to any defendant, or garnishee, by reason of the attachment, or any process or judgment thereon.

Sec 5. The clerk shall judge of the sufficiency of the penalty, and the security in the bond; if they be approved, he shall endorse his approval thereon, and the same, together with the affidavit and petition, or other lawful statement of the cause of action, shall be filed before an attachment shall be issued.

Sec. 6. The bond given by the plaintiff, or other person, in a suit by attachment, may be sued on by any party injured, in the name of the Territory; and he shall proceed as in ordinary suits, and shall recover such damages as he may have sustained.

Sec. 7. Original writs of attachment shall be directed to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to attach the defendant by all and singular his lands and tenements, goods, moneys, effects, and credits, in whosoever hands the same may be found, with a clause of the nature and to the effect of an ordinary citation, to answer the action of the plaintiff.

Sec. 8. Original writs of attachment shall be issued and returned in like time and manner as ordinary writs of citation; and when the defendant is cited to answer the action, the like proceedings shall be had between him and the plaintiff as in ordinary actions or contracts, and a general judgment may be rendered for or against the defendant.

Sec. 9. The manner of serving writs of attachment shall be as follows:

First. The writ and petition, or other lawful statement of the cause of action, shall be served on the defendant as an ordinary citation.

Second. Garnishees shall be summoned by the sheriff, declaring to them that he summons them to appear at the return term of the writ to answer the interrogatories which may be exhibited by the plaintiff, and by reading the writ to them if required.

Third. When lands or tenements are to be attached, the officer shall briefly describe the same in his return, and state that he attached all the right, title, and interest of the defendant to the same; and shall moreover give notice to the actual tenants, if any there be.

Fourth. When goods and chattels, moneys, effects, or evidences of debt are to be attached, the officer shall seize the same and keep them in his custody, if accessible; and, if not accessible, he shall summon the person in whose hands they may be, as garnishee.

Fifth. When the credits of the defendant are to be attached, the officer shall declare to the debtor of the defendant that he attaches in his hands all debts due from him to the defendant, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to satisfy the debt, interest and costs, and summon such person as garnishee.

Sec. 10. All persons shall be summoned as garnishee who are named as such in the writ; and such others as the officer shall find in the possession of goods, money, or effects of the defendant not actually seized by the officer and debtors of the defendant, and also such as the plaintiff or his agent shall direct.

Sec. 11. When the defendant cannot be cited, and his property or effects shall be attached, if he do not appear and answer to the action at the return term of the writ, within the first two days thereof, the court shall order a publication to be made, stating the nature and amount of the plaintiff's demand, and notifying the defendant that his property has been attached, and that, unless he appear at the next term, judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to satisfy the same; which notice shall be published four weeks successively in some newspaper printed in this Territory, the last insertion to be not less than two weeks before the first day of the next term; but if there should be no newspaper printed in this Territory, said notice shall be published by not less than six hand-bills put up at six different public places in the county at least six weeks before the first day of the next term.

Sec. 12. When the defendant shall be notified by publication as aforesaid, and shall not appear and answer the action, judgment by default may be entered, which may be proceeded on to final judgment, as in ordinary actions, but such judgment shall only bind the property attached, and shall be no evidence of indebtedness against the defendant in any subsequent suit.

Sec. 13. When property of the defendant, found in his possession or in the hands of any other person, shall be attached, the defendant or such other person may retain possession thereof, by giving bond and security, to the satisfaction of the officer executing the writ, to the officer or his successor, in double the value of the property attached, conditioned that the same shall be forthcoming when and where the court shall direct, and shall abide the judgment of the court.

Sec. 14. The officer executing the writ of attachment shall return with the writ all bonds taken by him in virtue thereof, a schedule of all property and effects attached, and the names of all the garnishees, the times and places when and where respectively summoned.

Sec. 15. If the officer wilfully fail to return a good and sufficient bond in any case where bond is required by this law, he shall be held and considered as security for the performance of all acts and the payment of all money to secure the performance of which such bond ought to have been taken.

Sec. 16. In all cases where property or effects shall be attached, the defendant may, at the court to which the writ is returnable, put in his answer without oath, denying the truth of any material fact contained in the affidavit, to which the plaintiff may reply. A trial of the truth of the affidavit shall be had at the same term, and on such trial the plaintiff shall be held to prove the existence of the facts set forth in the affidavit as the ground of the attachment; and if the issue be found for him, the cause shall proceed; but if it be found for the defendant, the cause shall be dismissed, at the cost of the plaintiff.

Sec. 17. The plaintiff may exhibit in the cause written allegations and interrogatories at the return term of the writ, and not afterwards, touching the property, effects, and credits attached in the hands of any garnishee. The garnishee shall exhibit and file his answer thereto, on oath, during such term, unless the court, for good cause shown, shall order otherwise. In default of such answer, or of a sufficient answer, the plaintiff may take judgment by default against him, or the court may, upon motion, compel him to answer by attachment of his body.

Sec. 18. Such judgment by default may be proceeded on to final judgment, in like manner as in case of defendants in actions upon contracts; but no final judgment shall be rendered against the garnishee till there shall be a final judgment against the defendant.

Sec. 19. Plaintiff may deny the answer of the garnishee in whole or in part, and the issue shall be tried as ordinary issues between plaintiffs and defendants. If, on such trial, the property or effects of the defendant be found in the hands of the garnishee, the value thereof shall be assessed, and judgment shall be for the proper amount of money. If the answer of the garnishee be not excepted to nor denied at the same term at which it is filed, it shall be taken as true and sufficient.

Sec. 20. If by the answer not excepted to, nor denied, it shall appear that the garnishee is possessed of property or effects of the defendant, or is indebted to the defendant, the value of the property or the effects, or of the debt being ascertained, judgment may be rendered against the garnishee.

Sec. 21. In all cases of controversy between the plaintiff and garnishee, the parties may be adjudged to pay or recover costs as in ordinary cases between plaintiff and defendant.

Sec. 22. Creditors whose demands are for a less amount than fifty dollars may sue their debtors by attachment before an alcalde in the same cases, and in the same manner, and under the same rules as creditors are allowed to sue out writs of attachments in the circuit court, provided that publication, when required, may be by six hand-bills put up at different public places three weeks before the return day of the writ.

Sec. 4. If the attorney general or circuit attorney be interested, or shall have been counsel in any cause, or shall be absent at the trial of any cause, the circuit court may appoint some other person to presecute or defend the cause.

Sec. 5. If the attorney general or circuit attorney be sick, or absent, the circuit court shall appoint some person to discharge the duties of the office, until the proper officer resumes the discharge of his duties; the person thus appointed shall possess the same power and receive the same fees as the proper officer would if he were present.

Sec. 6. The circuit attorney shall give his opinion without fee to any alcalde or prefect in his circuit, if required, on any question of law in any case in which the Territory or any county in his circuit is concerned, pending before such officer.

Sec. 7. In addition to the fees of office the attorney general shall receive a salary of five hundred dollars a year, and each circuit attorney shall receive an annual salary of two hundred and fifty dollars, one-half to be paid out of the treasury of the United States, and the other half to be paid out of the treasury of the Territory.

Sec. 9. Every person aggrieved by any judgment or decision of any circuit court, in any civil case, may make his appeal to the superior court.

Sec. 10. No such appeal shall be allowed unless, first, the appeal be taken at the same term at which the judgment or decision appealed from was rendered; and, second, unless the appellant, or his agent, shall, during the same term, file in the court his affidavit stating that such appeal is not taken for the purpose of vexation or delay, but because the affiant believes that the appellant is aggrieved by the judgment or decision of the court.

Sec. 11. Upon the appeal being made, the circuit court shall make an order allowing the same. Such allowance shall stay the execution in the following cases, and in no others: First, when the appellant shall be executor or administrator, and the action by or against him as such; and, second, when the appellant, or some responsible person for him, together with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the court, during some term at which the judgment or decision appealed from was rendered, shall enter into a recognizance to the adverse party in a sum sufficient to secure the debt, damages, and costs covered by such judgment or decision, together with the interest that may grow thereon, and the costs and damages which may be recovered in the superior court, conditioned that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal with due diligence to a decision in the superior court; and that, if the judgment or decision appealed from be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, he will perform the judgment of the circuit court; and that he will also pay the costs and damages that may be adjudged against him upon his appeal.

Sec. 12. No exception shall be taken in an appeal to any proceeding in the circuit court, except such as shall have been expressly decided by that court.

Sec. 13. The appellant shall file, in the office of the clerk of the superior court, at least ten days before the first day of the term of such court to which the appeal is returnable, a perfect transcript of the record and proceedings in the case. If he fail so to do, the appellee may produce in court such transcript; and if it appear thereby that an appeal has been allowed in the case, the court shall affirm the judgment, unless good cause to the contrary be shown. On appeals and writs of error, the appellant and plaintiff in error shall assign errors on or before the first day of the term to which the cause is returnable; in default of such assignment of errors, the appeal or writ of error may be dismissed, and the judgment affirmed, unless good cause for such failure be shown. Joinders in error shall be filed within four days after the time required for the filing of the assignment of error.

Sec. 14. The superior court, in appeals or writs of error, shall examine the record, and on the facts therein contained, alone, shall award a new trial, reverse or affirm the judgment of the circuit court, or give such other judgment as to them shall seem agreeable to law.

Sec. 15. And upon the affirmance of any judgment or decision, the superior court may award to the appellee or defendant in error such damages, not exceeding ten per cent. on the amount of the judgment complained of, as may be just.

Sec. 16. When the superior court shall be equally divided in opinion, the judgment or decision of the circuit court shall be affirmed.

Sec. 17. The superior court, on the determination of the case in appeal or error, may award execution to carry the same into effect, or may remit the accord, with their decision, to the circuit court from which the cause came, and such determination shall be carried into execution by such circuit court.

Sec. 20. Six terms of the prefects' courts shall be held in each county annually, commencing on the first Mondays of January, March, May, July, September, and November. Each prefect may hold adjourned terms of his court at any time that business may require it.

Sec. 21. The several prefects shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in all cases relative to the probate of last wills and testaments; the granting letters testamentary and of administration, and the repealing the same; the appointing and displacing guardians of orphans and of persons of unsound mind; to binding out apprentices; to settlement and allowance of accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians; to hear and determine all controversies respecting wills, the right of executorship and administration of guardianship, respecting the duties or accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, and all controversies between masters and those bound to them; to hear and determine all suits and proceedings instituted against executors or administrators, upon any demand against the estate of their testator or intestate: Provided, That when such demand shall exceed one hundred dollars, the claimant may sue either before the prefect or in the circuit court of the first place. The prefect shall have the superintendence of public roads in his county; may appoint overseers, and allot them hands for the purpose of establishing and repairing the same. He shall have the supervision of vagrants, and those who have no visible means of support, and may have them arrested and tried by a jury, and, in case of conviction, put to hard labor by binding them out or placing them on public works for not more than three months; he shall have appellate jurisdiction from the judgment of the alcaldes, when the amount in controversy or the value of the thing claimed does not exceed fifty dollars. Appeals shall be allowed from all judgments of the prefect of the circuit court: Provided, That all judgments in cases of appeals from the decision of the alcaldes shall be final and conclusive.

Sec. 22. Appeals from the judgment of the prefects shall be allowed to the circuit court in the same manner, and subject to the same restrictions, as in cases of appeals from the circuit to the superior court.

Sec. 23. The governor shall appoint not more than five alcaldes in each county, who shall hold their offices for two years.

Third. To take and enter judgment on confession, when the amount confessed shall not exceed one hundred dollars; but no alcalde shall have jurisdiction of any action against an executor or administrator, or of any action of slander, malicious prosecution, or false imprisonment, nor of any action in which the title to lands or tenements shall come in question.

Sec. 25. Every alcade shall appoint a day in every month to return all summons by him issued, and every summons shall be made returnable on such day, except in cases where it is otherwise specially provided.

Sec. 26. In all cases not otherwise specially provided for, the process shall be a summons, and shall be directed to some constable of the county in which the alcalde who granted the same resides, except where it is specially otherwise provided; and it shall command the defendant to appear before the alcalde who issued the same, at the time and place to be named in the summons, not less than five nor more than thirty days from the date of the summons, to answer to the complaint of the plaintiff. All process issued by alcaldes shall run in the name of the territory of New Mexico, and be dated on the day it issued, and shall be signed by the alcalde granting the same.

Sec. 27. Every summons shall be served at least three days before the day of the appearance therein mentioned, and may be executed either,

Sec. 28. When both parties first appear before the alcalde on the return of the process, the alcalde shall, upon the application of the defendant, require of the plaintiff a brief verbal statement of the nature of his demand.

Sec. 29. The alcalde shall issue subpœnas in all cases for witnesses at the request of either party, which shall be served by the constable in like manner as a summons.

Sec. 30. Every suit shall be determined at the return of the process duly served, unless the cause be adjourned. The alcalde, without the application or consent of either party, may, if it be necessary, adjourn a cause to his next law day.

Sec. 31. The alcalde, upon the application of either party, for good cause shown by the party applying, under oath, may adjourn a cause until his next law day.

Sec. 32. When both parties appear before the alcalde in person, or by agent, at the time appointed for the trial of the cause, the alcalde shall proceed to hear and determine the same according to equity and good conscience.

Sec. 39. When the jurors have agreed on their verdict they shall deliver the same to the alcalde publicly, who shall enter it upon his docket.

Sec. 40. The alcalde, whenever he shall be satisfied that a jury, in any civil cause before him, after having been out a reasonable time, cannot agree on their verdict, he may discharge them, and shall issue a new jury summons, unless the parties consent that the alcalde may render judgment upon the evidence already before him; which, in such case, he may do.

Sec. 41. If the defendant, after being duly summoned, fail to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons, the alcalde shall render judgment by default against him, and proceed to ascertain the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff. If any witness fail to appear, unless good cause be shown, the alcalde shall issue an attachment against him to compel his attendance, and may fine him, not exceeding five dollars, for the use of the county, for a contempt of court.

Sec. 42. If the plaintiff fail to appear before the alcalde at the time and place mentioned in the summons, the alcalde shall dismiss his suit and enter judgment for cost against him, unless his suit be founded upon bond or note; in which case, the cause shall proceed in the same manner and with the like effect as though the plaintiff was personally present.

Sec. 43. Appeals shall be allowed from judgments of alcaldes, when the debt or damages do not exceed fifty dollars, to the prefect: in all other cases, to the circuit court, in the same manner and subject to the same restrictions as in cases of appeals from the circuit to the superior court: Provided, That an appeal may be taken from the judgment of an alcalde within ten days after the rendition of the judgment.

6. In all cases where the defendant shall refuse to hear such writ and petition read, or to receive a copy thereof, the offer of the officer to read the same, or to deliver a copy thereof, and such refusal, shall be a sufficient service of such writ.

7. Any creditor whose demand amounts to fifty dollars or more may sue out a writ of capias in the circuit court, by filing an affidavit stating that the defendant is justly indebted to him, after allowing all set-offs in a sum specified in the affidavit, and on what account the affiant has reason to believe, and does believe, that the defendant is about to abscond from the Territory, so as to endanger the collection of his debt, and by also filing a bond as is required in attachments.

8. Creditors whose demands amount to less than fifty dollars may sue their debtors before alcaldes, by writs of capias, subject to the same rules as are prescribed in the preceding sections concerning such writs.

9. A writ of capias shall be served by taking the body of the

10. The defendant may, at the return term of the writ, deny the truth of the affidavit by answer without oath, and the same proceedings shall be had thereon as in cases of attachment.

Practice at law in criminal cases.

Sec. 1. Whenever complaint shall be made to any judge, prefect, or alcalde, that a criminal offence has been committed, it shall be his duty to examine the complaint, and any witness who may be introduced by him, under oath; if it appear, on such examination, that any crime has been committed, the magistrate shall issue a warrant commanding the sheriff or other officer forthwith to take the accused and bring him before such magistrate, to be dealt with according to law. Warrants issued by a judge may be executed in any part of the territory, and warrants issued by any other magistrate may be executed in any part of the county where such officer resides.

2. Whenever any person, who shall have committed a criminal offence in any county, shall escape into another, any magistrate within the county in which such offender may be found may issue his warrant for his apprehension, or may endorse a warrant which has been issued by a magistrate in the county from which the criminal escaped, and have him apprehended thereon and sent before some magistrate of the county in which the offender was committed for trial.

3. If the offence be an assault, battery, or affray, or gaming, or disturbance of a religious congregation, the prisoner shall be taken before some alcalde and punished in a summary manner. The trial of all such offences shall be by a jury of twelve competent men, who, if they find the defendant guilty, shall assess the fine to be paid by him, which shall not be less than one dollar nor more than fifty dollars.

4. In all other cases of crimes, the prisoner may be taken before any magistrate authorized to issue a warrant, who shall proceed as soon as may be to examine the complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution, on oath, in the presence of the prisoner, with regard to the offence. After the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, the witnesses for the defence shall be sworn and examined.

5. While any witness for or against the prisoner is under examination, the magistrate may exclude all witnesses who have not been examined, and may cause the witnesses to be kept apart and prevented from conversing with one another until they have all been examined.

6. If, upon the examination of the whole matter, it appear to the magistrate that no offence has been committed by any person, or that there is no probable cause to charge the prisoner therewith, he shall discharge him; but if it appear that an offence has been committed, and that there is probable cause to believe the person guilty thereof, the magistrate shall bind, by recognizance, the prosecutor and all material witnesses against the prisoner to appear and testify before the court having cognizance of the offence, on the first day of the next term thereof, and not depart such court without leave.

7. If the offence be bailable, and the persons offer sufficient securities, a recognizance shall be taken, with such securities, for his appearance before the court having cognizance thereof, on the first day of the next term thereof, and not depart such court without leave.

8. If the offence be not bailable, or sufficient bail be not offered, the prisoner shall be committed to jail, there to remain until he be discharged by due course of law.

9. All examinations and recognizances taken in pursuance of the provisions of this law shall be certified by the magistrate taking the same, and delivered to the clerk of the court in which the offence is cognizable, on or before the first day of the next term thereof, except where the prisoner is committed to jail. The examination of the witnesses for or against him, duly certified, shall accompany the warrant of commitment, and be delivered therewith to the jailor.

10. All criminal offences, except those cognizable before alcaldes and prefects, shall be preferred by indictment of grand jury.

11. No indictment can be found without the concurrence of at least twelve grand jurors. When so found, and not otherwise, the foreman of the grand jury shall certify under his hand that such indictment is a true bill.

12. Indictments found and presentments made by a grand jury shall be presented by their foreman in their presence, and shall be there filed, and remain as records of such courts.

13. All trials of criminal offences shall be had in the county in which they were committed: Provided, Where an offence shall be committed on the boundary of two counties, or within five hundred yards of such boundary, or where the person committing the offence shall be on one side and the injury be done on the other side of such boundary, a trial may be had in either of such counties: Provided, further, That if any mortal wound should be given, or any poison shall be administered, or any means shall be employed in one county by which any human being shall be killed, who shall die thereof in another county, the trial of such offence may be had in either county: Provided, also, That if any such wound or mortal injury shall have been inflicted in another State on any human being, who shall die thereof in this Territory, a trial of such offence may be had in the county in which the death happened.

14. A warrant may be issued for the arrest of the defendant indicted by the court in which such indictment may have been found, or by the clerk or judge thereof, or by any judge of the superior court, and by no other officer; such warrant may be directed to and executed in any county in this Territory.

15. When the indictment is for a bailable offence, the defendant may be let to bail by the court in which such indictment is pending, or, if such court be not sitting, by the judge thereof, or by the prefect, or any two alcaldes of the county in which the indictment is pending, and by no other officer.

16. Whenever any person shall be let to bail, the officer taking the recognizance shall immediately file the same with the clerk of the court in which such offence is cognizable.

17. All indictments shall be tried at the first term at which defendant appears, unless continued for good cause.

18. The defendant in every indictment for a criminal offence shall be entitled to a peremptory challenge of jurors, as follows: First. If the offence charged be punishable with death, to the number of twelve. Second. If punished by fine and imprisonment, or stripes, to the number of eight. Third. In cases not punishable by death or stripes, to the number of five, and no more.

19. The prosecutor shall have a peremptory challenge of three jurors, and no more.

20. A list of the jurors summoned shall be given to the defendant, in all capital cases, forty-eight hours before the trial, and in all other cases before the jury be sworn, if required.

21. If any person indicted for an offence and committed to prison shall not be brought to trial before the end of the second term of the court which shall be held after the finding of such indictment, he shall be entitled to his discharge, unless the delay happened on his application.

22. All issues of fact in any criminal case shall be tried by a jury, who shall assess the punishment in their verdict, and the court shall render a judgment accordingly, and no trial of any criminal offence shall be had unless the accused be personally present.

23. In all cases of final judgment rendered upon any indictment, an appeal to the superior court shall be allowed, if applied for during the term at which such judgment is rendered.

24. No such appeal shall stay the execution of such judgment, unless the circuit court shall be of opinion that there is probable cause for such appeal, or so much doubt as to render it expedient to take the judgment of the superior court thereon, and shall make an order expressly directing that such appeal shall operate as a stay of proceedings.

25. If the defendant in the judgment so ordered to be stayed shall be in custody, it shall be the duty of the sheriff to keep the defendant in custody, without executing the sentence which may have been passed, to abide such judgment as may be rendered upon the appeal.

26. In all cases where an appeal is prosecuted from a judgment in a criminal cause, except where the defendant is under sentence of death or imprisoned for life, the court which is authorized to order a stay of proceedings under the preceding provisions, may admit the defendant to bail upon a recognizance, with sufficient securities, to be approved by such court, conditioned that the defendant shall appear in the superior court, at the next term thereof, to receive judgment in the appeal, and abide its decision, render himself in execution, and obey every order and judgment which may be made in the premises.

27. The Territory shall be allowed an appeal in criminal cases only in the cases and under the circumstances mentioned in the next succeeding section.

28. When any indictment is quashed, or adjudged insufficient on demurrer, or judgment is arrested, the circuit court may cause the defendant to be committed or recognized to answer another indictment, or an appeal to the superior court shall be granted, if the prosecuting attorney desire it.

29. If an appeal be granted, the circuit court shall order the defendant to be committed or recognized, and the commitment or recognizance shall be to the same effect as when the defendant is himself the appellant.

30. When an appeal shall be taken which operates as a stay of proceedings, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the circuit court to make out a full transcript of the record in the cause, certify and return the same to the office of the clerk of the superior court, without delay.

31. When the appeal does not operate as a stay of proceedings, such transcript shall be made out, certified and returned, on the application of the appellant.

32. No assignment or error, or joinder in error upon any appeal in any criminal case, shall be required.

33. When the appeal is taken by the party indicted, if the superior court affirm the judgment of the circuit court, it shall direct the sentence pronounced to be executed, and the same shall be executed accordingly. If the judgment be reversed the superior court shall direct a new trial, or that the defendant be absolutely discharged, according to the circumstances of the case.

34. When the appeal has been taken by the Territory, if the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed, the party shall be discharged; if reversed, the superior court shall direct the circuit court to enter up judgment upon the verdict rendered, or when no judgment has been rendered, to proceed to trial on the indictment.

35. The circuit court, to which any criminal cause shall be remanded for a new trial, shall proceed thereon in the same manner as if such cause had not been removed to the superior court.

8. If the auditor or treasurer shall wilfully neglect or refuse to perform any duty enjoined by law, or shall be guilty of any oppression or extortion in the performance of any legal duty, he shall forfeit to the Territory any sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, to be recovered by indictment.

9. The prefect of each county shall appoint a treasurer therefor, and when a vacancy occurs in the office shall fill the same.

10. So soon as he is appointed, the treasurer shall enter into a bond to the county, in such sum and with such securities, residents of the county, as shall be approved by the prefect, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office.

11. He shall keep a just account of all moneys received and disbursed, and regular abstracts of all warrants drawn on the treasurer and paid; he shall make duplicate receipts, in favor of the proper person, for all moneys paid into the treasury, and keep the books, papers, and money thereto pertaining ready for the inspection of the prefect at all times.

12. As often and in such manner as may be required by the prefect, he shall furnish an account of the receipts and expenditures of the county.

13. He shall, at least once in every year, settle his accounts with the prefect, and at the close of the term for which he was appointed the prefect shall immediately proceed to ascertain, by actual examination and count, the amount of balances and funds in the hands of such treasurer, and to what particular fund it belongs. If any county treasurer die, his executor or administrator shall immediately settle his accounts as treasurer with the prefect, and deliver to his successor in office all things pertaining thereto.

14. All collectors, sheriffs, clerks, constables, and other persons chargeable with moneys belonging to any county, shall render their accounts to and settle with the court of the prefect at each stated term thereof, pay into the county treasury any balance which may be due the county, take duplicate receipts therefor, and deposite one of the same with the clerk of the prefect within five days thereafter.

15. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the prefect to keep regular accounts between the treasurer and the county, and to keep just accounts between the county and all persons chargeable with money payable into the county treasury, or who may be entitled to receive pay therefrom; to file and preserve in his office all accounts, vouchers, and other papers pertaining to the settlement of any account to which the county shall be a party; to issue warrants on the treasury for all moneys ordered to be paid by the prefect, keep an abstract thereof, present the same to the court of the prefect at every regular term thereof, balance and exhibit the accounts kept by him as often as required by the prefect, and keep his books and papers ready at all times to be inspected by the prefect.

16. It shall be the duty of all clerks to keep just accounts of all fines, penalties, forfeitures, and judgments rendered, imposed, or accruing in favor of any county, or of the Territory, ready at all times for the inspection of the judge of their respective courts.

17. It shall be the duty of the circuit court, and the court of the prefect, at each term thereof, to settle with the sheriffs of the counties for which such courts are holden, for all moneys by them received, or which they ought to have collected, for the use of their respective counties, or the Territory, and have not before accounted for; they shall cause their clerks to make out a list of all sums chargeable to said sheriffs, payable to the counties or Territory, specifying on what account, and cause the same to be certified to the clerk of the prefect, or the auditor of the Territory, as the case may require.

18. It shall be the duty of each alcalde, at each term of the court of the prefect, to make out a list of all fines by him imposed, to the use of the county, stating the name of the officer who has or ought to have collected the same; which he shall certify and deliver to the clerk of the prefect, who shall charge the same accordingly.

19. Every sheriff, collector, clerk, constable, or other person, chargeable with money belonging to any county, who shall fail to pay the same into the county treasury without delay, shall forfeit 2½ per centum per month on the amount wrongfully withheld, to be computed from the time the amount ought to have been paid, until actual payment.

20. No sheriff, collector, constable, clerk, or deputy thereof, shall be eligible to the office of county treasurer.

21. Each prefect shall have power to audit and adjust and settle all accounts to which his county shall be a party, to order the payment out of the county treasury of any sum of money found due by the county, and to allow the clerk and treasurer of the county, for their respective services under this law, such compensation as he may deem just and reasonable.

Water courses, stock marks, &c.

Sec. 1. The laws heretofore in force concerning water courses, stock marks, and brands, horses, enclosures, commons, and arbitrations, shall continue in force; except so much of said laws as requires the ayuntementos of the different villages to regulate these subjects, which duties and powers are transferred to and enjoined upon the alcaldes and prefects of these several counties.

Witnesses.

Sec. 1. In all cases where witnesses are required in any cause pending in any court having a clerk, such clerk, and in all other cases the person holding the court, shall issue a subpœna for such witnesses, stating the day and place when and where the witnesses are to appear.

2. Such subpœna shall contain the names of all witnesses for whom a summons is required by the same party at the same time, in the same cause, and who reside in the same county, and may be served in any county in this Territory in the same manner as a citation or summons for a defendant.

3. A witness summoned in any cause pending in any court, and failing to attend, may be compelled to appear by writ of attachment against his body, which may be served in any county in this Territory.

Done at the government house, in the city of Santa Fé, in the Territory of New Mexico, by Brigadier General Stephen W. Kearny, by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by the government of the United States.

Brigadier General U. S. A.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1846.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 19, 1846.

SIR: In obedience to the direction with which you transmitted a copy of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant, requesting the President "to communicate any and all orders or instructions to General Taylor, General Wool, General Kearny, Captain Sloat, Captain Stockton, or any other officer of the government, in relation to the establishment or organization of civil government in any portion of the territory of Mexico which has been or may be taken possession of by the army or navy of the United States; also, what forms of government such officers, or either of them, may have established and organized; and whether the President has approved and recognized said governments," I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of the despatches from this department to the commanding officers of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean, and in the Gulf of Mexico, as enumerated in the subjoined schedule, with copies of communications from those officers.

These documents contain all the information in the department on the subject embraced in the resolution of the House.

It will be perceived that the only subject on which the commander of the naval forces in the gulf has been instructed, which appears to be within the range of the resolution, is the state of the import and export trade of the ports of which he held temporary military possession.

The last official despatch received from the specific squadron is dated on the 28th of August last. At that date the despatches from the department of the 13th of May had just arrived, and those of subsequent dates appear not to have been received. The operations of the squadron were conducted under the order of June 24, 1845, which required the commander of the naval forces to exercise all the belligerent rights which belonged to him on the declaration of war or the commencement of hostilities by Mexico against the United States.

In my despatch of November 5th last, Commodore Stockton was required to relinquish the conduct of operations on land, and the control of such measures of civil government as the military occupation of the country conquered might devolve on the conqueror, until a definite treaty of peace should settle the right of possession to the officer in command of the land forces of the United States, who, in company with the bearer of my despatch, proceeded to the west coast to assume the command.

There has been no approval or recognition of any organized or established form of civil government for the Californias, or any other Mexican territory in the occupation of the naval forces, through this department. The instructions have been confined to the acknowledged rights, under the laws of nations, resulting from conquest and occupation; and the corresponding duties which the conqueror owed temporarily to the inhabitants have been performed in a spirit of kindness and conciliation, and in the only particulars embraced by the instructions from this department, of liberality to the commercial interests of citizens of the United States and of neutrals.

It may be supposed that the documents transmitted embrace matters not within the call. But as the principal purpose of the despatches has been the direction of naval operations against the enemy, I have found it difficult to make extracts which would be intelligible. I have, therefore, deemed it most satisfactory to transmit the entire documents, with two exceptions; and in these the whole despatch is not sent, because the parts withheld relate to other subjects, which the interests of the government would not permit to be made public.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

To the PRESIDENT.

No. 1.

[SECRET AND CONFIDENTIAL.]

UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 24, 1845.

SIR: Your attention is still particularly directed to the present aspect of the relations between this country and Mexico. It is the earnest desire of the President to pursue the policy of peace; and he is anxious that you, and every part of your squadron, should be assiduously careful to avoid any act which could be construed as an act of aggression.

Should Mexico, however, be resolutely bent on hostilities, you will be mindful to protect the persons and interests of citizens of the United States near your station; and, should you ascertain beyond a doubt that the Mexican government has declared war against us, you will at once employ the force under your command to the best advantage. The Mexican ports on the Pacific are said to be open and defenceless. If you ascertain with certainty that Mexico has declared war against the United States, you will at once possess yourself of the port of San Francisco, and blockade or occupy such other ports as your force may permit.

Yet, even if you should find yourself called upon by the certainty of an express declaration of war against the United States to occupy San Francisco and other Mexican ports, you will be careful to preserve, if possible, the most friendly relations with the inhabitants; and, where you can do so, you will encourage them to adopt a course of neutrality.

Should you fall in with the squadron under Commodore Parker, you will signify to him the wish of the department that, if the state of his vessels will admit of it, he should remain off the coast of Mexico until our relations with that power are more definitively adjusted; and you will take directions from him, as your senior officer, communicating to him these instructions.

The great distance of your squadron, and the difficulty of communicating with you, are the causes for issuing this order. The President hopes most earnestly that the peace of the two countries may not be disturbed. The object of these instructions is to possess you of the views of the government in the event of a declaration of war on the part of Mexico against the United States—an event which you are enjoined to do everything consistent with the national honor, on your part, to avoid.

Should Commodore Parker prefer to return to the United States, he has permission from the department to do so. In that event, you will command the united squadron.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commanding United States naval forces in the Pacific..

No. 2.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 11, 1845.

SIR: The unanimous vote of the Texan Congress for annexation leaves no doubt of the consummation of that measure. When you ascertain, satisfactorily, that the Texan convention, which assembled on the 4th, has also acceded to annexation, you will regard Texas as a part of your country—to be defended like any other part of it. At the same time, every honorable effort is to be made to preserve peace with all nations. The restoration of our boundary on the southwest, by the consent and choice of the people of Texas, is due to the strong attraction of the principles of liberty, which endear America to every one of its sons, and is a tribute before the world to the policy of peace, of political freedom, and of union on the principles of freedom. It is the President's desire that this great event should be consummated without the effusion of blood, and without the exercise of force; believing that free institutions, in their own right, will achieve all that can be desired.

To secure this end most effectually, you are charged to commit no act of aggression; and, at the same time, you are invested with the command of a force sufficient to take from others a disposition to hostile acts. You have already the

Frigate Potomac, of 44 guns;
Sloop Falmouth, of 20 guns:
Sloop Saratoga, of 20 guns;
Sloop St. Mary's, of 20 guns;
Brig Somers, of 10 guns;
Brig Lawrence, of 10 guns.

The Mississippi and Princeton, steamships, the sloop John Adams, and brig Porpoise, making an additional force of 52 guns, are under orders to join you without delay. This is, perhaps, the largest fleet that ever sailed under the American flag; and while it is sufficient, in case of war, to win glory for yourself, your associates, and the country, you will win still higher glory if, by the judicious management of your force, you contribute to the continuance of peace.

That you may precisely understand what is meant by the aggression which you are instructed to avoid, I will add, that while the annexation of Texas extends our boundary to the Del Norte, the President reserves the vindication of our boundary, if possible, to methods of peace. You will, therefore, not employ force to dislodge Mexican troops from any post east of the Del Norte which was in the actual possession of the Mexicans at the time of annexation.

While the action of Mexico is uncertain, you will employ the force under your command, with a just regard to the health of the officers and men at this season of the year, in such a manner as will be most likely to disincline Mexico to acts of hostility, and will keep you fully informed of the movements of that power. The number of small vessels under your command is such that you will be able to obtain and to send promptly to the department any information that may require its action.

Should Mexico declare war, you will at once dislodge her troops from any post she may have east of the mouth of the Del Norte; take possession of Tampico; and, if your force is sufficient, will take the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa, it being the determination of the President to preserve peace, if possible; and, if war comes, to recover peace by adopting the most prompt and energetic measures.

You are, herewith, possessed of the views of the department. Much is entrusted to your sagacity and good judgment. Keep the department fully advised of your movements. I invite you, also, to communicate your views unreservedly.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore D. Connor,
Commanding U. S. naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico, Pensacola.

No. 3.

United States Navy Department,
Washington, May 13, 1846.

Commodore: The state of things alluded to in my letter of June 24, 1815, has occurred. You will therefore now be governed by the instructions therein contained, and carry into effect the orders then communicated, with energy and promptitude, and adopt such other measures for the protection of the persons and interests, the rights and the commerce of the citizens of the United States, as your sound judgment may deem to be required.

When you establish a blockade, you will allow neutrals twenty days to leave the blockaded ports; and you will render your blockade absolute, except against armed vessels of neutral nations.

Commending you and your ships' companies to Divine Providence,

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore John D. Sloat,
Commanding U. S. Squadron, Pacific.

No. 4.

United States Navy Department,
Washington, May 13, 1846.

Commodore: Congress having declared that a state of war exists between the United States and the republic of Mexico, you will exercise all the rights that belong to you as commander-in-chief of a belligerent squadron.

Your own intimate acquaintance with the condition of Mexico, will instruct you best, what measures to pursue in the conduct of hostilities, in addition to those suggested by the department.

You will declare and enforce a blockade of as many of the ports of Mexico as your force will enable you to do effectually, and you will inform the department as speedily as possible of those which you blockade. You will duly notify neutrals of your declaration, and give to it all the publicity in your power. It is believed, that the ports between Guaxacualco and the Del Norte are those to which your attention should principally be directed. Your blockade must be strict and absolute, and only public armed vessels of neutral powers should be permitted to enter the Mexican ports which you shall place in a state of blockade. To neutrals that are already in the ports you will allow twenty days to leave them. In your letter to the department of the 19th of March, you ask if the English mail-steamers that touch monthly at Vera Cruz and Tampico should be included in any blockade which, in the event of hostilities, may become necessary. You are hereby instructed, until further orders, to follow the precedent set by the French in their recent blockade of Vera Cruz, with regard to them.

You will seize all the ships and vessels of war belonging to Mexico that may be accessible.

If your means will permit you to do so, you will approach Tampico and take, and, if practicable, will hold possession of that town.

The department does not suppose your forces to be adequate to attempt the capture of San Juan d'Ulloa.

You will keep up a constant communication with our army on the Del Norte, and adopt prompt and energetic measures to render it all assistance that may be in your power.

If any of the Mexican provinces are disposed to hold themselves aloof from the central government in Mexico, and maintain pacific relations with the United States, you will encourage them to do so, and regulate your conduct towards them accordingly.

You are enjoined to maintain a frequent correspondence with the department.

The steamer "Princeton" has sailed to join your squadron, and will be of service, especially as a despatch vessel.

The brig "Perry" will sail during the present week for Chagres; and, on its return, will join your command.

The brig "Porpoise" will rejoin you on its return from St. Domingo.

The brig "Truxton" will follow in a few days.

Your force will then consist of the following vessels:

Frigate	Cumberland, of	44 guns.
	Raritan,	44 guns.
Sloop	Falmouth,	20 guns.
	John Adams,	20 guns.

St. Mary's,	20 guns.
Steamer Mississippi,	10 guns.
Princeton,	9 guns.
Brig Porpoise,	10 guns.
Somers,	10 guns.
Lawrence,	10 guns.
Perry,	10 guns.
Truxton,	10 guns.
Schooner Flirt.

The country relies on you to make such a use of this force as will most effectually blockade the principal Mexican ports, protect our commerce from the depredations of privateers, assist the operations of our army, and lead to the earliest adjustment of our difficulties with Mexico.

You will adopt all proper precautions to preserve the health of your men.

I commend you and your ships' companies to the blessings of Divine Providence.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore David Connor,
Commanding Home Squadron.

No. 5.

United States Navy Department,
Washington, May 15, 1846.

Commodore: By my letter of the 13th instant, forwarded to you through different sources, in triplicate, of which a copy is enclosed, you were informed of the existing state of war between this government and the republic of Mexico, and referred to your instructions bearing date June 24th, 1845, in reference to such a contingency, and directed to "carry into effect the orders then communicated, with energy and promptitude, and adopt such other measures for the protection of the persons and interests, the rights and the commerce of the citizens of the United States, as your sound judgment may deem to be required."

I transmit you herewith, by the hands of Midshipman McRae, whom you will employ on your station, a file of papers containing the President's message, and the proceedings of Congress relative to the existing state of war with Mexico. The President, by authority of Congress, has made proclamation of war between the United States and Mexico. You will find a copy of the proclamation in the papers enclosed.

You will henceforth exercise all the rights that belong to you as commander-in-chief of a belligerent squadron.

You will consider the most important public object to be to take and to hold possession of San Francisco, and this you will do without fail.

You will also take possession of Mazatlan and of Monterey, one or both, as your force will permit.

If information received here is correct, you can establish friendly relations between your squadron and the inhabitants of each of these three places.

Enymas is also a good harbor, and is believed to be defenceless. You will judge about attempting it.

When you cannot take and hold possession of a town, you may establish a blockade, if you have the means to do it effectually, and the public interest shall require it.

With the expression of these views, much is left to your discretion as to the selection of the points of attack, the ports you will seize, the ports which you will blockade, and as to the order of your successive movements.

A connexion between California, and even Sonora, and the present government of Mexico, is supposed scarcely to exist. You will, as opportunity offers, conciliate the confidence of the people in California, and also in Sonora, towards the government of the United States; and you will endeavor to render their relations with the United States as intimate and as friendly as possible.

It is important that you should hold possession at least of San Francisco, even while you encourage the people to neutrality, self-government, and friendship.

You can readily conduct yourself in such a manner as will render your occupation of San Francisco, and other ports, a benefit to the inhabitants.

Commodore Biddle has left, or will soon leave China. If occasion offers, you will send letters for him to our agent at the Sandwich Islands, conveying to him the wish of the department that he should appear, at once, off California or Sonora.

You will inform the department, by the earliest opportunity, of those ports which you blockade. You will notify neutrals of any declaration of blockade you may make, and give to it all proper publicity. Your blockade must be strict, permitting only armed vessels of neutral powers to enter; but to neutrals already in the ports you will allow twenty days to leave them.

The frigate "Potomac" and sloop "Saratoga" have been ordered to proceed as soon as possible into the Pacific; and Captain Aulick in the Potomac, and Commander Shubrick in the Saratoga, directed to report to you at Mazatlan, or wherever else they may find your forces. You would do well, if occasion offers, to send orders to Callao and Valparaiso, instructing them where to meet you.

Other reinforcements will be sent you as the exigencies of the service may require.

You will communicate with the department as often as you can; and you will, if practicable, send a messenger with despatches across the country to the Del Norte, and so to Washington.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commanding U. S. naval forces in the Pacific.

No. 6.

United States Navy Department,
Washington, June 8, 1846.

Commodore: You have already been instructed, and are now instructed, to employ the force under your command, first, to take possession of San Francisco; next, to take possession of Monterey; next, to take possession of such other Mexican ports as you may be able to hold; next, to blockade as many of the Mexican ports in the Pacific as your force will permit; and to watch over American interests and citizens, and commerce, on the west coast of Mexico.

It is rumored that the province of California is well disposed to accede to friendly relations with the United States. You will encourage the people of that region to enter into relations of amity with our country.

In taking possession of their harbors, you will, if possible, endeavor to establish the supremacy of the American flag without any strife with the people of California.

The squadron on the east coast of Mexico, it is believed, is in the most friendly relations with Yucatan. In like manner, if California separates herself from our enemy, the central Mexican government, and establishes a government of its own under the auspices of the American flag, you will take such measures as will best promote the attachment of the people of California to the United States; will advance their prosperity; and will make that vast region a desirable place of residence for emigrants from our soil.

Considering the great distance at which you are placed from the department, and the circumstances that will constantly arise, much must be left to your discretion. You will bear in mind generally, that this country desires to find in California a friend, and not an enemy; to be connected with it by near ties; to hold possession of it, at least during the war; and to hold that possession, if possible, with the consent of its inhabitants.

The sloop-of-war "Dale," Commander McKean, sailed from New York on the 3d instant, to join your squadron. The "Lexington," Lieutenant Bailey, will sail as soon as she can take on board her stores. The "Potomac" and "Saratoga" have also been ordered to the Pacific.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore John D. Sloat,
Commanding U. S. naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

No. 7.

UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 12, 1846.

COMMODORE: Previous instructions have informed you of the intention of this government, pending the war with Mexico, to take and hold possesion of California. For this end a company of artillery, with cannon, mortars, and munitions of war, is sent to you in the Lexington, for the purpose of co-operating with you, according to the best of your judgment, and of occupying, under your direction, such post or posts as you may deem expedient in the bay of Monterey, or in the bay of San Francisco, or in both. In the absence of a military officer higher than captain, the selection of the first American post or posts on the waters of the Pacific, in California, is left to your discretion.

The object of the United States is, under its rights as a belligerent nation, to possess itself entirely of Upper California.

When San Francisco and Monterey are secured, you will, if possible, send a small vessel of war to take and hold possession of the port of San Diego; and it would be well to ascertain the views of the inhabitants of Pueblo de los Angeles, who, according to information received here, may be counted upon as desirous of coming under the jurisdiction of the United States. If you can take possession of it, you should do so.

The object of the United States has reference to ultimate peace with Mexico; and if, at that peace, the basis of the uti possidetis shall be established, the government expects, through your forces, to be found in actual possession of Upper California.

This will bring with it the necessity of a civil administration. Such a government should be established under your protection; and, in selecting persons to hold office, due respect should be had to the wishes of the people of California, as well as to the actual possessors of authority in that province. It may be proper to require an oath of allegiance to the United States from those who are entrusted with authority. You will also assure the people of California of the protection of the United States.

In reference to commercial regulations in the ports of which you are in actual possession, ships and produce of the United States should come and go free of duty.

For your further instruction I enclose to you a copy of confidential instructions from the War Department to Brigadier General S. W. Kearny, who is ordered, overland, to California. You will also communicate your instructions to him, and inform him that they have the sanction of the President.

The government relies on the land and naval forces to co-operate with each other in the most friendly and effective manner.

After you shall have secured Upper California, if your force is sufficient, you will take possession, and keep the harbors on the Gulf of California as far down, at least, as Guaymas. But this is not to interfere with the permanent occupation of Upper California.

A regiment of volunteers from the State of New York, to serve during the war, have been called for by the government, and are expected to sail from the first to the tenth of August. This regiment will, in the first instance, report to the naval commander on your station, but will ultimately be under the command of General Kearny, who is appointed to conduct the expedition by land.

The term of three years having nearly expired since you have been in command of the Pacific squadron, Commodore Shubrick will soon be sent out in the Independence to relieve you. The department confidently hopes that all Upper California will be in our hands before the relief shall arrive.

Very respectfully,
GEORGE BANCROFT.

Commodore John D. Sloat,
Comd'g U. S. naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

No. 8.

United States Navy Department,
Washington, August 13, 1846.

Sir: The United States being in a state of war by the action of Mexico, it is desired, by the prosecution of hostilities, to hasten the return of peace, and to secure it on advantageous conditions. For this purpose orders have been given to the squadron in the Pacific to take and keep possession of Upper California, especially of the ports of San Francisco, of Monterey, and of San Diego; and also, if opportunity offer, and the people favor, to take possession, by an inland expedition, of San Pueblo de los Angeles, near San Diego.

Your first duty will be to ascertain if these orders have been carried into effect. If not, you will take immediate possession of Upper California, especially of the three ports of San Francisco, Monterey, and San Diego, so that if the treaty of peace shall be made on the basis of the uti possidetis, it may leave California to the United States.

The relations to be maintained with the people of Upper California are to be as friendly as possible. The flag of the United States must be raised; but under it the people are to be allowed as much liberty of self-government as is consistent with the general occupation of the country by the United States. You, as commander-in-chief of the squadron, may exercise the right to interdict the entrance of any vessel or articles, that would be unfavorable to our success in the war, into any of the enemy's ports which you may occupy. With this exception, all United States vessels and merchandise must be allowed, by the local authorities of the ports of which you take possession, to come and go free of duty; but on foreign vessels and goods reasonable duties may be imposed, collected, and disposed of by the local authorities, under your general superintendence.

A military force has been directed by the Secretary of War to proceed to the western coast of California for the purpose of co-operation with the navy, in taking possession of and holding the ports and positions which have been specified, and for otherwise operating against Mexico.

A detachment of these troops, consisting of a company of artillery, under command of Captain Tompkins, has sailed in the United States ship Lexington. A regiment of volunteers, under Colonel Stevenson, will soon sail from New York; and a body of troops under Brigadier General Kearny may reach the coast via Santa Fé. Copies of so much of the instructions to Captain Tompkins and General Kearny as relates to objects requiring co-operation are herewith enclosed.

By article 6 of the "General Regulations for the Army," edition of 1825, which is held by the War Department to be still in force, and of which I enclose you a copy, your commission [that is, the commission of Commodore Biddle] places you in point of precedence, on occasions of ceremony or upon meetings for consultation, in the class of major general, but no officer of the army or navy, whatever may be his rank, can assume any direct command, independent of consent, over an officer of the other service, excepting only when land forces are specially embarked in vessels of war to do the duty of marines.

The President expects and requires, however, the most cordial and effectual co-operation between the officers of the two services, in taking possession of and holding the ports and positions of the enemy, which are designated in the instructions to either or both branches of the service, and will hold any commander of either branch to a strict responsibility for any failure to preserve harmony and secure the objects proposed.

The land forces which have been or will be sent to the Pacific may be dependent upon the vessels of your squadron for transportation from one point to another, and for shelter and protection in case of being compelled to abandon positions on the coast. It may be necessary also to furnish transportation for their supplies, or to furnish the supplies themselves, by the vessels under your direction.

In all such cases you will furnish all the assistance in your power which will not interfere with objects that, in your opinion, are of greater importance.

You will, taking care, however, to advise with any land officer of high rank—say of the rank of brigadier general—who may be at hand, make the necessary regulations for the ports that may be occupied.

Having provided for the full possession of Upper California, the next point of importance is the Gulf of California. From the best judgment I can form, you should take possession of the port of Guaymas. The progress of our arms will probably be such that, in conjunction with land forces, you will be able to hold possession of Guaymas, and so to reduce all the country north of it on the gulf.

As to the ports south of it, especially Mazatlan and Acapulco, it is not possible to give you special instructions. Generally, you will take possession of, or blockade, according to your best judgment, all Mexican ports as far as your means allow; but south of Guaymas, if the provinces rise up against the central government, and manifest friendship towards the United States, you may, according to your discretion, enter into a temporary agreement of neutrality. But this must be done only on condition that our ships have free access to their ports, and equal commercial rights with those of other nations; that you are allowed to take in water and fuel, to purchase supplies, to go to and from shore without obstruction, as in time of peace; and that the provinces which are thus neutral shall absolutely abstain from contributing towards the continuance of the war by the central government of Mexico against the United States.

Generally, you will exercise the rights of a belligerent; and bear in mind that the greater advantages you obtain, the more speedy and the more advantageous will be the peace.

The Savannah, the Warren, and the Levant ought soon to return. If you hear of peace between the United States and Mexico, you will at once send them home.

If war continues, you will send them home singly, or in company, at the earliest day they can be spared. The Savannah will go to New York, and the Warren and Levant to Norfolk.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

GEORGE BANCROFT.

To Com. James Biddle, or
Com. R. F. Stockton, or
The Senior Officer in command of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

Head-quarters of the Army,
Washington, May 31, 1846.

Sir: In arranging with his excellency the governor of Missouri the force to march against the province of New Mexico, under the instructions to you from the Adjutant General's office, (two letters, dated respectively the 13th and 14th instant,) it is desirable that you should add as many of the valuable men at and about Bent's fort to that force as practicable, and as may be needed. The governor's attention, when here, was invited to that object by both the Secretary of War and myself.

With a view to these men, and a further accession to the strength of the expedition under your orders from among American citizens residing or trading in New Mexico, who may volunteer into the service of the United States, it is desirable that you take with you additional supplies, including arms, accoutrements, and ammunition.

To hold Santa Fé, and other points you may deem it necessary to capture and to occupy, it is suggested, if you think the routes practicable, that you take with you some guns beyond and heavier than a field battery.

I am desired to intimate to you, (confidentially,) from the highest in authority, that you will probably soon be followed by an additional volunteer force, (say of a thousand men,) to be raised in Missouri, and to come under your orders. When so reinforced, or before, if you deem your means adequate, after garrisoning Santa Fé, and other points you may have captured and desire to occupy, you will march (say via the most southern practicable route—the caravan route) to North California; take and occupy some of the principal points (say Monterey and San Francisco bay) in that province also; communicating and co-operating with the commander of the United States naval forces whom you may find at hand. You will probably receive en route further instructions on those subjects.

It is deemed highly important that the expedition with which you are to commence operations should be fitted out and pressed forward with as little delay as practicable.

This communication is despatched in triplicate—one copy addressed to St. Louis, Jefferson city, and Fort Leavenworth, each; and a fourth will be put under cover to his excellency the governor of Missouri, for his information.

The chief of topographical engineers will despatch for service with you, very soon, two officers of his corps.

I remain, with great respect your obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

War Department,
Washington, June 3, 1846.

Sir: I herewith send you a copy of my letter to the governor of Missouri for an additional force of one thousand mounted men.

The object of thus adding to the force under your command is not, as you will perceive, fully set forth in that letter, for the reason that it is deemed prudent that it should not at this time become a matter of public notoriety; but to you it is proper and necessary that it should be stated.

It has been decided by the President to be of the greatest importance, in the pending war with Mexico, to take the earliest possession of Upper California. An expedition, with that view, is hereby ordered, and you are designated to command it. To enable you to be in sufficient force to conduct it successfully, this additional force of a thousand mounted men has been provided to follow you in the direction of Santa Fé, to be under your orders, or the officer you may leave in command at Santa Fé.

It cannot be determined how far this additional force will be behind that designed for the Santa Fé expedition, but it will not probably be more than a few weeks. When you arrive at Santa Fé with the force already called, and shall have taken possession of it, you may find yourself in a condition to garrison it with a small part of your command, (as the additional force will soon be at that place,) and with the remainder press forward to California. In that case you will make such arrangements as to being followed by the reinforcement before mentioned as in your judgment may be deemed safe and prudent. I need not say to you that in case you conquer Santa Fé, (and with it will be included the department or State of New Mexico,) it will be important to provide for retaining safe possession of it. Should you deem it prudent to have still more troops for the accomplishment of the objects herein designated, you will lose no time in communicating your opinion on that point, and all others connected with the enterprise, to this department. Indeed, you are hereby authorized to make a direct requisition for it upon the governor of Missouri.

It is known that a large body of Mormon emigrants are en route to California, for the purpose of settling in that country. You are desired to use all proper means to have a good understanding with them, to the end that the United States may have their co-operation in taking possession of, and holding that country. It has been suggested here that many of these Mormons would willingly enter into the service of the United States, and aid us in our expedition against California. You are hereby authorized to muster into service such as can be induced to volunteer; not, however, to a number exceeding one-third of your entire force. Should they enter the service, they will be paid as other volunteers; and you can allow them to designate, so far as it can be properly done, the persons to act as officers thereof. It is understood that a considerable number of American citizens are now settled on the Sacramento river, near Suter's establishment called "Nueva Helvetia," who are well disposed towards the United States. Should you, on your arrival in the country, find this to be the true state of things there, you are authorized to organize and receive into the service of the United States such portion of these citizens as you may think useful to aid you to hold the possession of the country. You will, in that case, allow them, so far as you shall judge proper, to select their own officers. A large discretionary power is invested in you in regard to these matters, as well as to all others in relation to the expeditions confided to your command.

The choice of routes by which you will enter California will be left to your better knowledge and ampler means of getting accurate information. We are assured that a southern route, called the Caravan route, (by which the wild horses are brought from that country into New Mexico,) is practicable; and it is suggested as not improbable that it can be passed over in the winter months, or at least late in autumn. It is hoped that this information may prove to be correct.

In regard to routes, the practicability of procuring needful supplies for men and animals, and transporting baggage, is a point to be well considered. Should the President be disappointed in his cherished hope that you will be able to reach the interior of Upper California before winter, you are then desired to make the best arrangement you can for sustaining your forces during the winter, and for an early movement in the spring. Though it is very desirable that the expedition should reach California this season, (and the President does not doubt you will make every possible effort to accomplish this object,) yet, if in your judgment it cannot be undertaken with a reasonable prospect of success, you will defer it, as above suggested, until spring. You are left unembarrassed by any specific directions in this matter.

It is expected that the naval forces of the United States which are now, or will soon be in the Pacific, will be in possession of all the towns on the sea coast, and will co-operate with you in the conquest of California. Arms, ordnance, munitions of war, and provisions, to be used in that country, will be sent by sea, to our squadron in the Pacific, for the use of the land forces.

Should you conquer and take possession of New Mexico and Upper California, or considerable places in either, you will establish temporary civil governments therein—abolishing all arbitrary restrictions that may exist, so far as it may be done with safety. In performing this duty, it would be wise and prudent to continue in their employment all such of the existing officers as are known to be friendly to the United States, and will take the oath of allegiance to them. The duties at the custom-houses ought, at once, to be reduced to such a rate as may be barely sufficient to maintain the necessary officers, without yielding any revenue to the government. You may assure the people of those provinces that it is the wish and design of the United States to provide for them a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to that which exists in our territories. They will then be called upon to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own representatives to the Territorial legislature. It is foreseen that what relates to the civil government will be a difficult and unpleasant part of your duty, and much must necessarily be left to your own discretion.

In your whole conduct you will act in such a manner as best to conciliate the inhabitants, and render them friendly to the United States.

It is desirable that the usual trade between the citizens of the United States and the Mexican provinces should be continued, as far as practicable, under the changed condition of things between the two countries. In consequence of extending your expedition into California, it may be proper that you should increase your supply for goods to be distributed as presents to the Indians. The United States superintendent of Indian affairs at St. Louis will aid you in procuring these goods. You will be furnished with a proclamation in the Spanish language, to be issued by you, and circulated among the Mexican people on your entering into or approaching their country. You will use your utmost endeavors to have the pledges and promises therein contained carried out to the utmost extent.

I am directed by the President to say that the rank of brevet brigadier general will be conferred on you as soon as you commence your movement towards California, and sent round to you by sea, or over the country, or to the care of the commandment of our squadron in the Pacific. In that way cannon, arms, ammunition, and supplies for the land forces, will be sent to you.

&c., &c., &c.,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Col. S. W. Kearny,
Fort Leavenworth, Missouri.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

Head-quarters of the Army,
Washington, June 20, 1846.

Sir: As the commander of a company of the 3d artillery, you have been ordered to embark with the same on board of the United States ship the Lexington, now lying in the harbor of New York, and bound to the northwest coast of America.

I am now to inform you that, with your company, you are destined to act in conjunction with the United States naval forces in the Pacific against the republic of Mexico, with which we are at war. The commander of that squadron may desire to capture and to hold certain important points, as Monterey, and towns or posts in San Francisco bay. The company under your command may be needed for both purposes, and you will, on consultation, give your co-operation.

It is not intended to place you under the orders, strictly speaking, of any naval officer, no matter how high in rank. That would be illegal, or, at least, without the authority of any law; but you will be held responsible, when associated in service, whether on land or water, with any naval officer, without regard to relative rank, to co-operate in perfect harmony, and with zeal and efficiency. Great confidence is reposed in you, in those respects, as also in your intelligence, judgment, temper, and prowess. See in this connexion paragraphs 24, 25, and 26, in the old General Regulations for the Army, (edition of 1825,) a copy of which book I handed to you in my office.

Your condition, and that of your company, on board the Lexington, commanded by Lieutenant ——— of the navy, or other United States vessel to which you may be transferred, will be that of passengers, not marines; but in the event of the ship finding herself in action, you, and the company under your command, will not fail to show yourselves at least as efficient as any equal number of marines whatsoever. In such case, again, the utmost harmony, upon consultation, would be indispensable; and in no case will you fail, so far as it may depend upon your best exertions, to conciliate such harmony.

On the landing of the ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the army, placed on board of the Lexington, you will take charge of the same, unless you should be joined for that purpose by an ordnance officer, in which case you will give him aid and assistance in that duty.

On effecting a succcessful landing in the enemy's country, it may be necessary, after consultation with the naval commander, as above, and with his assistance, to erect and defend one or more forts, in order to hold the conquered place or places. In such service you will be on your proper element.

It is proper that I should add, you may find on the northwest coast an army officer, with higher rank than your own, when, of course, you will report to him by letter, and if ashore, come under his command.

It is known that you have made requisitions for all the proper supplies which may be needed by your company, for a considerable time after landing. Further supplies, which may not be sent after you from this side of the continent, you will, when ashore, in the absence of a naval force, and in the absence of a higher officer of the army, have to purchase on the other side; but always in strict conformity with regulations. On board, it is understood that your company will be subsisted from the stores of the ship or navy.

Should you not come under the orders of an army officer, or should you not be landed by the naval commander, as above, you will remain on board of the squadron, and be sent home on some ship of the same.

I need scarcely add that, afloat or ashore, you will always maintain the most exact discipline in your company, for the honor of the army and country, and never neglect to make, in the absence of an army superior, to the Adjutant General, the stated reports required by regulations, besides special reports on all snbjects of interest.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

"ARTICLE 6.

"Relative rank and precedence of land and sea officers.

"24. The military officers of the land and sea services of the United States shall rank together as follows: 1st. A lieutenant of the navy with captains of the army. 2d. A master commandant with majors. 3d. A captain of the navy, from the date of his commission, with lieutenant colonels. 4th. Five years thereafter, with colonels. 5th. Ten years thereafter, with brigadier generals; and, 6th. Fifteen years after the date of his commission, with major generals. But, should there be created in the navy the rank of rear admiral, then such rank only shall be considered equal to that of major general.

"25. Nothing in the preceding paragraph shall authorize a land officer to command any United States vessel or navy yard; nor any sea officer to command any part of the army on land; neither shall an officer of the one service have a right to demand any compliment, on the score of rank, from an officer of the other service.

"26. Land troops, serving on board a United States vessel as marines, shall be subject to the orders of the sea officer in command thereof. Other land troops embarked on board such vessels for transportation merely will be considered, in respect to the naval commanders, as passengers; subject, nevertheless, to the internal regulations of the vessels."

No. 9.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 5, 1846.

COMMODORE: Commodore Sloat has arrived in this city, and delivered your letter of the 28th July ultimo, with the copy of your address to the people of California, which accompanied it. The department is gratified that you joined the squadron before the state of the commodore's health rendered it necessary for him to relinquish his important command.

The difficulties and embarrassments of the command, without a knowledge of the proceedings of Congress on the subject of the war with Mexico, and in the absence of the instructions of the department which followed those proceedings, are justly appreciated; and it is highly gratifying that so much has been done in anticipation of the orders which have been transmitted.

You will, without doubt, have received the despatches of the 15th of May last, addressed to Commodore Sloat, and I now send you, for your guidance, a copy of instructions to Commodore Shubrick, of the 17th of August. He sailed early in September, in the razee Independence, with orders to join the squadron with the least possible delay. On his assuming the command, you may hoist a red pendant. If you prefer, you may hoist your pendant on the Savannah, and return home with her and the Warren.

The existing war with Mexico has been commenced by her. Every disposition was felt and manifested by the United States government to procure redress for the injuries of which we complained, and to settle all complaints on her part in the spirit of peace and of justice which has ever characterized our intercourse with foreign nations. That disposition still exists; and whenever the authorities of Mexico shall manifest a willingness to adjust unsettled points of controversy between the two republics, and to restore an honorable peace, they will be met in a corresponding spirit.

This consummation is not to be expected, nor is our national honor to be maintained, without a vigorous prosecution of the war on our part. Without being animated by any ambitious spirit of conquest, our naval and military forces must hold the ports and territory of the enemy of which possession has been obtained by their arms. You will, therefore, under no circumstances voluntarily lower the flag of the United States, or relinquish the actual possession of Upper California. Of other points of the Mexican territory which the forces under your command may occupy, you will maintain the possession, or withdraw, as in your judgment may be most advantageous in prosecution of the war.

In regard to your intercourse with the inhabitants of the country, your views are judicious, and you will conform to the instructions heretofore given. You will exercise the rights of a belligerent; and if you find that the liberal policy of our government, in purchasing and paying for required supplies, is misunderstood, and its exercise is injurious to the public interest, you are at liberty to take them from the enemy without compensation, or pay such prices as may be deemed just and reasonable. The best policy in this respect depends on a knowledge of circumstances in which you are placed, and is left to your discretion.

The Secretary of War has ordered Colonel R. B. Mason, first United States dragoons, to proceed to California, via Panama, who will command the troops and conduct the military operations in the Mexican territory bordering on the Pacific, in the absence of Brigadier General Kearny. The commander of the naval forces will consult and co-operate with him, in his command, to the same extent as if he held a higher rank in the army. In all questions of relative rank, he is to be regarded as having only the rank of colonel.

The President has deemed it best for the public interests to invest the military officer commanding with the direction of the operations on land, and with the administrative functions of government over the people and territory occupied by us. You will relinquish to Colonel Mason, or to General Kearny, if the latter shall arrive before you have done so, the entire control over these matters, and turn over to him all papers necessary to the performance of his duties. If officers of the navy are employed in the performance of civil or military duties, you will withdraw or continue them at your discretion, taking care to put them to their appropriate duty in the squadron if the army officer commanding does not wish their services on land.

The establishment of port regulations is a subject over which it is deemed by the President most appropriate that the naval commander shall exercise jurisdiction. You will establish these and communicate them to the military commander, who will carry them into effect so far as his co-operation may be necessary, suggesting for your consideration modifications or alterations.

The regulation of the import trade is also confided to you. The conditions under which vessels of our own citizens and of neutrals may be admitted into ports of the enemy in your possession will be prescribed by you, subject to the instructions heretofore given. To aid you, copies of instructions to the collectors in the United States, from the Treasury Department, on the same subject, are enclosed. On cargoes of neutrals imported into such ports, you may impose moderate duties, not greater in amount than those collected in the ports of the United States. The collection of these duties will be made by civil officers, to be appointed, and subject to the same rules as other persons charged with civil duties in the country. These appointments will be made by the military officers, on consultation with you.

The President directs me to impress most earnestly on the naval officers, as it is impressed on those of the army, the importance of harmony in the performance of their delicate duties while co-operating. They are arms of one body, and will, I doubt not, vie with each other in showing which can render the most efficient aid to the other in the execution of common orders, and in sustaining the national honor, which is confided to both.

You will make your communications to the department as frequent as possible.

The great distance at which your command is placed, and the impossibility of maintaining a frequent or regular communication with you, necessarily induce the department to leave much of the details of your operations to your discretion. The confident belief is entertained, that, with the general outline given in the instructions, you will pursue a course which will make the enemy sensible of our power to inflict on them the evils of war, while it will secure to the United States, if a definitive treaty of peace shall give us California, a population impressed with our justice, grateful for our clemency, and prepared to love our institutions and to honor our flag.

On your being relieved in the command of the squadron, you will hand your instructions to the officer relieving you.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

Commodore R. F. Stockton,
Commanding United States naval forces on the west coast of Mexico.

[No. 1.]

Navy Department, August 17, 1848.

Commodore: The United States being in a state of war by the action of Mexico, it is desired by the prosecution of hostilities to hasten the return of peace, and to secure it on advantageous conditions. For this purpose orders have been given to the squadron in the Pacific to take and keep possession of Upper California, especially of the ports of San Francisco, of Monterey, and of San Diego; and also, if opportunity offer and the people favor, to take possession, by an inland expedition, of San Pueblo de los Angeles, near San Diego.

On reaching the Pacific, your first duty will be to ascertain if these orders have been carried into effect. If not you will take immediate possession of Upper California, especially of the three ports of San Francisco, Monterey, and San Diego, so that if the treaty of peace shall be made on the basis of the uti possidetis, it may leave California to the United States.

The relations to be maintained with the people of Upper California are to be as friendly as possible. The flag of the United States must be raised, but under it the people are to be allowed as much liberty of self-government as is consistent with the general occupation of the country by the United States. You, as commander-in-chief of the squadron, may exercise the right to interdict the entrance of any vessel or articles that would be unfavorable to our success in the war into any of the enemy's ports which you may occupy. With this exception, all United States vessels and merchandise must be allowed, by the local authorities of the ports of which you take possession, to come and go free of duty; but on foreign vessels and goods reasonable duties may be imposed, collected, and disposed of by the local authorities, under your general superintendence.

A military force has been directed by the Secretary of War to proceed to the western coast of California for the purpose of co-operation with the navy, in taking possession of and holding the ports and positions which have been specified, and for otherwise operating against Mexico.

A detachment of these troops, consisting of a company of artillery, under command of Captain Tompkins, has sailed in the United States ship Lexington. A regiment of volunteers, under Colonel Stevenson, will soon sail from New York, and a body of troops under Brigadier General Kearny may reach the coast over Santa Fe. Copies of so much of the instructions to Captain Tompkins and General Kearny as relates to objects requiring co-operation are herewith enclosed.

By article six of the General Regulations for the Army, (edition of 1825,) which is held by the War Department to be still in force, and of which I enclose you a copy, your commission places you, in point of precedence, on occasions of ceremony or upon meetings for consultation, in the class of major general, but no officer of the army or navy, whatever may be his rank, can assume any direct command, independent of consent, over an officer of the other service, excepting only when land forces are especially embarked in vessels of war to do the duty of marines.

The President expects and requires, however, the most cordial and effectual co-operation between the officers of the two services, in taking possession of and holding the ports and positions of the enemy, which are designated in the instructions to either or both branches of the service, and will hold any commander of either branch to a strict responsibility for any failure to preserve harmony and secure the objects proposed.

The land forces which have been, or will be sent to the Pacific, may be dependent upon the vessels of your squadron for transportation from one point to another, and for shelter and protection in case of being compelled to abandon positions on the coast. It may be necessary also to furnish transportation for their supplies, or to furnish the supplies themselves, by the vessels under your direction.

In all such cases you will furnish all the assistance in your power which will not interfere with objects that, in your opinion, are of greater importance.

You will, taking care, however, to advise with any land officer of high rank (say of the rank of brigadier general) who may be at hand, make the necessary regulations for the ports that may be occupied.

Having provided for the full possession of Upper California, the next point of importance is the Gulf of California. From the best judgment I can form, you should take possession of the port of Guaymas. The progress of our arms will probably be such, that, in conjunction with the land forces, you will be able to hold possession of Guaymas, and so to reduce all the country north of it on the gulf.

As to the ports south of it, especially Mazatlan and Acapulco, it is not possible to give you special instructions. Generally, you will take possession of, or blockade, according to your best judgment, all Mexican ports, as far as your means allow; but south of Guaymas, if the provinces rise up against the central government, and manifest friendship towards the United States, you may, according to your discretion, enter into a temporary agreement of neutrality. But this must be done only on condition that our ships have free access to their ports, and equal commercial rights with those of other nations; that you are allowed to take in water and fuel; to purchase supplies; to go to and from shore without obstruction, as in time of peace; and that the provinces, which are thus neutral, shall absolutely abstain from contributing towards the continuance of the war by the central government of Mexico against the United States.

Generally, you will exercise the rights of a belligerent, and bear in mind that the greater advantages you obtain, the more speedy and the more advantageous will be the peace.

Should Commodore Biddle be in the Pacific, off the shores of Mexico, at the time you arrive there, you will report yourself to him; and as long as he remains off the coast of Mexico, you will act under his direction in concert with him, communicating to him these instructions.

The Savannah, the Warren, and the Levant, ought soon to return. If you hear of peace between the United States and Mexico, you will at once send them home.

If war continues, yon will send them home singly, or in company, at the earliest day they can be spared. The Savannah will go to New York, and the Warren and Levant to Norfolk.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Com. W. B. Shubrick,

Appointed to command the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

No. 10.

Navy Department, November 30, 1846.

Commodore: Your despatches, Nos. 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, and 115, and letters from Commodore Perry of the 15th, 16th, and 21st November, have been received.

The information communicated has been very satisfactory, especially that contained in your No. 106, of the 7th October, 1846.

The successful operations in the Tabasco river reflect great credit on the officers and men charged with its execution. In this bold incursion so far into the interior, the skill and courage displayed, the humane and generous course of conduct observed, and the sweeping capture or destruction of the enemy's shipping, have given the liveliest satisfaction to the President and to the department.

The success of your expedition against Tampico entitles you and those under your command to the thanks of the department.

Your course in sending Commodore Perry to New Orleans, and the measures taken by him and the officers of the army in co-operation with him, as detailed in his letters, are approved.

Your determination to hold possession of Tampico meets my earnest wishes. It is difficult to estimate the important consequences which will result, directly and indirectly, from its occupation in the prosecution of the war. The Secretary of war will immediately issue the necessary orders to furnish an adequate garrison and the arms to secure it.

So soon as the troops shall arrive, you will turn over to the commanding officer the place, and, returning your detachments to their respective vessels, and manning and arming your prizes, resume your operations with the naval forces, co-operating with the military force as shall be deemed best for the secure possession of Tampico, and harrassing the enemy at other points.

Your movements in this respect are confidently left to your own discretion.

It will be well to despatch one of the frigates, or other vessels, to the Brazos, to communicate with the commanding officer at Point Isabel, and aid in the transportation of troops to Tampico.

Your charter of the Abrasia was at a favorable rate; but the high prices to which the present demand for freights has raised the charter of suitable vessels has made it economical to purchase, for the use of the squadron, another store-ship to supply water and provisions, and a large well-found vessel to supply the steamers with coal. The necessary examinations have been made, and Commodore Morris leaves here to-day to make the purchase at Baltimore, New York, or Boston. They will sail without delay, with provisions and coals; and the arms which you have requested will be forwarded by the first which shall sail, or sooner if an opportunity offer.

A rendezvous will be opened at New Orleans without delay, with orders to ship four or five hundred men, who will be sent forward to Tampico for duty in the squadron, as the enlistments are made in numbers justifying the expense.

A list of the officers ordered to report to you is enclosed. There is a strong desire amongst the officers for service in the gulf, and the department has withheld orders to many, under the supposition that the complements were full. The necessity for an increased number is appreciated ; and further additions will be made, if found important to the greater efficiency of the forces under your command.

The important duty in regard to commercial intercourse with Tampico, while in our occupation by military conquest, will be regulated by the directions given in regard to Matamoras. Copies of the instructions in regard to the trade of that place are enclosed.

The circumstances in which your command is placed, and the difficulty of frequent communication with you, make it proper that you should have authority, in your discretion, to send any of the vessels north which you may think it important to detach, either from the condition of the crew or the vessel. That authority is given ; but you will take care not to weaken your squadron by the exercise of this authority without advising the department, so that the deficiency may be supplied with as little delay as possible.

I have taken measures to provide some light field-pieces, with carriages, for operations on shore. They will be sent to the squadron as soon as they are ready.

Congratulating you on the important results achieved, under the disadvantages which have surrounded you, I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

Commodore David Connor,
Commanding U. S. naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico.

Navy Department, November 30, 1846.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

Treasury Department,
June 11, 1846.

It is deemed important in the present juncture of affairs, growing out of the existing state of war between the United States and Mexico, to furnish the officers of the customs with proper directions for their government. The department has accordingly prepared the following instructions, to which their especial attention is called, and a strict conformity thereto enjoined.

By the law of nations, as recognized by repeated decisions of our judicial tribunals, the existence of a state of war interdicts all trade or commerce between the citizens of the two nations engaged in the war. It consequently follows that neither vessels nor merchandise of any description can be allowed to proceed from ports or places in the United States to ports or places in the territories of Mexico, with the exception of such ports or places in the latter country as may be at the time in the actual possession of the United States forces.

The interdiction referred to applies equally to neutral vessels and their cargoes, proceeding directly from any of our ports to ports or places in the territories of Mexico. In all such cases, therefore, it becomes your duty, and you are accordingly directed to refuse clearances to all vessels and their cargoes departing from our ports to ports or places in the country mentioned, with the exception before stated.

The 26th article of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the united Mexican States, bearing date the 5th of April, 1831, contains the following stipulations, which are in full force and binding on the contracting parties, and are to be strictly observed and respected by the United States and their officers, to wit:

"For the greater security of the intercourse between the citizens of the United States of America and of the united Mexican States, it is agreed now for then, that if there should be at any time hereafter an interruption of the friendly relations which now exist, or a war unhappily break out between the two contracting parties, there shall be allowed the term of six months to the merchants residing on the coast, and one year to those residing in the interior of the States and Territories of each other respectively, to arrange their business, dispose of their effects, or transport them wheresoever they may please, giving them a safe conduct to protect them to the port they may designate. Those citizens who may be established in the States and Territories aforesaid, exercising any other occupation or trade, shall be permitted to remain in the uninterrupted enjoyment of their liberty and property, so long as they conduct themselves peaceably and do not commit any offence against the laws; and their goods and effects, of whatever class and condition they may be, shall not be subject to any embargo or sequestration whatever, nor to any charge nor tax other than may be established upon similar goods and effects belonging to the citizens of the State in which they reside respectively; nor shall the debts between individuals, nor moneys in the public funds, or in public or private banks, nor shares in companies, be confiscated, embargoed or detained."

It is to be specially noted, that the privileges mentioned in the article of the treaty quoted apply exclusively to citizen merchants actually residing in the countries, respectively, at the breaking out of the war. Hence the removal from this country of any property or effects belonging to merchants not residing therein is not authorized by the treaty, and is consequently prohibited by the rules of international law.

It is deemed proper to call the attention of the respective officers of the customs to any private arming and equipment of vessels that may take place in their ports, with a view to ascertain, as far as may be practicable, the true object and destination of all such vessels, in order that due measures may be taken to frustrate any design or attempt to afford aid or assistance of any kind to the enemy.

Should any case arise occasioning doubt in your mind as to the proper course to be pursued, you will advise with the United States district attorney, and, if found necessary, will submit the matter to the department for instructions.

The latest intelligence received at the department leads to the conclusion that the State of Yucatan would at least remain neutral during the present war, and probably assume the attitude of a separate and independent sovereignty, desiring to maintain the most friendly relations with the United States. That being the case, the ports of Yucatan would not be subject to the interdiction of commerce applicable to Mexico generally.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
June 30, 1846.

The circular of this department of the 11th instant contained the following paragraph:

"By the law of nations, as recognised by repeated decisions of our judicial tribunals, the existence of a state of war interdicts all trade or commerce between the citizens of the two nations engaged in the war. It consequently follows, that neither vessels nor merchandise of any description can be allowed to proceed from ports or places in the United States to ports or places in the territories of Mexico, with the exception of such ports or places in the latter country as may be at the time in the actual possession of the United States forces."

Matamoras is now in the actual possession of the forces of the United States, and perhaps other ports and places on the same side of the Rio Grande.

In case of the application of vessels for clearances for the port of Matamoras, you will issue them under the following circumstances:

1st. To American vessels only.

2d. To such vessels carrying only articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of imports from foreign countries to our own, upon which the duties have been fully paid; and upon all such goods, whether of our own or of foreign countries, no duties will be chargeable at the port of Matamoras so long as it is in the possession of the forces of the United States.

In issuing this order, it is not intended to interfere with the authority of General Taylor to exclude such articles, including spirituous liquors or contraband of war, the introduction of which he may consider injurious to our military operations in Mexico.

Foreign imports which may be re-exported in our vessels to Matamoras will not be entitled to any drawback of duty; for, if this were permitted, they would be carried from that port into the United States, and thus evade the payment of all duties.

Whenever any other port or place upon the Mexican side of the Rio Grande shall have passed into the actual possession of the forces of the United States, such ports and places will be subject to all the above instructions which are applicable to the port of Matamoras.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
October 23, 1846.

In consequence of the intelligence received at the department, it becomes expedient and proper to rescind the privilege granted to the ports of Yucatan in my circular instructions of the 11th of June, 1846, and to subject said ports to the interdictions of commerce applicable to the ports of Mexico generally, as enjoined by said instructions. You are accordingly directed to refuse clearances to all vessels and their cargoes departing from our ports to ports or places in Yucatan.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 11.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
December 16, 1846.

COMMODORE: Your despatch dated at Tampico, November 17th ultimo, is received.

It seems proper, to meet your wishes, that I instruct you more fully on the subject of the import and export trade of that port. In my letter of the 30th November ultimo, I informed you that your duty in regard to commercial intercourse with Tampico, while in our occupation by military conquest, will be regulated by the directions given in regard to Matamoras. Copies of the instructions of the Treasury Department on that subject were enclosed.

You will perceive that the privilege of entry is confined—

1. To American vessels only.
2. To such vessels carrying only articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of imports from foreign countries to our own, upon which the duties have been fully paid in a collection district of the United States, with proper clearances from the officers of the customs of the United States; and upon all such goods, whether of our own or of foreign countries, no duties will be chargeable at the port of Tampico so long as it is in the possession of the United States.

Beyond this it is not deemed proper, by the President, that vessels or cargoes of other nations shall be admitted.

But, in the spirit of accommodation to neutral commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury will, without delay, authorize clearances for Tampico of foreign cargoes in American bottoms to be granted at our custom-houses on payment of duties, and without unlading.

In regard to the export trade, vessels thus admitted to entry at Tampico may take out return cargoes of the property of citizens of the United States, or neutrals, without payment of any export duty; and the British steamer or national vessels of war may, without obstruction, be permitted to export specie, the property of neutrals. Such export should rather be encouraged, because it promotes the interests of general commerce, and withdraws from Mexico means which might be seized on to aid our enemy in prosecution of the war.

You will, if you are still in military command at Tampico, make the substance of this despatch publicly known as the regulation of the trade of the place while in the military occupation of the United States. If you shall have turned over the command to the army officer commanding, you will furnish him with a copy of this despatch. The honorable Secretary of War will immediately communicate with him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

Flag Ship Levant,
At sea, July 31, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that on the 7th June I received, at Mazatlan, information that the Mexican troops, six or seven thousand strong, had, by order of the Mexican government, invaded the territory of the United States north of the Rio Grande, and had attacked the forces under General Taylor, and that the squadron of the United States were blockading the coast of Mexico on the gulf.

These hostilities I considered would justify my commencing offensive operations on the west coast; I therefore sailed on the 8th, in the Savannah, for the coast of California, to carry out the orders of the department of the 24th June, 1845, leaving the Warren at Mazatlan, to bring me any despatches or important information that might reach there. I arrived at Monterey on the 2d of July, where I found the Cyane and Levant, and learned that the Portsmouth was at San Francisco, to which places they had been previously ordered to await further instructions.

On the morning of the 7th, having previously examined the defences and localities of the town, I sent Captain Mervine with the accompanying summons (A) to the military commandant of Monterey, requiring him to surrender the place forthwith to the forces of the United States under my command. At 9h. 30m. a. m., I received his reply, (B) stating he was not authorized to surrender the place, and referred me to the commanding general of California, Don José Castro.

Every arrangement having been made the day previous, the necessary force (about 250 seamen and marines) was immediately embarked in the boats of the squadron, and landed at 10 o'clock, under cover of the guns of the ships, with great promptitude and good order, under the immediate command of Captain Wm. Mervine, assisted by Commander H. N. Page, as second.

The forces were immediately formed and marched to the custom-house, where my proclamation to the inhabitants of California (C) was read, the standard of the United States hoisted, amid three hearty cheers of the troops and foreigners present, and a salute of 21 guns fired by all the ships. Immediately afterwards, the proclamation, both in English and Spanish, was posted up about the town, and two justices of the peace appointed to preserve order and punish delinquencies, the alcades declining to serve.

Previous to landing, the accompanying "General Order" (D) was read to the crews of all the ships, and I am most happy to state that I feel confident that the inhabitants of Monterey, and all other places where our forces have appeared, will do them and myself the justice to say that not the least depredation or slightest insult or irregularity has been committed, from the moment of our landing until my departure.

Immediately after taking possession of Monterey, I despatched a courier to General Castro, the military commandant of California, with a letter (E) and a copy of my proclamation, to which I received a reply, (F.) On the 9th, I despatched a letter, (G.) by courier, to Señor Don Pio Pico, the governor, at Santa Barbara.

On the 16th of July I despatched orders, by sea, to Commander Montgomery, to take immediate possession of the bay of San Francisco, &c.; and, on the 7th, a duplicate of that order, by land, which he received on the evening of the 8th; and at 7 a. m., of the 9th, he hoisted the flag at San Francisco, read and posted up my proclamation, and took possession of that part of the country in the name of the United States.

* * * * * * * *

On the 23d, my health being such as to prevent my attending to so much, and such laborious duties, I directed Commodore Stockton to assume the command of the forces and operations on shore; and, on the 29th, having determined to return to the United States via Panama, I hoisted my broad pendant on board the Levant and sailed for Mazatlan and Panama, leaving the remainder of the squadron under his command, believing that no further opposition would be made to our taking possession of the whole of the Californias, (as General Castro had less than one hundred men,) and that I could render much more important service by returning to the United States with the least possible delay, to explain to the government the situation and wants of that country, than I could by remaining in command in my infirm state of health.

* * * * * * * *

Hoping the course I have pursued will meet the approbation of the department, I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant, &c.,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

Sir: The central government of Mexico, having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, the two nations are now actually at war. In consequence, I call upon you, in the name of the United States of America, to surrender forthwith to the arms of that nation, under my command, the forts, military posts, and stations under your command, together with all troops, arms, munitions of war, and public property of every description under your control and jurisdiction in California.

The immediate compliance with this summons will probably prevent the sacrifice of human life and the horrors of war, which I most anxiously desire to avoid.

MILITARY COMMANDANCY OF MONTEREY.

The undersigned, captain of artillery in the Mexican army and military commandant of this post, represents to the Señor commodore of the naval forces of the United States in this bay that he is not authorized to surrender the place, having no orders to that effect; for the said matter may be arranged by the Señor commodore with the commandant general, to whom I transmitted the communication delivered to me for the said Señor, the undersigned withdrawing and leaving the town peaceful and without a soldier;

nor, according to information from the treasurer, is there any public property or munitions.

With which the note of the Señor commodore is answered, and tendering him my respects.

Señor Commodore
of the naval forces of the U. S., in this bay.

C.

To the inhabitants of California:

The central government of Mexico having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, by invading its territory and attacking the troops of the United States stationed on the north side of the Rio Grande, and with a force of seven thousand men under the command of General Arista, which army was totally destroyed, and all their artillery, baggage, &c., captured on the 8th and 9th of May last, by a force of two thousand three hundred men under the command of General Taylor, and the city of Matamoras taken and occupied by the forces of the United States, and the two nations being actually at war by this transaction, I shall hoist the standard of the United States at Monterey immediately, and shall carry it throughout California.

I declare to the inhabitants of California that, although I come in arms with a powerful force, I do not come among them as an enemy to California: on the contrary, I come as their best friend, as henceforward California will be a portion of the United States, and its peaceful inhabitants will enjoy the same rights and privileges they now enjoy, together with the privilege of choosing their own magistrates and other officers, for the administration of justice among themselves, and the same protection will be extended to them as to any other State in the Union. They will also enjoy a permanent government, under which life, property, and the constitutional right and lawful security to worship the Creator in the way most congenial to each one's sense of duty, will be secured, which, unfortunately, the central government of Mexico cannot afford them, destroyed as her resources are by internal factions and corrupt officers, who create constant revolutions to promote their own interests and oppress the people. Under the flag of the United States, California will be free from all such troubles and expense; consequently, the country will rapidly advance and improve both in agriculture and commerce, as, of course, the revenue laws will be the same in California as in all other parts of the United States, affording them all manufactures and produce of the United States free of any duty, and all foreign goods at one-quarter of the duty they now pay. A great increase in the value of real estate and the products of California may also be anticipated.

With the great interest and kind feelings I know the government and people of the United States possess towards the citizens of California, the country cannot but improve more rapidly than any other on the continent of America.

Such of the inhabitants of California, whether native or foreigners, as may not be disposed to accept the high privileges of citizenship, and to live peaceably under the government of the United States, will be allowed time to dispose of their property, and to remove out of the country, if they choose, without any restriction; or remain in it, observing strict neutrality.

With full confidence in the honor and integrity of the inhabitants of the country, I invite the judges, alcaldes, and other civil officers, to retain their offices, and to execute their functions as heretofore, that the public tranquility may not be disturbed; at least, until the government of the Territory can be more definitely arranged.

All persons holding titles to real estate, or in quiet possession of lands under a color of right, shall have those titles and rights guarantied to them.

All churches, and the property they contain, in possession of the clergy of California, shall continue in the same rights and possessions they now enjoy.

All provisions and supplies of every kind, furnished by the inhabitants for the use of the United States ships and soldiers, will be paid for at fair rates; and no private property will be taken for public use without just compensation at the moment.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States
naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

GENERAL ORDER.

Flag Ship Savannah, July 7, 1846.

We are about to land on the Territory of Mexico, with whom the United States are at war. To strike her flag, and to hoist our own in the place of it, is our duty.

It is not only our duty to take California, but to preserve it afterwards as a part of the United States, at all hazards. To accomplish this, it is of the first importance to cultivate the good opinion of the inhabitants, whom we must reconcile.

I scarcely consider it necessary for me to caution American seamen and marines against the detestable crime of plundering and maltreating unoffending inhabitants.

That no one may misunderstand his duty, the following regulations must be strictly adhered to, as no violation can hope to escape the severest punishment:

1st. On landing, no man is to leave the shore until the commanding officer gives the order to march.

2d. No gun is to be fired, or other act of hostility committed, without express orders from the officer commanding the party.

3d. The officers and boat keepers will keep their respective boats as close to the shore as they will safely float, taking care they do not lay aground, and remain in them, prepared to defend themselves against attack, and attentively watch for signals from the ships, as well as from the party on shore.

4th. No man is to quit the ranks or to enter any house for any pretext whatever, without express orders from an officer. Let every man avoid insult or offence to any unoffending inhabitant, and especially avoid that eternal disgrace which would be attached to our names and our country's name by indignity offered to a single female, even let her standing be however low it may.

5th. Plunder of every kind is strictly forbidden. Not only does the plundering of the smallest article from a prize forfeit all claim to prize money, but the offender must expect to be severely punished.

6th. Finally, let me entreat you, one and all, not to tarnish our hope of bright success by any act that we shall be ashamed to acknowledge before God and our country.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the U. S. naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

COMMANDANCY GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA.

The undersigned, commandant general of Upper California, has the honor to represent to the Señor commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States in the Pacific ocean, now in Monterey, that a band of adventurers, headed by Mr. J. C. Frémont, a captain in the army of the United States, forcibly took possession of the post of Sonoma, hoisting an unknown flag, making prisoners of the chiefs and officers who were there, and committing assassinations and every kind of injury to the lives and property of the inhabitants there. The undersigned is ignorant to what government belong the invaders of that part of the department, and a party of them who are in the neighborhood of Santa Clara; and as he cannot believe that they belong to the forces commanded by the said Señor Commodore, he will be obliged to him if he will be pleased to make him an explanation on this subject, in order that he may act in conformity with his reply, for neither the undersigned, nor a single citizen of the country, will permit excesses of any kind to be committed by these bands.

God and Liberty!

JOSE CASTRO.

To the Señor Commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States
in the Pacific ocean, in Monterey.

Head-quarters, San Juan de Bautista,
July 9, 1846.

G.

Flag Ship Savannah,
Bay of Monterey, July 9, 1846.

I have the honor to enclose, herewith, to your excellency, copies of my summons to General Castro to surrender the country, &c., under his jurisdiction, to the United States forces under my command, together with a copy of my proclamation to the inhabitants of California, and the general order issued to the forces under my command just previous to my landing; and I assure your excellency that not the least impropriety has been committed, and that the business and social intercourse of the town have not been disturbed in the slightest degree.

I beg your excellency to feel assured that although I come in arms with a powerful force, I come as the best friend of California; and I invite your excellency to meet me at Monterey, that I may satisfy you and the people of California of the fact.

I pledge the word and honor of an American officer that your excellency will be received with all the respect due to your distinguished situation; and that you can depart at any moment you may think proper, and feel every confidence that an American officer expects when his word of honor is pledged.

I have already employed all the means in my power to stop the sacrifice of human life by the party in the north, and trust I shall succeed, provided there is no further opposition.

I tender your excellency my cordial respect and high consideration.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean, and of the Territory of California.

To his Excellency Sr. Don Pio Pico,
Angeles.

No. 13.

Ciudad de los Angeles,
August 28, 1846.

Sir: You have already been informed of my having, on the 23d of July, assumed the command of the United States forces on the west coast of Mexico. I have now the honor to inform you that the flag of the United States is flying from every commanding position in the Territory of California, and that this rich and beautiful country belongs to the United States, and is forever free from Mexican dominion.

On the day after I took this command, I organized the "California battalion of mounted riflemen" by the appointment of all the necessary officers, and received them as volunteers into the service of the United States. Captain Frémont was appointed major, and Lieutenant Gillespie captain, of the battalion.

The next day they were embarked on board the sloop-of-war Cyane, Commander Dupont, and sailed from Monterey for San Diego, that they might be landed to the southward of the Mexican forces, amounting to 500 men, under General Castro and Governor Pico, and who were well fortified at the "Camp of the Mesa," three miles from this city.

A few days after the Cyane left, I sailed in the Congress for San Pedro, the port of entry for this department, and thirty miles from this place, where I landed with my gallant sailor army, and marched directly for the redoubtable "Camp of the Mesa."

But when we arrived within twelve miles of the camp, General Castro broke ground and run for the city of Mexico. The governor of the territory, and the other principal officers, separated in different parties, and ran away in different directions.

Unfortunately, the mounted riflemen did not get up in time to head them off. We have since, however, taken most of the principal officers; the rest will be permitted to remain quiet at home, under the restrictions contained in my proclamation of the 17th.

On the 13th of August, having been joined by Major Frémont with about eighty riflemen, and Mr. Larkin, late American consul, we entered this famous "City of the Angels," the capital of the Californias, and took unmolested possession of the government house.

Thus, in less than a month after I assumed the command of the United States force in California, we have chased the Mexican army more than three hundred miles along the coast; pursued them thirty miles in the interior of their own country; routed and dispersed them, and secured the Territory to the United States; ended the war; restored peace and harmony among the people; and put a civil government into successful operation.

The Warren and Cyane sailed, a few days since, to blockade the west coast of Mexico, south of San Diego; and having almost finished my work here, I will sail in the Congress as soon as the store-ship arrives, and I can get supplied with provisions, on a cruise for the protection of our commerce; and dispose of the other vessels as most effectually to attain that object, and, at the same time, to keep the southern coast strictly blockaded.

When I leave the Territory, I will appoint Major Frémont to be governor, and Lieutenant Gillespie to be secretary.

I enclose you several papers, marked from 1 to 14 inclusive, inincluding this letter and the first number of the "Californian," by which you will see what sort of a government I have established, and how I am proceeding.

I have not time to specify individual merit; but I cannot omit to say that I do not think that ardent patriotism and indomitable courage have ever been more evident than amongst the officers and men, 360 in number, from the frigate Congress, who accompanied me on this trying and hazardous march—a longer march, perhaps, than has ever been made in the interior of a country by sailors, after an enemy. I would likewise say, that the conduct of the officers and men of the whole squadron has been praiseworthy.

I have received your despatch of the 13th of May, and at the same time a Mexican account of the proceedings of Congress, and the President's proclamation, by the United States ship Warren, from Mazatlan.

Faithfully, your obedient servant,
R. F. STOCKTON.

To the Hon. George Bancroft,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

No. 3.

To the people of California:

On my approach to this place with the forces under my command, José Castro, the commandant general of California, buried his artillery and abandoned his fortified camp "of the Mesa," and fled, it is believed, towards Mexico.

With the sailors, the marines, and the California battalion of mounted riflemen, we entered the "City of the Angels," the capital of California, on the 13th of August, and hoisted the North American flag.

The flag of the United States is now flying from every commanding position in the Territory, and California is entirely free from Mexican dominion.

The Territory of California now belongs to the United States, and will be governed, as soon as circumstances will permit, by officers and laws similar to those by which the other Territories of the United States are regulated and protected.

But, until the governor, the secretary, and council are appointed, and the various civil departments of the government are arranged, military law will prevail, and the commander-in-chief will be the governor and protector of the Territory.

In the mean time the people will be permitted, and are now requested, to meet in their several towns and departments, at such time and place as they may see fit, to elect civil officers to fill the places of those who decline to continue in office, and to administer the laws according to the former usages of the Territory. In all cases where the people fail to elect, the commander-in-chief and governor will make the appointments himself.

All persons, of whatever religion or nation, who faithfully adhere to the new government, will be considered as citizens of the Territory, and will be zealously and thoroughly protected in the liberty of conscience, their persons, and property.

No persons will be permitted to remain in the Territory who do not agree to support the existing government; and all military men who desire to remain are required to take an oath that they will not take up arms against it, or do or say anything to disturb its peace.

Nor will any persons, come from where they may, be permitted to settle in the Territory, who do not pledge themselves to be, in all respects, obedient to the laws which may be from time to time enacted by the proper authorities of the Territory.

All persons who, without special permission, are found with arms outside of their own houses, will be considered as enemies, and will be shipped out of the country.

All thieves will be put to hard labor on the public works, and there kept until compensation is made for the property stolen.

The California battalion of mounted riflemen will be kept in the service of the Territory, and constantly on duty, to prevent and punish any aggressions by the Indians, or any other persons, upon the property of individuals, or the peace of the Territory; and California shall hereafter be so governed and defended as to give security to the inhabitants, and to defy the power of Mexico.

All persons are required, as long as the Territory is under martial law, to be within their houses from 10 o'clock at night until sunrise in the morning.

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

CIUDAD DE LOS ANGELES,
August 17, 1846.

No. 5.

To the people of California:

On the 15th day of September, 1846, an election will be held in the several towns and districts of California, at the places and hours at which such elections have usually been holden, for the purpose of electing the alcaldes and other municipal officers for one year.

In those places where alcaldes have been appointed by the present government, they will hold the election.

In places where no alcaldes have been appointed by the present government, the former alcaldes are authorized and required to hold the election.

Given under my hand this twenty-second day of August, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, at the government house, "Ciudad de los Angeles."

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

No. 6.

I, Robert F. Stockton, commander-in-chief of the United States forces in the Pacific ocean, and governor of the Territory of California, and commander-in-chief of the army of the same, do hereby make known to all men that, having by right of conquest taken possession of that Territory, known by the name of Upper and Lower California, do now declare it to be a Territory of the United States, under the name of the Territory of California.

And I do by these presents further order and decree that the government of the said Territory of California shall be, until altered by the proper authority of the United States, constituted in manner and form as follows—that is to say:

The executive power and authority in and over the said Territory shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The governor shall reside within the said Territory; shall be commander-in-chief of the army thereof; shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve of all laws passed by the legislative council before they shall take effect. He may grant pardons for offences against the laws of the said Territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon: he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

There shall be a secretary of the said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. He shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the legislative council hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the governor in his executive department. He shall transmit one copy of the laws and one copy of the executive proceedings, on or before the first Monday in December in each year, to the President of the United States; and, at the same time, two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the use of Congress. And, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor from the Territory, the secretary shall have, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the governor, during such vacancy or necessary absence.

The legislative power shall be vested in the governor and legislative council. The legislative council shall consist of seven persons, who shall be appointed by the governor for two years; after which they shall be annually elected by the people.

The power of the legislative council of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the land or property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.

All the laws of the legislative council shall be submitted to, and, if disapproved by, the governor, the same shall be null and of no effect.

The municipal officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, heretofore existing in the Territory, shall continue to exist, and all their proceedings be regulated and controlled by the laws of Mexico, until otherwise provided for by the governor and legislative council.

All officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, shall be elected every year by the people, in such manner as may be provided by the governor and legislative council.

The legislative council of the Territory of California shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said session, or as soon thereafter as may by them be deemed expedient, the said governor and legislative council shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for said Territory, at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by the said governor and legislative council, and the time and place of the annual commencement of the session of the said legislative council thereafter shall be on such day and place as the governor and council may appoint.

Sir: It has been deemed advisable to adopt the enclosed tariff of duties.

To ascertain the true value of the goods in the ports at which they are entered, two judicious and disinterested persons must be appointed to make the appraisement; one selected by the government, the other by the party owning the goods.

Bonds with good security must be given for the payment of the duties.

mander of H. M. sloop Daring, in relation to British interests in that city. I have stated in my replies that, at present, no relaxation in the rules of the blockade already established can be made, and that the port will remain closed to all neutral nations, as heretofore. On these matters, as well as in regard to the continued shipment of treasure from this place, on the account of English merchants, in the steam packet, I shall be glad to be made acquainted with the views of the department."

Off the city of Tampico, November 15, 1846.

Commodore Connor declines a capitulation with the authorities of Tampico, as he considers it unnecessary.

He accepts the surrender of the city, and takes military possession of it.

He assures the inhabitants, at the same time, that he will not interfere with their municipal regulations, or their religion; and that private property shall be respected, provided that the public property of all kinds be delivered up at once, and in good faith.

Should an assault be made by the inhabitants of the city on the American forces, the inhabitants will be held responsible for the consequences.

Commodore Connor, so long as the authorities and inhabitants of the city observe good faith towards him, will consider them under his protection. A different course will expose them to serious evils.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GENERAL TAYLOR.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

The correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, not already published.

March 1, 1847.

Read, and laid upon the table.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I communicate, herewith, a report of the Secretary of War, with the accompanying documents, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, requesting the President "to communicate to the House of Representatives all the correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, which has not yet been published, and the publication of which may not be deemed detrimental to the public service; also, the correspondence of the quartermaster general, in relation to the transportation for General Taylor's army; also, the reports of Brigadier Generals Hamar and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades on the 21st of of September last."

As some of these documents relate to military operations of our forces which may not have been fully executed, I might have deemed it proper to withhold parts of them, under the apprehension that their publication, at this time, would be "detrimental to the public service;" but I am satisfied that these operations are now so far advanced, and that the enemy has already received so much information from other sources in relation to the intended movements of our army, as to render this precaution unnecessary.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, February 27, 1847.

Whenever any other port or place upon the Mexican side of the Rio Grande shall have passed into the actual possession of the forces of the United States, such ports and places will be subject to all the above instructions which are applicable to the port of Matamoras.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
October 23, 1846.

In consequence of the intelligence received at the department, it becomes expedient and proper to rescind the privilege granted to the ports of Yucatan in my circular instructions of the 11th of June, 1846, and to subject said ports to the interdictions of commerce applicable to the ports of Mexico generally, as enjoined by said instructions. You are accordingly directed to refuse clearances to all vessels and their cargoes departing from our ports to ports or places in Yucatan.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 11.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
December 16, 1846.

COMMODORE: Your despatch dated at Tampico, November 17th ultimo, is received.

It seems proper, to meet your wishes, that I instruct you more fully on the subject of the import and export trade of that port. In my letter of the 30th November ultimo, I informed you that your duty in regard to commercial intercourse with Tampico, while in our occupation by military conquest, will be regulated by the directions given in regard to Matamoras. Copies of the instructions of the Treasury Department on that subject were enclosed.

You will perceive that the privilege of entry is confined—

1. To American vessels only.
2. To such vessels carrying only articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of imports from foreign countries to our own, upon which the duties have been fully paid in a collection district of the United States, with proper clearances from the officers of the customs of the United States; and upon all such goods, whether of our own or of foreign countries, no duties will be chargeable at the port of Tampico so long as it is in the possession of the United States.

Beyond this it is not deemed proper, by the President, that vessels or cargoes of other nations shall be admitted.

But, in the spirit of accommodation to neutral commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury will, without delay, authorize clearances for Tampico of foreign cargoes in American bottoms to be granted at our custom-houses on payment of duties, and without unlading.

In regard to the export trade, vessels thus admitted to entry at Tampico may take out return cargoes of the property of citizens of the United States, or neutrals, without payment of any export duty; and the British steamer or national vessels of war may, without obstruction, be permitted to export specie, the property of neutrals. Such export should rather be encouraged, because it promotes the interests of general commerce, and withdraws from Mexico means which might be seized on to aid our enemy in prosecution of the war.

You will, if you are still in military command at Tampico, make the substance of this despatch publicly known as the regulation of the trade of the place while in the military occupation of the United States. If you shall have turned over the command to the army officer commanding, you will furnish him with a copy of this despatch. The honorable Secretary of War will immediately communicate with him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Y. MASON.

FLAG SHIP LEVANT,
At sea, July 31, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 7th June I received, at Mazatlan, information that the Mexican troops, six or seven thousand strong, had, by order of the Mexican government, invaded the territory of the United States north of the Rio Grande, and had attacked the forces under General Taylor, and that the squadron of the United States were blockading the coast of Mexico on the gulf.

These hostilities I considered would justify my commencing offensive operations on the west coast; I therefore sailed on the 8th, in the Savannah, for the coast of California, to carry out the orders of the department of the 24th June, 1845, leaving the Warren at Mazatlan, to bring me any despatches or important information that might reach there. I arrived at Monterey on the 2d of July, where I found the Cyane and Levant, and learned that the Portsmouth was at San Francisco, to which places they had been previously ordered to await further instructions.

On the morning of the 7th, having previously examined the defences and localities of the town, I sent Captain Mervine with the accompanying summons (A) to the military commandant of Monterey, requiring him to surrender the place forthwith to the forces of the United States under my command. At 9h. 30m. a. m., I received his reply, (B) stating he was not authorized to surrender the place, and referred me to the commanding general of California, Don José Castro.

Every arrangement having been made the day previous, the necessary force (about 250 seamen and marines) was immediately embarked in the boats of the squadron, and landed at 10 o'clock, under cover of the guns of the ships, with great promptitude and good order, under the immediate command of Captain Wm. Mervine, assisted by Commander H. N. Page, as second.

The forces were immediately formed and marched to the custom-house, where my proclamation to the inhabitants of California (C) was read, the standard of the United States hoisted, amid three hearty cheers of the troops and foreigners present, and a salute of 21 guns fired by all the ships. Immediately afterwards, the proclamation, both in English and Spanish, was posted up about the town, and two justices of the peace appointed to preserve order and punish delinquencies, the alcades declining to serve.

Previous to landing, the accompanying "General Order" (D) was read to the crews of all the ships, and I am most happy to state that I feel confident that the inhabitants of Monterey, and all other places where our forces have appeared, will do them and myself the justice to say that not the least depredation or slightest insult or irregularity has been committed, from the moment of our landing until my departure.

Immediately after taking possession of Monterey, I despatched a courier to General Castro, the military commandant of California, with a letter (E) and a copv of my proclamation, to which I received a reply, (F.) On the 9th, I despatched a letter, (G.) by courier, to Señor Don Pio Pico, the governor, at Santa Barbara.

On the 16th of July I despatched orders, by sea, to Commander Montgomery, to take immediate possession of the bay of San Francisco, &c.; and, on the 7th, a duplicate of that order, by land, which he received on the evening of the 8th; and at 7 a. m., of the 9th, he hoisted the flag at San Francisco, read and posted up my proclamation, and took possession of that part of the country in the name of the United States.

* * * * * * * *

On the 23d, my health being such as to prevent my attending to so much, and such laborious duties, I directed Commodore Stockton to assume the command of the forces and operations on shore; and, on the 29th, having determined to return to the United States via Panama, I hoisted my broad pendant on board the Levant and sailed for Mazatlan and Panama, leaving the remainder of the squadron under his command, believing that no further opposition would be made to our taking possession of the whole of the Californias, (as General Castro had less than one hundred men,) and that I could render much more important service by returning to the United States with the least possible delay, to explain to the government the situation and wants of that country, than I could by remaining in command in my infirm state of health.

* * * * * * * *

Hoping the course I have pursued will meet the approbation of the department, I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant, &c.,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

Sir: The central government of Mexico, having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, the two nations are now actually at war. In consequence, I call upon you, in the name of the United States of America, to surrender forthwith to the arms of that nation, under my command, the forts, military posts, and stations under your command, together with all troops, arms, munitions of war, and public property of every description under your control and jurisdiction in California.

The immediate compliance with this summons will probably prevent the sacrifice of human life and the horrors of war, which I most anxiously desire to avoid.

MILITARY COMMANDANCY OF MONTEREY.

The undersigned, captain of artillery in the Mexican army and military commandant of this post, represents to the Señor commodore of the naval forces of the United States in this bay that he is not authorized to surrender the place, having no orders to that effect; for the said matter may be arranged by the Señor commodore with the commandant general, to whom I transmitted the communication delivered to me for the said Señor, the undersigned withdrawing and leaving the town peaceful and without a soldier;

nor, according to information from the treasurer, is there any public property or munitions.

With which the note of the Señor commodore is answered, and tendering him my respects.

MARIANO SILVA.

God and liberty ! Monterey, June [July] 7th, 1846.

Señor Commodore
of the naval forces of the U. S., in this bay.

C.

To the inhabitants of California:

The central government of Mexico having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, by invading its territory and attacking the troops of the United States stationed on the north side of the Rio Grande, and with a force of seven thousand men under the command of General Arista, which army was totally destroyed, and all their artillery, baggage, &c., captured on the 8th and 9th of May last, by a force of two thousand three hundred men under the command of General Taylor, and the city of Matamoras taken and occupied by the forces of the United States, and the two nations being actually at war by this transaction, I shall hoist the standard of the United States at Monterey immediately, and shall carry it throughout California.

I declare to the inhabitants of California that, although I come in arms with a powerful force, I do not come among them as an enemy to California : on the contrary, I come as their best friend, as henceforward California will be a portion of the United States, and its peaceful inhabitants will enjoy the same rights and privileges they now enjoy, together with the privilege of choosing their own magistrates and other officers, for the administration of justice among themselves, and the same protection will be extended to them as to any other State in the Union. They will also enjoy a permanent government, under which life, property, and the constitutional right and lawful security to worship the Creator in the way most congenial to each one's sense of duty, will be secured, which, unfortunately, the central government of Mexico cannot afford them, destroyed as her resources are by internal factions and corrupt officers, who create constant revolutions to promote their own interests and oppress the people. Under the flag of the United States, California will be free from all such troubles and expense; consequently, the country will rapidly advance and improve both in agriculture and commerce, as, of course, the revenue laws will be the same in California as in all other parts of the United States, affording them all manufactures and produce of the United States free of any duty, and all foreign goods at one-quarter of the duty they now pay. A great increase in the value of real estate and the products of California may also be anticipated.

With the great interest and kind feelings I know the government and people of the United States possess towards the citizens of California, the country cannot but improve more rapidly than any other on the continent of America.

Such of the inhabitants of California, whether native or foreigners, as may not be disposed to accept the high privileges of citizenship, and to live peaceably under the government of the United States, will be allowed time to dispose of their property, and to remove out of the country, if they choose, without any restriction; or remain in it, observing strict neutrality.

With full confidence in the honor and integrity of the inhabitants of the country, I invite the judges, alcaldes, and other civil officers, to retain their offices, and to execute their functions as heretofore, that the public tranquility may not be disturbed; at least, until the government of the Territory can be more definitely arranged.

All persons holding titles to real estate, or in quiet possession of lands under a color of right, shall have those titles and rights guarantied to them.

All churches, and the property they contain, in possession of the clergy of California, shall continue in the same rights and possessions they now enjoy.

All provisions and supplies of every kind, furnished by the inhabitants for the use of the United States ships and soldiers, will be paid for at fair rates; and no private property will be taken for public use without just compensation at the moment.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States
naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

GENERAL ORDER.

Flag Ship Savannah, July 7, 1846.

We are about to land on the Territory of Mexico, with whom the United States are at war. To strike her flag, and to hoist our own in the place of it, is our duty.

It is not only our duty to take California, but to preserve it afterwards as a part of the United States, at all hazards. To accomplish this, it is of the first importance to cultivate the good opinion of the inhabitants, whom we must reconcile.

I scarcely consider it necessary for me to caution American seamen and marines against the detestable crime of plundering and maltreating unoffending inhabitants.

That no one may misunderstand his duty, the following regulations must be strictly adhered to, as no violation can hope to escape the severest punishment:

1st. On landing, no man is to leave the shore until the commanding officer gives the order to march.

2d. No gun is to be fired, or other act of hostility committed, without express orders from the officer commanding the party.

3d. The officers and boat keepers will keep their respective boats as close to the shore as they will safely float, taking care they do not lay aground, and remain in them, prepared to defend themselves against attack, and attentively watch for signals from the ships, as well as from the party on shore.

4th. No man is to quit the ranks or to enter any house for any pretext whatever, without express orders from an officer. Let every man avoid insult or offence to any unoffending inhabitant, and especially avoid that eternal disgrace which would be attached to our names and our country's name by indignity offered to a single female, even let her standing be however low it may.

5th. Plunder of every kind is strictly forbidden. Not only does the plundering of the smallest article from a prize forfeit all claim to prize money, but the offender must expect to be severely punished.

6th. Finally, let me entreat you, one and all, not to tarnish our hope of bright success by any act that we shall be ashamed to acknowledge before God and our country.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the U. S. naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

I hereby invite you to meet me immediately in Monterey, to enter into articles of capitulation, that yourself, officers, and soldiers, with the inhabitants of California, may receive assurances of perfect safety to themselves and property.

COMMANDANCY GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA.

The undersigned, commandant general of Upper California, has the honor to represent to the Señor commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States in the Pacific ocean, now in Monterey, that a band of adventurers, headed by Mr. J. C. Frémont, a captain in the army of the United States, forcibly took possession of the post of Sonoma, hoisting an unknown flag, making prisoners of the chiefs and officers who were there, and committing assassinations and every kind of injury to the lives and property of the inhabitants there. The undersigned is ignorant to what government belong the invaders of that part of the department, and a party of them who are in the neighborhood of Santa Clara; and as he cannot believe that they belong to the forces commanded by the said Señor Commodore, he will be obliged to him if he will be pleased to make him an explanation on this subject, in order that he may act in conformity with his reply, for neither the undersigned, nor a single citizen of the country, will permit excesses of any kind to be committed by these bands.

God and Liberty!

JOSE CASTRO.

To the Señor COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF
of the naval forces of the United States
in the Pacific ocean, in Monterey.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SAN JUAN DE BAUTISTA,

FLAG SHIP SAVANNAH,
Bay of Monterey, July 9, 1846.

I have the honor to enclose, herewith, to your excellency, copies of my summons to General Castro to surrender the country, &c., under his jurisdiction, to the United States forces under my command, together with a copy of my proclamation to the inhabitants of California, and the general order issued to the forces under my command just previous to my landing; and I assure your excellency that not the least impropriety has been committed, and that the business and social intercourse of the town have not been disturbed in the slightest degree.

I beg your excellency to feel assured that although I come in arms with a powerful force, I come as the best friend of California; and I invite your excellency to meet me at Monterey, that I may satisfy you and the people of California of the fact.

I pledge the word and honor of an American officer that your excellency will be received with all the respect due to your distinguished situation; and that you can depart at any moment you may think proper, and feel every confidence that an American officer expects when his word of honor is pledged.

I have already employed all the means in my power to stop the sacrifice of human life by the party in the north, and trust I shall succeed, provided there is no further opposition.

I tender your excellency my cordial respect and high consideration.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean, and of the Territory of California.

To his Excellency Sr. Don Pio Pico,
Angeles.

No. 13.

Ciudad de los Angeles,
August 28, 1846.

Sir: You have already been informed of my having, on the 23d of July, assumed the command of the United States forces on the west coast of Mexico. I have now the honor to inform you that the flag of the United States is flying from every commanding position in the Territory of California, and that this rich and beautiful country belongs to the United States, and is forever free from Mexican dominion.

On the day after I took this command, I organized the "California battalion of mounted riflemen" by the appointment of all the necessary officers, and received them as volunteers into the service of the United States. Captain Frémont was appointed major, and Lieutenant Gillespie captain, of the battalion.

The next day they were embarked on board the sloop-of-war Cyane, Commander Dupont, and sailed from Monterey for San Diego, that they might be landed to the southward of the Mexican forces, amounting to 500 men, under General Castro and Governor Pico, and who were well fortified at the "Camp of the Mesa," three miles from this city.

A few days after the Cyane left, I sailed in the Congress for San Pedro, the port of entry for this department, and thirty miles from this place, where I landed with my gallant sailor army, and marched directly for the redoubtable "Camp of the Mesa."

But when we arrived within twelve miles of the camp, General Castro broke ground and run for the city of Mexico. The governor of the territory, and the other principal officers, separated in different parties, and ran away in different directions.

Unfortunately, the mounted riflemen did not get up in time to head them off. We have since, however, taken most of the principal officers; the rest will be permitted to remain quiet at home, under the restrictions contained in my proclamation of the 17th.

On the 13th of August, having been joined by Major Frémont with about eighty riflemen, and Mr. Larkin, late American consul, we entered this famous "City of the Angels," the capital of the Californias, and took unmolested possession of the government house.

Thus, in less than a month after I assumed the command of the United States force in California, we have chased the Mexican army more than three hundred miles along the coast; pursued them thirty miles in the interior of their own country; routed and dispersed them, and secured the Territory to the United States; ended the war; restored peace and harmony among the people; and put a civil government into successful operation.

The Warren and Cyane sailed, a few days since, to blockade the west coast of Mexico, south of San Diego; and having almost finished my work here, I will sail in the Congress as soon as the store-ship arrives, and I can get supplied with provisions, on a cruise for the protection of our commerce; and dispose of the other vessels as most effectually to attain that object, and, at the same time, to keep the southern coast strictly blockaded.

When I leave the Territory, I will appoint Major Frémont to be governor, and Lieutenant Gillespie to be secretary.

I enclose you several papers, marked from 1 to 14 inclusive, including this letter and the first number of the "Californian," by which you will see what sort of a government I have established, and how I am proceeding.

I have not time to specify individual merit; but I cannot omit to say that I do not think that ardent patriotism and indomitable courage have ever been more evident than amongst the officers and men, 360 in number, from the frigate Congress, who accompanied me on this trying and hazardous march—a longer march, perhaps, than has ever been made in the interior of a country by sailors, after an enemy. I would likewise say, that the conduct of the officers and men of the whole squadron has been praiseworthy.

I have received your despatch of the 13th of May, and at the same time a Mexican account of the proceedings of Congress, and the President's proclamation, by the United States ship Warren, from Mazatlan.

Faithfully, your obedient servant,

R. F. STOCKTON.

To the Hon. George Bancroft,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

No. 3.

To the people of California:

On my approach to this place with the forces under my command, José Castro, the commandant general of California, buried his artillery and abandoned his fortified camp "of the Mesa," and fled, it is believed, towards Mexico.

With the sailors, the marines, and the California battalion of mounted riflemen, we entered the "City of the Angels," the capital of California, on the 13th of August, and hoisted the North American flag.

The flag of the United States is now flying from every commanding position in the Territory, and California is entirely free from Mexican dominion.

The Territory of California now belongs to the United States, and will be governed, as soon as circumstances will permit, by officers and laws similar to those by which the other Territories of the United States are regulated and protected.

But, until the governor, the secretary, and council are appointed, and the various civil departments of the government are arranged, military law will prevail, and the commander-in-chief will be the governor and protector of the Territory.

In the mean time the people will be permitted, and are now requested, to meet in their several towns and departments, at such time and place as they may see fit, to elect civil officers to fill the places of those who decline to continue in office, and to administer the laws according to the former usages of the Territory. In all cases where the people fail to elect, the commander-in-chief and governor will make the appointments himself.

All persons, of whatever religion or nation, who faithfully adhere to the new government, will be considered as citizens of the Territory, and will be zealously and thoroughly protected in the liberty of conscience, their persons, and property.

No persons will be permitted to remain in the Territory who do not agree to support the existing government; and all military men who desire to remain are required to take an oath that they will not take up arms against it, or do or say anything to disturb its peace.

Nor will any persons, come from where they may, be permitted to settle in the Territory, who do not pledge themselves to be, in all respects, obedient to the laws which may be from time to time enacted by the proper authorities of the Territory.

All persons who, without special permission, are found with arms outside of their own houses, will be considered as enemies, and will be shipped out of the country.

All thieves will be put to hard labor on the public works, and there kept until compensation is made for the property stolen.

The California battalion of mounted riflemen will be kept in the service of the Territory, and constantly on duty, to prevent and punish any aggressions by the Indians, or any other persons, upon the property of individuals, or the peace of the Territory; and California shall hereafter be so governed and defended as to give security to the inhabitants, and to defy the power of Mexico.

All persons are required, as long as the Territory is under martial law, to be within their houses from 10 o'clock at night until sunrise in the morning.

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

To the people of California:

On the 15th day of September, 1846, an election will be held in the several towns and districts of California, at the places and hours at which such elections have usually been holden, for the purpose of electing the alcaldes and other municipal officers for one year.

In those places where alcaldes have been appointed by the present government, they will hold the election.

In places where no alcaldes have been appointed by the present government, the former alcaldes are authorized and required to hold the election.

Given under my hand this twenty-second day of August, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, at the government house, "Ciudad de los Angeles."

No. 6.

I, Robert F. Stockton, commander-in-chief of the United States forces in the Pacific ocean, and governor of the Territory of California, and commander-in-chief of the army of the same, do hereby make known to all men that, having by right of conquest taken possession of that Territory, known by the name of Upper and Lower California, do now declare it to be a Territory of the United States, under the name of the Territory of California.

And I do by these presents further order and decree that the government of the said Territory of California shall be, until altered by the proper authority of the United States, constituted in manner and form as follows—that is to say:

The executive power and authority in and over the said Territory shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The governor shall reside within the said Territory; shall be commander-in-chief of the army thereof; shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve of all laws passed by the legislative council before they shall take effect. He may grant pardons for offences against the laws of the said Territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon: he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

There shall be a secretary of the said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. He shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the legislative council hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the governor in his executive department. He shall transmit one copy of the laws and one copy of the executive proceedings, on or before the first Monday in December in each year, to the President of the United States; and, at the same time, two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the use of Congress. And, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor from the Territory, the secretary shall have, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the governor, during such vacancy or necessary absence.

The legislative power shall be vested in the governor and legislative council. The legislative council shall consist of seven persons, who shall be appointed by the governor for two years; after which they shall be annually elected by the people.

The power of the legislative council of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the land or property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.

All the laws of the legislative council shall be submitted to, and, if disapproved by, the governor, the same shall be null and of no effect.

The municipal officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, heretofore existing in the Territory, shall continue to exist, and all their proceedings be regulated and controlled by the laws of Mexico, until otherwise provided for by the governor and legislative council.

All officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, shall be elected every year by the people, in such manner as may be provided by the governor and legislative council.

The legislative council of the Territory of California shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said session, or as soon thereafter as may by them be deemed expedient, the said governor and legislative council shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for said Territory, at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by the said governor and legislative council, and the time and place of the annual commencement of the session of the said legislative council thereafter shall be on such day and place as the governor and council may appoint.

[Circular.]

From this date, August the 15th, 1846, the tonnage duties on all foreign vessels arriving in the ports of California will be fifty cents per ton.

And the duties on all goods imported from foreign ports will be fifteen per cent., "ad valorem," payable in three instalments of 30, 80, and 120 days.

No. 8.

Ciudad de los Angeles, August 15, 1846.

Sir: It has been deemed advisable to adopt the enclosed tariff of duties.

To ascertain the true value of the goods in the ports at which they are entered, two judicious and disinterested persons must be appointed to make the appraisement; one selected by the government, the other by the party owning the goods.

Bonds with good security must be given for the payment of the duties.

Faithfully, your obedient servant,
R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

Extracts from a despatch of Commodore D. Connor, dated "Before Tampico, November 17, 1846."

* * * * "On approaching the town, a deputation from the ayuntamiento of the city came on board the flotilla, with proposals for its surrender, which are herewith enclosed, with conditions upon which its surrender was accepted by Commanders Tatnall and Ingraham, under my instructions."

* * * * "I transmit, herewith, copies of communcations from the English consul at Tampico, and the commander of H. M. sloop Daring, in relation to British interests in that city. I have stated in my replies that, at present, no relaxation in the rules of the blockade already established can be made, and that the port will remain closed to all neutral nations, as heretofore. On these matters, as well as in regard to the continued shipment of treasure from this place, on the account of English merchants, in the steam packet, I shall be glad to be made acquainted with the views of the department."

U. S. Steamer Spitfire,
Off the city of Tampico, November 15, 1846.

Commodore Connor declines a capitulation with the authorities of Tampico, as he considers it unnecessary.

He accepts the surrender of the city, and takes military possession of it.

He assures the inhabitants, at the same time, that he will not interfere with their municipal regulations, or their religion; and that private property shall be respected, provided that the public property of all kinds be delivered up at once, and in good faith.

Should an assault be made by the inhabitants of the city on the American forces, the inhabitants will be held responsible for the consequences.

Commodore Connor, so long as the authorities and inhabitants of the city observe good faith towards him, will consider them under his protection. A different course will expose them to serious evils.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GENERAL TAYLOR.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

The correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, not already published.

March 1, 1847.
Read, and laid upon the table.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I communicate, herewith, a report of the Secretary of War, with the accompanying documents, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, requesting the President "to communicate to the House of Representatives all the correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, which has not yet been published, and the publication of which may not be deemed detrimental to the public service; also, the correspondence of the quartermaster general, in relation to the transportation for General Taylor's army; also, the reports of Brigadier Generals Hamar and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades on the 21st of of September last."

As some of these documents relate to military operations of our forces which may not have been fully executed, I might have deemed it proper to withhold parts of them, under the apprehension that their publication, at this time, would be "detrimental to the public service;" but I am satisfied that these operations are now so far advanced, and that the enemy has already received so much information from other sources in relation to the intended movements of our army, as to render this precaution unnecessary.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, February 27, 1847.

Whenever any other port or place upon the Mexican side of the Rio Grande shall have passed into the actual possession of the forces of the United States, such ports and places will be subject to all the above instructions which are applicable to the port of Matamoras.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Circular to collectors and other officers of the customs.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
October 23, 1846.

In consequence of the intelligence received at the department, it becomes expedient and proper to rescind the privilege granted to the ports of Yucatan in my circular instructions of the 11th of June, 1846, and to subject said ports to the interdictions of commerce applicable to the ports of Mexico generally, as enjoined by said instructions. You are accordingly directed to refuse clearances to all vessels and their cargoes departing from our ports to ports or places in Yucatan.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

No. 11.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
December 16, 1846.

COMMODORE: Your despatch dated at Tampico, November 17th ultimo, is received.

It seems proper, to meet your wishes, that I instruct you more fully on the subject of the import and export trade of that port. In my letter of the 30th November ultimo, I informed you that your duty in regard to commercial intercourse with Tampico, while in our occupation by military conquest, will be regulated by the directions given in regard to Matamoras. Copies of the instructions of the Treasury Department on that subject were enclosed.

You will perceive that the privilege of entry is confined—

1. To American vessels only.

2. To such vessels carrying only articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of imports from foreign countries to our own, upon which the duties have been fully paid in a collection district of the United States, with proper clearances from the officers of the customs of the United States; and upon all such goods, whether of our own or of foreign countries, no duties will be chargeable at the port of Tampico so long as it is in the possession of the United States.

Beyond this it is not deemed proper, by the President, that vessels or cargoes of other nations shall be admitted.

But, in the spirit of accommodation to neutral commerce, the Secretary of the Treasury will, without delay, authorize clearances for Tampico of foreign cargoes in American bottoms to be granted at our custom-houses on payment of duties, and without unlading.

In regard to the export trade, vessels thus admitted to entry at Tampico may take out return cargoes of the property of citizens of the United States, or neutrals, without payment of any export duty; and the British steamer or national vessels of war may, without obstruction, be permitted to export specie, the property of neutrals. Such export should rather be encouraged, because it promotes the interests of general commerce, and withdraws from Mexico means which might be seized on to aid our enemy in prosecution of the war.

You will, if you are still in military command at Tampico, make the substance of this despatch publicly known as the regulation of the trade of the place while in the military occupation of the United States. If you shall have turned over the command to the army officer commanding, you will furnish him with a copy of this despatch. The honorable Secretary of War will immediately communicate with him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. Y. MASON.

Flag Ship Levant,
At sea, July 31, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that on the 7th June I received, at Mazatlan, information that the Mexican troops, six or seven thousand strong, had, by order of the Mexican government, invaded the territory of the United States north of the Rio Grande, and had attacked the forces under General Taylor, and that the squadron of the United States were blockading the coast of Mexico on the gulf.

These hostilities I considered would justify my commencing offensive operations on the west coast; I therefore sailed on the 8th, in the Savannah, for the coast of California, to carry out the orders of the department of the 24th June, 1845, leaving the Warren at Mazatlan, to bring me any despatches or important information that might reach there. I arrived at Monterey on the 2d of July, where I found the Cyane and Levant, and learned that the Portsmouth was at San Francisco, to which places they had been previously ordered to await further instructions.

On the morning of the 7th, having previously examined the defences and localities of the town, I sent Captain Mervine with the accompanying summons (A) to the military commandant of Monterey, requiring him to surrender the place forthwith to the forces of the United States under my command. At 9h. 30m. a. m., I received his reply, (B) stating he was not authorized to surrender the place, and referred me to the commanding general of California, Don José Castro.

Every arrangement having been made the day previous, the necessary force (about 250 seamen and marines) was immediately embarked in the boats of the squadron, and landed at 10 o'clock, under cover of the guns of the ships, with great promptitude and good order, under the immediate command of Captain Wm. Mervine, assisted by Commander H. N. Page, as second.

The forces were immediately formed and marched to the custom-house, where my proclamation to the inhabitants of California (C) was read, the standard of the United States hoisted, amid three hearty cheers of the troops and foreigners present, and a salute of 21 guns fired by all the ships. Immediately afterwards, the proclamation, both in English and Spanish, was posted up about the town, and two justices of the peace appointed to preserve order and punish delinquencies, the alcades declining to serve.

Previous to landing, the accompanying "General Order" (D) was read to the crews of all the ships, and I am most happy to state that I feel confident that the inhabitants of Monterey, and all other places where our forces have appeared, will do them and myself the justice to say that not the least depredation or slightest insult or irregularity has been committed, from the moment of our landing until my departure.

Immediately after taking possession of Monterey, I despatched a courier to General Castro, the military commandant of California, with a letter (E) and a copy of my proclamation, to which I received a reply, (F.) On the 9th, I despatched a letter, (G.) by courier, to Señor Don Pio Pico, the governor, at Santa Barbara.

On the 16th of July I despatched orders, by sea, to Commander Montgomery, to take immediate possession of the bay of San Francisco, &c.; and, on the 7th, a duplicate of that order, by land, which he received on the evening of the 8th; and at 7 a. m., of the 9th, he hoisted the flag at San Francisco, read and posted up my proclamation, and took possession of that part of the country in the name of the United States.

* * * * * * * *

On the 23d, my health being such as to prevent my attending to so much, and such laborious duties, I directed Commodore Stockton to assume the command of the forces and operations on shore; and, on the 29th, having determined to return to the United States via Panama, I hoisted my broad pendant on board the Levant and sailed for Mazatlan and Panama, leaving the remainder of the squadron under his command, believing that no further opposition would be made to our taking possession of the whole of the Californias, (as General Castro had less than one hundred men,) and that I could render much more important service by returning to the United States with the least possible delay, to explain to the government the situation and wants of that country, than I could by remaining in command in my infirm state of health.

* * * * * * * *

Hoping the course I have pursued will meet the approbation of the department, I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant, &c.,

JOHN D. SLOAT.

Sir: The central government of Mexico, having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, the two nations are now actually at war. The immediate compliance with this summons will probably prevent the sacrifice of human life and the horrors of war, which I most anxiously desire to avoid.

MILITARY COMMANDANCY OF MONTEREY.

The undersigned, captain of artillery in the Mexican army and military commandant of this post, represents to the Señor commodore of the naval forces of the United States in this bay that he is not authorized to surrender the place, having no orders to that effect; for the said matter may be arranged by the Señor commodore with the commandant general, to whom I transmitted the communication delivered to me for the said Señor, the undersigned withdrawing and leaving the town peaceful and without a soldier;

nor, according to information from the treasurer, is there any public property or munitions.

With which the note of the Señor commodore is answered, and tendering him my respects.

God and liberty! Monterey, June [July] 7th, 1846.

Señor COMMODORE
of the naval forces of the U. S., in this bay.

C.

To the inhabitants of California:

The central government of Mexico having commenced hostilities against the United States of America, by invading its territory and attacking the troops of the United States stationed on the north side of the Rio Grande, and with a force of seven thousand men under the command of General Arista, which army was totally destroyed, and all their artillery, baggage, &c., captured on the 8th and 9th of May last, by a force of two thousand three hundred men under the command of General Taylor, and the city of Matamoras taken and occupied by the forces of the United States, and the two nations being actually at war by this transaction, I shall hoist the standard of the United States at Monterey immediately, and shall carry it throughout California.

I declare to the inhabitants of California that, although I come in arms with a powerful force, I do not come among them as an enemy to California: on the contrary, I come as their best friend, as henceforward California will be a portion of the United States, and its peaceful inhabitants will enjoy the same rights and privileges they now enjoy, together with the privilege of choosing their own magistrates and other officers, for the administration of justice among themselves, and the same protection will be extended to them as to any other State in the Union. They will also enjoy a permanent government, under which life, property, and the constitutional right and lawful security to worship the Creator in the way most congenial to each one's sense of duty, will be secured, which, unfortunately, the central government of Mexico cannot afford them, destroyed as her resources are by internal factions and corrupt officers, who create constant revolutions to promote their own interests and oppress the people. Under the flag of the United States, California will be free from all such troubles and expense; consequently, the country will rapidly advance and improve both in agriculture and commerce, as, of course, the revenue laws will be the same in California as in all other parts of the United States, affording them all manufactures and produce of the United States free of any duty, and all foreign goods at one-quarter of the duty they now pay. A great increase in the value of real estate and the products of California may also be anticipated.

With the great interest and kind feelings I know the government and people of the United States possess towards the citizens of California, the country cannot but improve more rapidly than any other on the continent of America.

Such of the inhabitants of California, whether native or foreigners, as may not be disposed to accept the high privileges of citizenship, and to live peaceably under the government of the United States, will be allowed time to dispose of their property, and to remove out of the country, if they choose, without any restriction; or remain in it, observing strict neutrality.

With full confidence in the honor and integrity of the inhabitants of the country, I invite the judges, alcaldes, and other civil officers, to retain their offices, and to execute their functions as heretofore, that the public tranquility may not be disturbed; at least, until the government of the Territory can be more definitely arranged.

All persons holding titles to real estate, or in quiet possession of lands under a color of right, shall have those titles and rights guarantied to them.

All churches, and the property they contain, in possession of the clergy of California, shall continue in the same rights and possessions they now enjoy.

All provisions and supplies of every kind, furnished by the inhabitants for the use of the United States ships and soldiers, will be paid for at fair rates; and no private property will be taken for public use without just compensation at the moment.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean.

D.

GENERAL ORDER.

Flag Ship Savannah, July 7, 1846.

We are about to land on the Territory of Mexico, with whom the United States are at war. To strike her flag, and to hoist our own in the place of it, is our duty.

It is not only our duty to take California, but to preserve it afterwards as a part of the United States, at all hazards. To accomplish this, it is of the first importance to cultivate the good opinion of the inhabitants, whom we must reconcile.

I scarcely consider it necessary for me to caution American seamen and marines against the detestable crime of plundering and maltreating unoffending inhabitants.

That no one may misunderstand his duty, the following regulations must be strictly adhered to, as no violation can hope to escape the severest punishment:

1st. On landing, no man is to leave the shore until the commanding officer gives the order to march.

2d. No gun is to be fired, or other act of hostility committed, without express orders from the officer commanding the party.

3d. The officers and boat keepers will keep their respective boats as close to the shore as they will safely float, taking care they do not lay aground, and remain in them, prepared to defend themselves against attack, and attentively watch for signals from the ships, as well as from the party on shore.

4th. No man is to quit the ranks or to enter any house for any pretext whatever, without express orders from an officer. Let every man avoid insult or offence to any unoffending inhabitant, and especially avoid that eternal disgrace which would be attached to our names and our country's name by indignity offered to a single female, even let her standing be however low it may.

5th. Plunder of every kind is strictly forbidden. Not only does the plundering of the smallest article from a prize forfeit all claim to prize money, but the offender must expect to be severely punished.

6th. Finally, let me entreat you, one and all, not to tarnish our hope of bright success by any act that we shall be ashamed to acknowledge before God and our country.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the U. S. naval forces
in the Pacific ocean.

COMMANDANCY GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA.

The undersigned, commandant general of Upper California, has the honor to represent to the Señor commander-in-chief of the naval forces of the United States in the Pacific ocean, now in Monterey, that a band of adventurers, headed by Mr. J. C. Frémont, a captain in the army of the United States, forcibly took possession of the post of Sonoma, hoisting an unknown flag, making prisoners of the chiefs and officers who were there, and committing assassinations and every kind of injury to the lives and property of the inhabitants there. The undersigned is ignorant to what government belong the invaders of that part of the department, and a party of them who are in the neighborhood of Santa Clara; and as he cannot believe that they belong to the forces commanded by the said Señor Commodore, he will be obliged to him if he will be pleased to make him an explanation on this subject, in order that he may act in conformity with his reply, for neither the undersigned, nor a single citizen of the country, will permit excesses of any kind to be committed by these bands.

God and Liberty!

JOSE CASTRO.

To the Señor COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF
of the naval forces of the United States
in the Pacific ocean, in Monterey.

FLAG SHIP SAVANNAH,
Bay of Monterey, July 9, 1846.

I have the honor to enclose, herewith, to your excellency, copies of my summons to General Castro to surrender the country, &c., under his jurisdiction, to the United States forces under my command, together with a copy of my proclamation to the inhabitants of California, and the general order issued to the forces under my command just previous to my landing; and I assure your excellency that not the least impropriety has been committed, and that the business and social intercourse of the town have not been disturbed in the slightest degree.

I beg your excellency to feel assured that although I come in arms with a powerful force, I come as the best friend of California; and I invite your excellency to meet me at Monterey, that I may satisfy you and the people of California of the fact.

I pledge the word and honor of an American officer that your excellency will be received with all the respect due to your distinguished situation; and that you can depart at any moment you may think proper, and feel every confidence that an American officer expects when his word of honor is pledged.

I have already employed all the means in my power to stop the sacrifice of human life by the party in the north, and trust I shall succeed, provided there is no further opposition.

I tender your excellency my cordial respect and high consideration.

JOHN D. SLOAT,
Commander-in-chief of the United States naval forces in the Pacific ocean, and of the Territory of California.

To his Excellency Sr. Don Pio Pico,
Angeles.

No. 13.

Ciudad de los Angeles,
August 28, 1846.

Sir: You have already been informed of my having, on the 23d of July, assumed the command of the United States forces on the west coast of Mexico. I have now the honor to inform you that the flag of the United States is flying from every commanding position in the Territory of California, and that this rich and beautiful country belongs to the United States, and is forever free from Mexican dominion.

On the day after I took this command, I organized the "California battalion of mounted riflemen" by the appointment of all the necessary officers, and received them as volunteers into the service of the United States. Captain Frémont was appointed major, and Lieutenant Gillespie captain, of the battalion.

The next day they were embarked on board the sloop-of-war Cyane, Commander Dupont, and sailed from Monterey for San Diego, that they might be landed to the southward of the Mexican forces, amounting to 500 men, under General Castro and Governor Pico, and who were well fortified at the "Camp of the Mesa," three miles from this city.

A few days after the Cyane left, I sailed in the Congress for San Pedro, the port of entry for this department, and thirty miles from this place, where I landed with my gallant sailor army, and marched directly for the redoubtable "Camp of the Mesa."

But when we arrived within twelve miles of the camp, General Castro broke ground and run for the city of Mexico. The governor of the territory, and the other principal officers, separated in different parties, and ran away in different directions.

Unfortunately, the mounted riflemen did not get up in time to head them off. We have since, however, taken most of the principal officers; the rest will be permitted to remain quiet at home, under the restrictions contained in my proclamation of the 17th.

On the 13th of August, having been joined by Major Frémont with about eighty riflemen, and Mr. Larkin, late American consul, we entered this famous "City of the Angels," the capital of the Californias, and took unmolested possession of the government house.

Thus, in less than a month after I assumed the command of the United States force in California, we have chased the Mexican army more than three hundred miles along the coast; pursued them thirty miles in the interior of their own country; routed and dispersed them, and secured the Territory to the United States; ended the war; restored peace and harmony among the people; and put a civil government into successful operation.

The Warren and Cyane sailed, a few days since, to blockade the west coast of Mexico, south of San Diego; and having almost finished my work here, I will sail in the Congress as soon as the store-ship arrives, and I can get supplied with provisions, on a cruise for the protection of our commerce; and dispose of the other vessels as most effectually to attain that object, and, at the same time, to keep the southern coast strictly blockaded.

When I leave the Territory, I will appoint Major Frémont to be governor, and Lieutenant Gillespie to be secretary.

I enclose you several papers, marked from 1 to 14 inclusive, inincluding this letter and the first number of the "Californian," by which you will see what sort of a government I have established, and how I am proceeding.

I have not time to specify individual merit; but I cannot omit to say that I do not think that ardent patriotism and indomitable courage have ever been more evident than amongst the officers and men, 360 in number, from the frigate Congress, who accompanied me on this trying and hazardous march—a longer march, perhaps, than has ever been made in the interior of a country by sailors, after an enemy. I would likewise say, that the conduct of the officers and men of the whole squadron has been praiseworthy.

I have received your despatch of the 13th of May, and at the same time a Mexican account of the proceedings of Congress, and the President's proclamation, by the United States ship Warren, from Mazatlan.

Faithfully, your obedient servant,
R. F. STOCKTON.

To the Hon. George Bancroft,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

No. 3.

To the people of California:

On my approach to this place with the forces under my command, José Castro, the commandant general of California, buried his artillery and abandoned his fortified camp "of the Mesa," and fled, it is believed, towards Mexico.

With the sailors, the marines, and the California battalion of mounted riflemen, we entered the "City of the Angels," the capital of California, on the 13th of August, and hoisted the North American flag.

The flag of the United States is now flying from every commanding position in the Territory, and California is entirely free from Mexican dominion.

The Territory of California now belongs to the United States, and will be governed, as soon as circumstances will permit, by officers and laws similar to those by which the other Territories of the United States are regulated and protected.

But, until the governor, the secretary, and council are appointed, and the various civil departments of the government are arranged, military law will prevail, and the commander-in-chief will be the governor and protector of the Territory.

In the mean time the people will be permitted, and are now requested, to meet in their several towns and departments, at such time and place as they may see fit, to elect civil officers to fill the places of those who decline to continue in office, and to administer the laws according to the former usages of the Territory. In all cases where the people fail to elect, the commander-in-chief and governor will make the appointments himself.

All persons, of whatever religion or nation, who faithfully adhere to the new government, will be considered as citizens of the Territory, and will be zealously and thoroughly protected in the liberty of conscience, their persons, and property.

No persons will be permitted to remain in the Territory who do not agree to support the existing government; and all military men who desire to remain are required to take an oath that they will not take up arms against it, or do or say anything to disturb its peace.

Nor will any persons, come from where they may, be permitted to settle in the Territory, who do not pledge themselves to be, in all respects, obedient to the laws which may be from time to time enacted by the proper authorities of the Territory.

All persons who, without special permission, are found with arms outside of their own houses, will be considered as enemies, and will be shipped out of the country.

All thieves will be put to hard labor on the public works, and there kept until compensation is made for the property stolen.

The California battalion of mounted riflemen will be kept in the service of the Territory, and constantly on duty, to prevent and punish any aggressions by the Indians, or any other persons, upon the property of individuals, or the peace of the Territory; and California shall hereafter be so governed and defended as to give security to the inhabitants, and to defy the power of Mexico.

All persons are required, as long as the Territory is under martial law, to be within their houses from 10 o'clock at night until sunrise in the morning.

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

Given under my hand this twenty-second day of August, anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, at the government house, "Ciudad de los Angeles."

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

No. 6.

I, Robert F. Stockton, commander-in-chief of the United States forces in the Pacific ocean, and governor of the Territory of California, and commander-in-chief of the army of the same, do hereby make known to all men that, having by right of conquest taken possession of that Territory, known by the name of Upper and Lower California, do now declare it to be a Territory of the United States, under the name of the Territory of California.

And I do by these presents further order and decree that the government of the said Territory of California shall be, until altered by the proper authority of the United States, constituted in manner and form as follows—that is to say:

The executive power and authority in and over the said Territory shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The governor shall reside within the said Territory; shall be commander-in-chief of the army thereof; shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve of all laws passed by the legislative council before they shall take effect. He may grant pardons for offences against the laws of the said Territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be made known thereon: he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said Territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

There shall be a secretary of the said Territory, who shall reside therein, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. He shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the legislative council hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the governor in his executive department. He shall transmit one copy of the laws and one copy of the executive proceedings, on or before the first Monday in December in each year, to the President of the United States; and, at the same time, two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the use of Congress. And, in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor from the Territory, the secretary shall have, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute and perform all the powers and duties of the governor, during such vacancy or necessary absence.

The legislative power shall be vested in the governor and legislative council. The legislative council shall consist of seven persons, who shall be appointed by the governor for two years; after which they shall be annually elected by the people.

The power of the legislative council of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation; but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the land or property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.

All the laws of the legislative council shall be submitted to, and, if disapproved by, the governor, the same shall be null and of no effect.

The municipal officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, heretofore existing in the Territory, shall continue to exist, and all their proceedings be regulated and controlled by the laws of Mexico, until otherwise provided for by the governor and legislative council.

All officers of cities, towns, departments or districts, shall be elected every year by the people, in such manner as may be provided by the governor and legislative council.

The legislative council of the Territory of California shall hold its first session at such time and place in said Territory as the governor thereof shall appoint and direct; and at said session, or as soon thereafter as may by them be deemed expedient, the said governor and legislative council shall proceed to locate and establish the seat of government for said Territory, at such place as they may deem eligible; which place, however, shall thereafter be subject to be changed by the said governor and legislative council; and the time and place of the annual commencement of the session of the said legislative council thereafter shall be on such day and place as the governor and council may appoint.

And the duties on all goods imported from foreign ports will be fifteen per cent., "ad valorem," payable in three instalments of 30, 80, and 120 days.

R. F. STOCKTON,
Commander-in-chief and Governor of the Territory of California.

No. 8.

Ciudad de los Angeles, August 15, 1846.

Sir: It has been deemed advisable to adopt the enclosed tariff of duties.

To ascertain the true value of the goods in the ports at which they are entered, two judicious and disinterested persons must be appointed to make the appraisement; one selected by the government, the other by the party owning the goods.

Bonds with good security must be given for the payment of the duties.

Faithfully, your obedient servant,
R. F. STOCKTON,

Extracts from a despatch of Commodore D. Connor, dated "Before Tampico, November 17, 1846."

* * * * "On approaching the town, a deputation from the ayuntamiento of the city came on board the flotilla, with proposals for its surrender, which are herewith enclosed, with conditions upon which its surrender was accepted by Commanders Tatnall and Ingraham, under my instructions."

* * * * "I transmit, herewith, copies of communcations from the English consul at Tampico, and the commander of H. M. sloop Daring, in relation to British interests in that city. I have stated in my replies that, at present, no relaxation in the rules of the blockade already established can be made, and that the port will remain closed to all neutral nations, as heretofore. On these matters, as well as in regard to the continued shipment of treasure from this place, on the account of English merchants, in the steam packet, I shall be glad to be made acquainted with the views of the department."

U. S. Steamer Spitfire,
Off the city of Tampico, November 15, 1846.

Commodore Connor declines a capitulation with the authorities of Tampico, as he considers it unnecessary.

He accepts the surrender of the city, and takes military possession of it.

He assures the inhabitants, at the same time, that he will not interfere with their municipal regulations, or their religion; and that private property shall be respected, provided that the public property of all kinds be delivered up at once, and in good faith.

Should an assault be made by the inhabitants of the city on the American forces, the inhabitants will be held responsible for the consequences.

Commodore Connor, so long as the authorities and inhabitants of the city observe good faith towards him, will consider them under his protection. A different course will expose them to serious evils.

JOSIAH TATNALL,
Commander United States Navy.
D. N. INGRAHAM,
Commander United States Navy.

Approved:

D. CONNOR,
Commanding Home Squadron.

La comision del ayuntamiento de Tampico acepta las garantias que por la precedente contestacionofrece á la Ciudad el Comadore Connor, por conducto de los oficiales arriba firmados.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GENERAL TAYLOR.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

The correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, not already published.

March 1, 1847.

Read, and laid upon the table.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I communicate, herewith, a report of the Secretary of War, with the accompanying documents, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, requesting the President "to communicate to the House of Representatives all the correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico, which has not yet been published, and the publication of which may not be deemed detrimental to the public service; also, the correspondence of the quartermaster general, in relation to the transportation for General Taylor's army; also, the reports of Brigadier Generals Hamar and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades on the 21st of of September last."

As some of these documents relate to military operations of our forces which may not have been fully executed, I might have deemed it proper to withhold parts of them, under the apprehension that their publication, at this time, would be "detrimental to the public service;" but I am satisfied that these operations are now so far advanced, and that the enemy has already received so much information from other sources in relation to the intended movements of our army, as to render this precaution unnecessary.

JAMES K. POLK.

Washington, February 27, 1847.

War Department, February 27, 1847.

Sir: Pursuant to your direction, I have caused to be copied, and herewith transmit to you, the correspondence called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives, passed the 1st of this month.

The documents are numerous, and an attempt has been made so to arrange them as to bring together letters relating to the same subjects; but it has been found impracticable to carry this out to the fullest extent. In regard to the correspondence with General Taylor, from one to two months usually intervened between the date of the letters written by and to him, and the receipt of the answers; and, within that period, several other letters, upon different subjects, were sent and received. Had a strictly chronological order of the correspondence been observed in the arrangement, many different subjects would have been introduced between the letters and the replies to them. An attempt has been made to bring together the letters and the replies, and it has been done to a considerable extent, in regard to those which have reference to the campaign and to military movements. Those which relate to transportation have also been brought together, as far as practicable.

Among the letters embraced in the call, several merely formal—such, for instance, as enclosed returns, proceedings of courts-martial, &c.—have not been copied; but the dates are given, and their contents briefly stated, in the accompanying synopsis.

In the correspondence of the quartermaster's department, in reference to transportation, only letters and parts of letters relating particularly to that subject have been selected.

In answer to that part of the resolution which calls "for the reports of Brigadier Generals Hamar and Quitman of the operations of their respective brigades on the 21st of September last," I have the honor to state, that no such reports have been received at this department, nor has any other reports from these generals been received, except those of the 28th of that month, which have been already published.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY.

The President of the United States.

on the Rio Grande, Texas.

War Department, May 28, 1846.

Sir: As it appears that Major General Gaines, in sending forward volunteers to Texas, has exceeded the call made by you for that description of force, it would seem proper that this excess should be disposed of in such manner as to cause as little expense and embarrassment to the service as possible. The call of General Gaines has been recognised to the extent of the number of volunteers already sent to you, and you will therefore receive them into service. But as all these troops, as well as those embraced in your requisitions, have been called out under the act of the 28th February, 1795, which limits their term of service to three months, it is suggested that you organize out of that number such as may be disposed to volunteer for the period of twelve months, under the act of the 13th of May instant, until you may have a force of that description sufficient to meet your views and wishes, and then discharge and send home the remaining three months men. The governors of the several States, from which these three-months men have come, will be requested to aid you in changing them into volunteers for a year, under the recent act of Congress, by giving commissions to those who (not having received them) may volunteer to serve as officers. Should companies, battalions, or regiments, of the present three-months men, organize and offer their services under the act of the 13th of May, you are hereby authorized by the President to accept and at once muster them into service. It is important that you should give the department the earliest information of your proceedings in this respect.

You are advised to prosecute the war with vigor, in the manner you may deem most effective. Not knowing what are the operations you propose to carry on, I cannot well determine the number of volunteers you will be likely to want. I am anxious to hear your views as to the measures you propose to execute. It is hoped that while the season favors, you will make such progress as that your troops may be enabled safely to occupy healthy positions before the less healthy season commences. I wish to be favored with your views as to what should be the future operations of the army on the Rio Grande, and the movement you propose to make before the commencement of the rainy season, which is supposed to be such as may arrest or impede, for a short time, effective hostilities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding Army of Occupation
on the Rio Grande, Texas.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 30, 1846.

SIR: Enclosed I transmit an order assigning you to duty according to your rank as brevet major general. I also send you a copy of a letter from the President, the original of which, with your commission, has been forwarded by this day's mail.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brevet Major General Z. Taylor.

Washington City, May 30, 1846.

Sir: I transmit to you herewith a commission as major general by brevet in the army of the United States, conferred upon you for gallant conduct and distinguished services in the successive victories over superior Mexican forces at Palto Alto and Resaca de la Palma, on the 8th and 9th days of May, 1846.

It gave me sincere pleasure, immediately upon the receipt of official intelligence from the scene of your achievements, to confer upon you, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, this testimonial of the estimate which your government places upon your skill and gallantry. To yourself and the brave officers and soldiers under your command the gratitude of the country is justly due. Our army have fully sustained their deservedly high reputation, and added another bright page to the history of American valor and patriotism. They have won new laurels for themselves and for their country. My confidence in them never faltered. The battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma rank among our most brilliant victories, and will long be remembered by the American people. When all the details of these battles, and of the noble defence of the camp opposite to Matamoras, shall have been received, it will be my pleasure, as it will be my grateful duty, to render to the officers and men under your command suitable testimonials for their conduct in the brilliant victories which a superintending Providence has enabled them to achieve for their country.

In transmitting to you this commission, and in communicating to the officers and soldiers under your command my profound sense of their meritorious services, I but respond to the patriotic enthusiasm manifested by the people in behalf of their brave defenders. Whilst my warmest thanks are tendered to the survivors, the nation mourns the loss of the brave officers and soldiers who fell in defence of their country upon the field of victory. Their names also shall be remembered, and appropriate honors be paid to their memory, by a grateful country.

You will cause this communication to be made known to the army under your command.

JAMES K. POLK.

Brevet Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. Army on the Rio Grande.

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 4, 1846.

SIR: I send herewith a number of copies of a proclamation in the Spanish language, addressed to the people of Mexico, which you are requested to sign and cause to be circulated in the manner and to the extent you may deem proper. You will use your utmost endeavors to have the pledges and promises therein contained carried out to the fullest extent. There are also sent some copies of the proclamation in the English language.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Brevet Maj. Gen. Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding army of occupation, Texas.

PROCLAMACION.

POR EL GENERAL COMANDANTE DEL EXERCITO DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS DE AMERICA.

A la nacion Mejicana:

Despues de muchos años de sufrimiento paciente, los Estados Unidos estan al fin forzados de reconocer que hay guerra entre nuestro gobierno y el gobierno de Mejico. Durante muchos años nuestros ciudadanos han sido espuestos á injurias y perdidas, nuestros buques y cargazones han sido asidos y confiscados, nuestros negociantes robados, mutilados, encarcelados sin causa alguna. En conclusion vuestro gobierno reconocio la justicia de nuestras reclamaciones, y agredeció por un tratado de satisfacernos con el pagamiento de unos millones de pesos; pero este tratado lo han violado vuestros caudales, y no se han hecho los pagamientos. Nuestros ultimos esfuerzos para poner fin à todas las difficultades con negociaciones pacificas han sido desechados por el dictator Paredes, y nuestro Ministro de Paz, à quien vuestros gobernadores habian agredecido recibir, se le ha despues rehusado toda comunicacion. Ha sido tratado con indignidad é insulta; y anuciò Paredes que hay guerra entre nosotros. Esta, guerra proclamada asi primieramente por él ha sido reconocida con una perfecta unanimidad, y se perseguirá con vigor y energia, contra vuestro exercito y vuestros gobernadores, pero aquellos Mejicanos quienes quedarán neutrales, no se les hará ninguna molestia.

E[illegible] vuestro gobierno en las manos de tiranos y usurpadores. Ellos han destruido el gobierno de los Estados, han aniquilado vuestra constitucion federal, os han privado del derecho de eleccion, han destruido la libertad de la imprenta, os han robado vuestras armas, y reducido a un estado de entera sumision al poder de un dictator militar. Vuestro exercito y vuestros maestros sacan del pueblo con injustos impuestos, con forzados prestamos, y asidas militares, aquel mismo dinero el cual soporta el poder de vuestros gobernadores. Estando desarmados quedasteis en preda á los salvages Camanchos, los cuales destruyeron uo solamente vuestras vidas y propiedades, pero llevaron vuestras mugeres é hijos en una captividad mas horrible qua la misma muerte. Son vuestros gobernadores militares que os han reducido á esta condicion deplorable. Con estos tiranos y sus satelites corrumpidos y crudeles, enriquecidos con el tesoro del pueblo, por quienes estais oprimidos y empobrecidos de este mode, algunos de ellos han atrevidamente hablado en favor de una Monarquia, y quisieran colocar un Principe Europeo sobre el trono de Méjico. Venimos para obtener reparacion de injurias y perdidas repetidas, venimos para obtener indemnidades por lo pasado y seguridad por lo futuro, venimos para desechar á los tiranos que han destruido vuestras libertades; pero no venimos nosotros para hacer la guerra al pueblo Mejicano ò contra ninguna forma de gobierno que la nacion quisiere eligirse. Nuestro deseo es de veros libertados de los despotas, de expeler á los Camanchos, de impedir que se renueven sus asaltos, y forzarlos á restituir vuestras mugeres y vuestros hijos detenidos despues de tanto tiempo. Se protegeran vuestra religion, vuestros altares è iglesias, las propiedades de vuestras iglesias y de vuestros cuidadanos, las emblemas de vuestra fé sus ministros quedarán inviolados. Cientos de nuestra exercito y cientos mil de nuestra nacion son miembros de la religion Católica. En cada estado, y en casi todas las ciudades y todos los pueblos de nuestra Union hay iglesias Católicas, y los sacerdotes hacen sus santas funciones en paz y seguridad debajo la garantia de nuestra sagrada constitucion. Venimos entre la gente Mejicano como amigos y hermanos republicanos, y todas los que nos recibirán en esta calidad estarán protegidos, pues cuantos, se dejaràn atraer á llevar las armas se trataràn como enemigos. No necesitarémos de vosotros nada sino sustento para nuestro exercito, y esto os serà siempre pagado en dineros y por su valor entera. La politica acostumbrada de vuestros tiranos consista en engañaros tocante à la politica y al caràcter de nuestro gobierno y de nuestra gente. Temen estos tiranos el exemplo de nuestras libres instituciones, y esfuerzanse constantemente de falsificar nuestros designios é inspiraros el odio de vuestros hermanos republicanos de la Union Americana.

Dadnos solo la ocasion de desengañoros, y luego sabreis que todas las representaciones de Paredes son falsas, y hechas solo con la intencion de inducir os en consentir al establecimiento de un gobierno despotico.

En vuestra guerra para la libertad, contra la monarquia Española, millares de nuestros conciudadanos espusieron sus vidas y derramaron su sangre para vuestra defensa. Nuestro commodore, el bravo Porter, sostuvo vuestro pabellon triumfante en el oceano, y nuestro gobierno fuè el primero en reconocer vuestra independencia. Inscribimos con orgulio y placer vuestro nombre en la lista de las republicas independentes, y tuvimos deseo que pudieseis gozar en paz y prosperidad todas las ventajas de los gobiernos libres. Es impossible que tengan buen suceso vuestros tiranos contra el exercito de la Union, pero si ellos sucedieren solo seria para darlos el medio de llenar vuestras ciudades con sus soldados, comer vuestra sustento, y cargaros de impuéstos aun mas duros. Ya han abolido la libertad de la imprenta, siendo este el primer paso ácia la introduccion de aquella monarquia la cual ellos tienen en realidad el designio de proclamar y establecer.

Mejicanos, hemos de tratar como enemigos y destruir á los tiranos quienes, mientras nos han agraviado è insultado, os han privado de vuestra libertad, pero los Mejicanos que quedaran neutrales durante la guerra, serán protegidos contra sus despotas militares por el exercito republicano de la Union.

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GENERAL COMMANDING THE ARMY OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA.

To the people of Mexico:

After many years of patient endurance, the United States are at length constrained to acknowledge that a war now exists between our government and the government of Mexico. For many years our citizens have been subjected to repeated insults and injuries, our vessels and cargoes have been seized and confiscated, our merchants have been plundered, maimed, imprisoned, without cause and without reparation. At length your government acknowledged the justice of our claims, and agreed by treaty to make satisfaction, by payment of several millions of dollars; but this treaty has been violated by your rulers, and the stipulated payments have been withheld. Our late effort to terminate all difficulties by peaceful negotiation has been rejected by the dictator Paredes, and our minister of peace, whom your rulers had agreed to receive, has been refused a hearing. He has been treated with indignity and insult, and Paredes has announced that war exists between us. This war, thus first proclaimed by him, has been acknowledged as an existing fact by our President and Congress, with perfect unanimity, and will be prosecuted with vigor and energy against your army and rulers; but those of the Mexican people who remain neutral will not be molested.

Your government is in the hands of tyrants and usurpers. They have abolished your State governments, they have overthrown your federal constitution, they have deprived you of the right of suffrage, destroyed the liberty of the press, despoiled you of your arms, and reduced you to a state of absolute dependence upon the power of a military dictator. Your army and rulers extort from the people, by grievous taxation, by forced loans, and military seizures, the very money which sustains the usurpers in power. Being disarmed, you are left defenceless, an easy prey to the savage Cumanches, who not only destroy your lives and property, but drive into a captivity, more horrible than death itself, your wives and children. It is your military rulers who have reduced you to this deplorable condition. It is these tyrants, and their corrupt and cruel satellites, gorged with the people's treasure, by whom you are thus oppressed and impoverished, some of whom have boldly advocated a monarchical government, and would place a European prince on the throne of Mexico. We come to obtain reparation for repeated wrongs and injuries, we come to obtain indemnity for the past and security for the future, we come to overthrow the tyrants who have destroyed your liberties; but we come to make no war upon the people of Mexico, nor upon any form of free government they may choose to select for themselves. It is our wish to see you liberated from despots, to drive back the savage Cumanches, to prevent the renewal of their assaults, and to compel them to restore to you from captivity your long lost wives and children. Your religion, your altars and churches, the property of your churches and citizens, the emblems of your faith and its ministers, shall be protected and remain inviolate. Hundreds of our army, and hundreds of thousands of our people, are members of the Catholic church. In every State, and in nearly every city and village of our Union, Catholic churches exist, and the priests perform their holy functions in peace and security, under the sacred guarantee of our constitution. We come among the people of Mexico as friends and republican brethren, and all who receive us as such shall be protected, whilst all who are seduced into the army of your dictator shall be treated as enemies. We shall want from you nothing but food for our army, and for this you shall always be paid, in cash, the full value. It is the settled policy of your tyrants to deceive you in regard to the policy and character of our government and people. These tyrants fear the example of our free institutions, and constantly endeavor to misrepresent our purposes, and inspire you with hatred for your republican brethren of the American Union. Give us but the opportunity to undeceive you, and you will soon learn that all the representations of Paredes were false, and were only made to induce you to consent to the establishment of a despotic government.

In your struggle for liberty with the Spanish monarchy, thousands of our countrymen risked their lives and shed their blood in your defence. Our own commodore, the gallant Porter, maintained in triumph your flag upon the ocean, and our government was the first to acknowledge your independence. With pride and pleasure we enrolled your name on the list of independent republics, and sincerely desired that you might in peace and prosperity enjoy all the blessings of free government. Success on the part of your tyrants against the army of the Union is impossible; but if they could succeed, it would only be to enable them to fill your towns with their soldiers, eating out your substance, and harassing you with still more grievous taxation. Already they have abolished the liberty of the press, as the first step towards the introduction of that monarchy which it is their real purpose to proclaim and establish.

Mexicans, we must treat as enemies and overthrow the tyrants who, whilst they have wronged and insulted us, have deprived you of your liberty; but the Mexican people who remain neutral during the contest shall be protected against their military despots, by the publican army of the Union.

[No. 30.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Matamoras, Texas, April 26, 1846.

SIR: I have respectfully to report that General Arista arrived in Matamoras on the 24th instant, and assumed the chief command of the Mexican troops. On the same day he addressed me a communication conceived in courteous terms, but saying that he considered hostilities commenced and should prosecute them. A translation of his note and a copy of my reply will be transmitted the moment they can be prepared. I despatch this by an express which is now waiting.

I regret to report that a party of dragoons, sent out by me on the 24th instant to watch the course of the river above on this bank, became engaged with a very large force of the enemy, and after a short affair, in which some sixteen were killed and wounded, appear to have been surrounded and compelled to surrender. Not one of the party has returned, except a wounded man sent in this morning by the Mexican commander, so that I cannot report with confidence the particulars of the engagement or the fate of the officers, except that Captain Hardee was known to be a prisoner and unhurt. Captain Thornton, and Lieutenants Mason and Kane, were the other officers. The party was 63 strong.

Hostilities may now be considered as commenced, and I have this day deemed it necessary to call upon the governor of Texas for four regiments of volunteers—two to be mounted and two to serve as foot. As some delay must occur in collecting these troops, I have also desired the governor of Louisiana to send out four regiments of infantry as soon as practicable. This will constitute an auxiliary force of nearly 5,000 men, which will be required to prosecute the war with energy, and carry it, as it should be, into the enemy's country. I trust the department will approve my course in this matter, and will give the necessary orders to the staff departments for the supply of this large additional force.

If a law could be passed authorizing the President to raise volunteers for twelve months, it would be of the greatest importance for a service so remote from support as this.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. Army commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 32.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, May, 3, 1846.

SIR: Since the date of my despatch No. 30, advising you of the state of things in this quarter, the enemy has made demonstrations on this side of the river, leading to the belief that he intended an enterprise against our depot at this place. Owing to the peculiar nature of the country, and our deficiency in the proper description of light troops, I have been kept ignorant, to a great degree, of his movements. It was known, however, that he had crossed above in considerable force, as the unfortunate result of the reconnoissance conducted by Captain Thornton clearly showed Owing to the unfinished state of the field work at our position, I could not prudently attempt any enterprise against this force for several days. In the meantime I received information, on which I could rely with tolerable certainty, that the enemy was preparing to cross below my position, with the view of effecting a junction with the force from above. I could not believe that even with 4,000 men he would make an attempt upon my camp opposite Matamoras, and I was therefore compelled to suppose that the depot at this point was the object of his movement. I was strengthened in this belief by the knowledge that provisions had become exceedingly scarce in Matamoras since the blockade of the river. I therefore hastened the operations on the field work, and was able, by great exertions on the part of the troops, to bring it into a good state of defence by the 1st of May. The 7th infantry, under Major Brown, with Captain Lowd's and Lieutenant Bragg's companies of artillery, and the sick of the army, were left in the work, and the main force marched under my immediate command at 3½ p. m. on that day. At 11 o'clock the army bivouacked in the prairie about ten miles from this depot, which it reached the next day without discovering any signs whatever of the enemy. Some scouts, from a company of rangers sent forward last night, report a large force encamped in the road, and even surprised one of its pickets, shooting several men.

I propose remaining here, if not necessarily called back to the river, until the arrival of some ordnance supplies, and perhaps recruits from New Orleans.

I respectfully enclose the reports of Captain Thornton and Captain Hardee of the recent affair, in which, with nearly fifty dragoons, they were made prisoners of war. Captain Hardee's, which alone gives particulars, was of course made under the supposition of Captain Thornton's death. A copy of my instructions to Captain Thornton, which will be furnished as soon as I can again have access to my papers, will show that nothing was wanting on my part in the way of caution to that officer. I abstain from further comment, as a judicial investigation will no doubt be finally had in the case. There seems no doubt that Lieutenant Mason was killed.

I regret to be under the necessity of reporting that the camp of Captain Walker's company of rangers, between this point and Matamoras, was surprised on the morning of the 28th instant, by a party of ranchero cavalry. Five rangers are known to have been killed, and five others are missing. The enemy sustained some slight loss, but of what extent is not known. The officer of the company and about half its strength were absent on detached service at the time the surprise occurred. Had the men who were left obeyed the injunctions of the captain, a tried frontier soldier, they would never have met such a disaster. Our men and officers have spirit enough, but lack prudence, which a little active service will soon teach them.

I enclose a sketch, showing the position of the fort and the lines occupied by the corps of the army from the 13th April to the 1st May.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig Gen U. S Army commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Matamoras, Mexico, April 27, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report my arrival at this place to-day, and to state that agreeably with your orders I proceeded to within three miles of La Rosia, when I was informed that the enemy had crossed in large numbers. Upon receiving this information, our guide refused to go any farther. I was therefore compelled to move on without him, in order to carry out your instructions to me. The advanced guard was increased, and Lieutenant Mason placed in command of it, with orders to keep about one-quarter of a mile ahead. When he had gone about two miles, I discovered some Mexicans near a house in a large field. I halted the advanced guard, and went into the field myself to see them. I had not gone more than a hundred yards when they fled; I turned round and motioned to the advanced guard to come on. In the mean time the main body of the squadron had come up to the advance guard, and, mistaking my order, followed in after them; and while I was questioning a Mexican the enemy appeared. I immediately ordered a charge, in order to cut my way through them; but finding their numbers too large to contend with any longer, I ordered a retreat; and although entirely surrounded, we endeavored to cut our way through to camp. In the retreat my horse fell upon me, and I was unable to rise. I am now fully convinced that we were watched from the time we left camp, and that preparations were so made as to prevent our ever returning. It affords me great pleasure to say that the officers and men under my command, both individually and collectively, behaved in the most gallant manner.

As a prisoner of war, I am happy to inform you that attentions and kindness have been lavished upon me; as a proof of which, I will state that upon my reporting to General Arista that a dragoon had treated me rudely, he ordered him immediate punishment.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. B. THORNTON,
Captain 2d dragoons.

Captain W. W. S. Bliss,
Assistant Adjutant General.

MATAMORAS, MEXICO, April 26, 1846.

SIR: It becomes my painful duty to inform you of the circumstances which led to our being brought to this place as prisoners of war. Captain Thornton's command, consisting of fifty-two dragoons, left camp, as you know, at night on the 24th instant; it marched 15 miles and halted until daylight, when the march was again resumed. Captain Thornton's orders, as I understood them, were to ascertain if the enemy had crossed the river above our camp, and to reconnoitre his position and force All his inquiries on the way tended to the conviction that the enemy had crossed in strength. About 28 miles from our camp our guide became so satisfied of this fact that he refused to go any further, and no entreaties on the part of Captain Thornton could shake his resolution. About three miles from this latter place we came to a large plantation bordering the river, and enclosed with a high chapparal fence, with some houses at its upper extremity. To these houses Captain Thornton endeavored, by entering the lower extremity, to approach; but failing to do so, he was compelled to pass round the fence, and entered the field by a pair of bars, the house being situated about 200 yards from the entrance. Into this plantation the whole command entered in single file, without any guard being placed in front, without any sentinel at the bars, or any other precaution being taken to prevent surprise. Captain Thornton was prepossessed with the idea that the Mexicans had not crossed; and if they had, that they would not fight. I had been placed in rear, and was therefore the last to enter. When I came up to the house I found the men scattered in every direction, hunting for some one with whom to communicate. At last an old man was found; and while Captain Thornton was talking with him, the cry of alarm was given, and the enemy were seen in numbers at the bars. Our gallant commander immediately gave the command to charge, and himself led the advance; but it was too late; the enemy had secured the entrance, and it was impossible to force it. The officers and men did every thing that fearless intrepidity could accomplish; but the infantry had stationed themselves in the field on the right of the passage way, and the cavalry lined the exterior fence, and our retreat was hopelessly cut off. Seeing this, Captain Thornton turned to the right and skirted the interior of the fence, the command following him. During this time the enemy were shooting at us in every direction; and when the retreat commenced, our men were in a perfect state of disorder. I rode up to Captain Thornton and told him that our only hope of safety was in tearing down the fence: he gave the order, but could not stop his horse, nor would the men stop. It was useless, for by this time the enemy had gained our rear in great numbers. Foreseeing that the direction which Captain Thornton was pursuing would lead to the certain destruction of himself and men, without the possibility of resistance, I turned to the right and told the men to follow me. I made for the river, intending either to swim it or to place myself in a position for defence. I found the bank too boggy to accomplish the former, and I therefore rallied the men, forming them in order of battle in the open field, and without the range of the infantry behind the fence. I counted twenty-five men and examined their arms, but almost every one had lost a sabre, a pistol, or carbine: nevertheless, the men were firm and disposed, if necessary, to fight to the last extremity. In five minutes from the time the first shot was fired, the field was surrounded by a numerous body of men. However, I determined to sell our lives as dearly as possible if I could not secure good treatment, and accordingly I went forward and arranged with an officer that I should deliver myself and men as prisoners of war, to be treated with all the consideration to which such unfortunates are entitled by the rules of civilized warfare. I was taken to General Torrejon, who by this time had his whole force collected in the field. I found that some prisoners had already been taken; which, together with those I had and those which were subsequently brought in, amounted to 45 men, exclusive of Lieutenant Kane and myself. Four were wounded. I know nothing certain of the fate of Captain Thornton and Lieutenant Mason: the latter I did not see after the fight commenced. I am convinced they both died bravely. The former I know was unhorsed, and killed, as I learn, in single combat, Romano Falcon. Lieutenant Mason's spurs were seen, after the fight, in possession of the enemy. The brave Sergeant Tredo fell in the first charge. Sergeant Smith was unhorsed and killed. The bodies of seven men were found, including, as I believe, the two officers above mentioned.

I was brought to Matamoras to-day about 4 o'clock, and I take pleasure in stating that since our surrender I and my brave companions in misfortune have been treated with uniform kindness and attention. It may soften the rigors of war for you to be informed fully of this fact. Lieutenant Kane and myself are living with General Ampudia: we lodge in his hotel, eat at his table, and his frank, agreeable manner and generous hospitality almost make us forget our captivity. General Arista received us in the most gracious manner; said that his nation had been regarded as barbarous, and that he wished to prove to us the contrary. Told Lieutenant Kane and myself that we should receive half pay, and our men should receive ample rations, and in lieu of it for to-day 25 cents a piece. On declining the boon on the part of Lieutenant Kane and myself, and a request that we might be permitted to send to camp for money, he said no; that he could not permit it; that he intended to supply all our wants himself. These promises have already been fulfilled in part.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. T. HARDEE,
Captain 2d Dragoons.

[No. 33.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, May 5, 1846.

SIR: On the morning and during the day of the 3d instant, a heavy cannonade was heard in the direction of Matamoras. Though not at all solicitous in regard to the safety of our fort, I was anxious to hear from Major Brown, and despatched a party to communicate with him under cover of a squadron of cavalry. The squadron returned on the morning of the 4th, after reconnoitring the enemy's position on the prairie, but without bringing news from Major Brown, the party sent forward to communicate not having returned. This morning, however, the party which was conducted by Captain Walker, of the rangers, returned to this place, bearing a despatch from Major Brown, which I have the honor to submit herewith. I cannot speak too highly of the good conduct of Major Brown and his command, and the excellent dispositions of himself and the engineer officer, Captain Mansfield, by which so severe a cannonade was sustained with so little loss.

I am waiting at this place the arrival of the recruits from New Orleans, when I shall move forward to join Major Brown and assume offensive operations.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A. commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Head-quarters, Fort Texas,
May 4, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that on the morning of the 3d instant the enemy's batteries opened on us at 5 o'clock. The firing commenced at the small sand-bag fort, and was continued with seven guns. Our batteries were immediately manned, and a strong fire kept upon it from our batteries of eighteen and six-pounders until the firing ceased from it; this battery ceased firing in thirty minutes after our batteries opened upon it, two of the guns of the enemy supposed to be dismounted.

The enemy then commenced firing from the lower fort and mortar battery. One mortar only observed, which was removed from the sand-bag fort, from whence the first shell was thrown; this fire was kept up briskly; and although the shot were generally well aimed, they did us no harm.

After this removal of the guns of the enemy from the sand-bag fort, I ordered a deliberate fire, from Captain Lowd's battery on their guns and the town, ordering the consulate flags to be respected. My men were sent to work at 7 o'clock on the unfinished curtain and gateway, which was continued during the firing on the 3d instant, and was nearly completed at 9 p. m. Although the fire of the enemy was kept up with little cessation until half-past 7, there was but one casualty, a sergeant of company "B, 7th infantry," killed. At half-past 9 I ordered Captain Lowd to throw hot shot into the town; the attempt was made, but the shot could not be sufficiently heated to effect my object, to fire the town.

Finding that our six-pounders effected little the enemy's guns, owing to the distance, and wishing to husband our men and means, I ordered the fire to cease and the guns posted to repel an assault from the rear. The enemy's fire was then concentrated on Captain Lowd's battery, but doing no harm, although the embrasures were frequently struck. Our 18-pounders were fired deliberately and effectually until about 10 o'clock, when, finding that the enemy could do us no harm, I ordered the firing to cease, as it was impossible to silence the enemy's mortar, and from this we were only in danger; at this time, 10 o'clock, the enemy's fire was suspended temporarily, but recommenced and continued at intervals until 12 o'clock at night. It is believed that during this period the enemy fired twelve or fifteen shot. Between two and three o'clock this morning Captain Walker came in, and left here about 4; shortly after reveillé he returned. At 5 o'clock this morning the firing was recommenced by the enemy, continued for about twelve or fifteen shots, and kept up at long intervals; one shell at 11 o'clock, one at 12, one howitz and shell at 5—all ineffectual. We are constantly on the alert, and I cannot speak too highly of the efficiency of the officers and men of my command. Our defences are continued daily, and, when necessity requires, at night.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. BROWN,
Major 7th Infantry, commanding.

Capt. W. W. S. Bliss,
Assist. Adj't Gen. Army of Occupation, Texas.

[No. 34.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, Texas, May 7, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully report that I shall march this day with the main body of the army to open a communication with Major Brown, and throw forward supplies of ordnance and provisions. If the enemy oppose my march, in whatever force, I shall fight him. Occasional guns are heard in the direction of Matamoras, showing that every thing is right in that quarter.

Yesterday the recruits under Lieutenant McPhail arrived here. After filling up the companies of the permanent garrison, (A, 1st artillery, and G, 4th artillery,) the remainder of the detachment, with its officers, was placed under Major Monroe's orders to assist in the defence of the depot. The men are yet two raw to take the field, though efficient for garrison defence. They will be permanently assigned as soon as practicable.

The four companies of the 1st infantry are hourly expected, and will be a seasonable reinforcement. The first shipment of volunteers from New Orleans may also soon be looked for; their arrival will enable me to open the river and free our communications.

I have to acknowledge your communication of April 20; copies of your letters to Major Clark, April 11; General Brooke, of April 18; and Lieutenant Colonel Pierce, of April 20; "general orders," Nos. 7 and 8; "special orders," Nos. 28, 29, 30, 32, and 33; and the Official Army Register for 1846.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

[No. 35.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near "Palo Alto," May 9, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I was met near this place yesterday on my march from Point Isabel by the Mexican forces; and after an action of about five hours, dislodged them from their position, and encamped upon the field. Our artillery, consisting of two 18 pounders and two light batteries, was the arm chiefly engaged, and to the excellent manner in which it was manœuvred and served is our success mainly due.

The strength of the enemy is believed to have been about 6,000 men, with 7 pieces of artillery and 800 cavalry; his loss is probably at least 100 killed. Our strength did not exceed, all told, 2,300, while our loss was comparatively trifling—4 men killed, 3 officers and 39 men wounded; several of the latter mortally. I regret to report that Major Ringgold, 3d artillery, and Captain Page, 4th infantry, are severely wounded; Lieutenant Luther, 2d artillery, slightly so.

The enemy has fallen back, and it is believed has repassed the river. I have advanced parties now thrown forward in his direction, and shall move the main body immediately.

In the haste of this first report, I can only say that the officers and men behaved in the most admirable manner throughout the action.

I shall have the pleasure of making a more detailed report when those of the different commanders shall be received.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[No. 36.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp 3 miles from Matamoras, 10 p. m., May 9, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I marched with the main body of the army at 2 o'clock to-day, having previously thrown forward a body of light infantry into the forest which covers the Matamoras road. When near the spot where I am now encamped, my advance discovered that a ravine crossing the road had been occupied by the enemy with artillery. I immediately ordered a battery of field artillery to sweep the position, flanking and sustaining it by the 3d, 4th, and 5th regiments, deployed as skirmishers to the right and left. A heavy fire of artillery and musketry was kept up for some time, until finally the enemy's batteries were carried in succession by a squadron of dragoons and the regiments of infantry that were on the ground. He was soon driven from his position, and pursued by the battalion of artillery and a light battery, to the river. Our victory has been complete. Seven pieces of artillery, with a great quantity of ammunition, three standards, and some 100 prisoners, have been taken; among the latter General La Vega and several other officers. One general is understood to have been killed. The enemy has recrossed the river, and I am sure will not again molest us on this bank.

The loss of the enemy in killed has been most severe: our own has been very heavy; and I deeply regret to report that Lieutenant Inge, 2d dragoons, Lieutenant Cochrane, 4th infantry, and Lieutenant Chadbourne, 8th infantry, were killed on the field. Lieutenant Colonel Payne, 4th artillery, Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, Captain Hooe, and Lieutenant Fowler, 5th infantry, and Captain Montgomery, Lieutenants Gates, Selden, Burbank, Maclay, and Jordan, 8th infantry, were wounded. The extent of our loss in killed and wounded is not yet ascertained, and is reserved for a more detailed report.

The affair of to-day may be regarded as a proper supplement to the cannonade of yesterday; and the two taken together exhibit the coolness and gallantry of our officers and men in the most favorable light. All have done their duty, and done it nobly. It will be my pride, in a more circumstantial report of both actions, to dwell upon particular instances of individual distinction.

It affords me peculiar pleasure to report, that the field work opposite Matamoras has sustained itself handsomely during the cannonade and bombardment of 160 hours. But this pleasure is alloyed with profound regret at the loss of its heroic and indomitable commander, Major Brown, who died to-day from the effects of a shell. His loss would be a severe one to the service at any time, but to the army under my orders it is indeed irreparable. One officer and one non-commissioned officer killed, and 10 men wounded, comprise all the casualties incident to this severe bombardment.

I inadvertently omitted to mention the capture of a large number of pack mules, left in the Mexican camp.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 37.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Point Isabel, Texas, May 12, 1846.

SIR: I am making a hasty visit to this place for the purpose of having an interview with Commodore Connor, whose squadron is now at anchor off the harbor, and arranging with him a combined movement up the river. I avail myself of the brief time at my command, to report that the main body of the army is now occupying its former position opposite Matamoras. The Mexican forces are almost disorganized, and I shall lose no time in investing Matamoras, and opening the navigation of the river.

I regret to report that Major Ringgold died the morning of the 11th instant, of the severe wounds received in the action of "Palo Alto." With the exception of Captain Page, whose wound is dangerous, the other wounded officers are doing well. In my report of the second engagement I accidentally omitted the name of Lieut. Dobbins, 3d infantry, among the officers slightly wounded, and desire that the omission may be supplied in the despatch itself. I am under the painful necessity of reporting that Lieutenant Blake, topographical engineers, after rendering distinguished service in my staff during the affair of the 8th instant, accidentally shot himself with a pistol on the following day, and expired before night.

It has been quite impossible, as yet, to furnish detailed reports of our engagements with the enemy, or even accurate returns of the killed and wounded. Our loss is not far from 3 officers and 40 men killed, and 13 officers and 100 men wounded, while that of the enemy has, in all probability, exceeded 300 killed. More than 200 have been buried by us on the two fields of battle.

I have exchanged a sufficient number of prisoners to recover the command of Captain Thornton. The wounded prisoners have been sent to Matamoras; the wounded officers on their parole. General La Vega, and a few other officers, have been sent to New Orleans, having declined a parole, and will be reported to Major General Gaines. I am not conversant with the usages of war in such cases, and beg that such provision may be made for these officers as may be authorized by law. Our own prisoners have been treated with great kindness by the Mexican officers.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 40.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
City of Matamoras, May 18, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report that my very limited means for crossing rivers prevented a complete prosecution of the victory of the 9th inst. A ponton train, the necessity of which I exhibited to the department last year, would have enabled the army to cross on the evening of the battle, take this city, with all the artillery and stores of the enemy, and a great number of prisoners; in short, to destroy entirely the Mexican army. But I was compelled to await the arrival of heavy mortars, with which to menace the town from the left bank, and also the accumulation of small boats. In the meantime the enemy had somewhat recovered from the confusion of his flight, and ought still, with the 3,000 men left him, to have made a respectable defence. I made every preparation to cross the river above the town, while Lieutenant Colonel Wilson made a diversion on the side of Burrita; and the order of march was given out for 1 o'clock yesterday, from the camp near Fort Brown, when I was waited upon by General Requena, empowered by General Arista, commanding in chief the Mexican forces, to treat for an armistice until the governments should finally settle the question. I replied to this that an armistice was out of the question; that a month since I had proposed one to General Ampudia, which was declined; that circumstances were now changed; that I was receiving large reinforcements, and could not now suspend operations which I had not initiated or provoked; that the possession of Matamoras was a sine qua non; that our troops would occupy the town, but that General Arista might withdraw his forces, leaving the public property of every description.

An answer to the above was promised in the afternoon; but none came; and I repaired at sundown to join the army, already in position at a crossing some two miles above the town. Very early this morning the bank was occupied by our two 18 pounders and three batteries of field artillery, and the crossing commenced. The light companies of all the battalions were first thrown over, followed by the volunteer and regular cavalry. No resistance was made, and I was soon informed, from various quarters, that Arista had abandoned the town with all his troops the evening before, leaving only the sick and wounded. I immediately despatched a staff officer to the prefect to demand a surrender, and in the mean time a commission was sent by the prefect to confer with me on the same point. I gave assurances that the civil rights of the citizens would be respected; and our troops at once dropped down opposite the town and crossed at the "upper ferry," the American flag being displayed at "Fort Paredes," a Mexican redoubt near the crossing. The different corps are now encamped in the outskirts of the city. To-morrow I shall make suitable arrangements for the occupation of the town, and for taking possession of the public property. More that 300 of the enemy's wounded have been left in the hospitals. Arista is in full retreat towards Monterey with the fragments of his army.

I deeply regret to report that Lieutenant George Stevens, a very promising young officer of the 2d dragoons, was accidentally drowned this morning while attempting to swim the river with his squadron.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR;

Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,

Washington, D. C.

[No. 42.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, Mexico, May 20, 1846.

Sir: On the 26th of April, I had occasion to advise the department that hostilities had actually broken out, and that, in consequence, I had found it necessary to use the authority with which I was vested, and call upon the governors of Louisiana and Texas for a force each of four regiments. The eight regiments thus called for would make a force of nearly 5,000 men, which I deemed sufficient to meet the wants of the service in this quarter.

At the same time that I wrote to the governor of Louisiana requesting this volunteer force, I addressed a letter to General Gaines desiring him to assist in organizing these regiments and having them properly supplied. In my communication to the governor, the organization was very exactly prescribed, being that indicated from your office on the 25th of August, 1845. I find, however, that this organization has been exceeded; and, moreover, that General Gaines has called for many more volunteers than I deemed necessary, extending the call to other States besides Louisiana. It will, of course, be for the government to decide whether the future operations in this quarter will require the amount of force (entirely unknown) which is coming hither. I only desire to say that this reinforcement, beyond the eight regiments mentioned above, was never asked for by me, and that, in making the call of the 26th of April, I well knew that if the Mexicans fought us at all, it would be before the arrival of the volunteers.

It was for the purpose of clearing the river, and performing such further service as the government might direct, that I thought it proper to ask for reinforcements.

It is extremely doubtful whether the foot regiments from Texas can be raised, and I shall desire the governor, who is expected here, to suspend the call for them. None of the mounted companies, except Capt. Price's, already in service, have reported to me.

I fear that the volunteers have exhausted the supply of tents deposited in New Orleans for the use of this army. We are greatly in want of them, and I must request that immediate measures be taken to send direct to Brazos Santiago say 1,000 tents for the use of the army in the field. The tents of the 7th infantry were cut up to make sand-bags during the recent bombardment of Fort Brown.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 43.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, Mexico, May 21, 1846.

SIR: Not being fully in possession of the views or policy of the government in regard to operations in this quarter, modified, as they perhaps have been, by the recent defeat of the Mexican army, I have the honor respectfully to solicit further instructions for my guidance.

Our future movements must depend, in a great degree, on the extent to which the Rio Grande is navigable for steamboats, and I fear that my expectations in this particular will not be realized. Though at times navigable as high as Camargo, or even Mier, it is doubtful whether a boat can now be pushed higher than Reinosa. Indeed, the "Neva," which is in the river and accompanied the expedition under General Smith, has not yet reached this place, though hourly expected. Could we establish and keep up by water a depot at Camargo, operations might be carried on in the valley of the San Juan, towards Monterey, the first city of importance in that direction. A direct movement from this point to Monterey would require vast transportation, chiefly by pack-mules, and would, moreover, be hazardous in summer on account of the scarcity of water, part of the route being supplied by wells only. The country between this and Monterey, by whatever route, cannot support an army.

I shall lose no time in ascertaining the practicability of the river for steamboats, and shall occupy Reinosa and such other points as a boat may be able to reach.

All the cavalry, regular and irregular, of the army, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Garland, is in pursuit of the retreating army, to harass its rear and capture prisoners and baggage. We have no authentic intelligence from the lieutenant colonel since his departure; deserters, however, are coming in from the Mexicans.

Lieutenant Colonel Wilson's battalion 1st infantry, with some 200 volunteers, was at Burrita on the 17th, and has since been reinforced by General Smith with about 700 Louisiana volunteers. This column is ordered to move up the right bank of the river, and I look hourly for its arrival.

A large amount of public stores, chiefly ordnance, has been found concealed in this town. We are gradually recovering it from the places where it was hidden. Two field pieces, several hundred muskets, and 200 shells, are among the articles recovered.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 44.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
City of Matamoras, May 24, 1846.

SIR: I have to report the arrival this day of General Smith, with the battalion of the 1st infantry, the Washington regiment of the Louisiana volunteers, and a company of volunteers from Mobile. Another regiment of Louisiana volunteers is below, and will probably arrive this evening or to-morrow. This command was accompanied from the mouth of the river by the steamboat "Neva," which succeeded without difficulty in reaching this place.

Lieutenant Colonel Garland returned on the 22d from his expedition in pursuit of the retreating army. He succeeded in capturing a small rear party, after a trifling skirmish in the night, in which a man, and unfortunately a woman, were killed on the Mexican side, and two men slightly wounded on our own. He pursued the route of the army for sixty miles, and then returned agreeably to his instructions. The scarcity of water and condition of his horses made it useless to proceed further.

I would respectfully solicit instructions as to the disposition to be made of certain property captured in the camp of General Arista. A pavilion and several pieces of massive plate are among the articles. His clothing and other property, purely personal, have been deposited in this city, with a view of being returned to him. I would suggest that the pavilion be sent to Washington, to be disposed of as the President may direct.

The recovery of ordnance and other public stores still continues here. Two pieces of cannon have been taken from the river, and small arms in considerable numbers have been taken in the town.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 46.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, May 29, 1846.

SIR: The communication addressed to your office by the Commissary General of Subsistence, dated the 9th instant, relative to the relief of Captain Waggaman, together with a copy of your reply thereto, has been received. In reply, I beg leave to state that the interests of the service will not, in my opinion, justify the relief of Captain Waggaman, except by an officer of the subsistence department proper. In this opinion the captain himself fully concurs. Indeed, the wants of the service in this quarter, particularly in the event of offensive operations, will require an increase rather than admit of a diminution of officers of the subsistence department; with these views, I must decline giving orders for the relief of Captain Waggaman, by an officer taken from the line.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF COMMISSARY GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, May 9, 1846.

GENERAL: I have to request that Captain George G. Waggaman, Commissary of Subsistence, may be relieved from duty with the "Army of Occupation," and ordered to report for duty at this office. I regret the necessity of relieving an officer who has been so efficient as Captain Waggaman, but his health is much impaired by the climate, and another summer in that region will endanger his eyesight. This information in relation to Captain Waggaman is derived from General Worth and other officers. He has not applied to be relieved.

I have further to request that General Taylor may be directed to select an experienced assistant commissary to take charge of the commissariat with this army for the present.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. GIBSON, C. G. S.

Brigadier General R. JONES,
Adjutant General, Head-quarters.

[No. 47.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, May 30, 1846.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 8th instant, calling for information relative to deserters who were shot near Matamoras, I have to state that soon after my arrival on the Rio Grande the evil of desertion made its appearance, and increased to an alarming extent; that inducements were held out by the Mexican authorities to entice our men from their colors, and that the most efficient measures were necessary to prevent the spread of this contagion. As our deserters, by merely swimming the river, were at once in the enemy's lines, pursuit and apprehension with a view to trial were out of the question. I therefore deemed it my duty, and warranted by the hostile attitude of the Mexicans, whose commanders assumed that a state of war existed, to give orders that all men seen swimming across the river should be hailed by our pickets and ordered to return; and in case that they did not return, that they would be shot. These orders were verbally given to the several commanders on or about the 1st of April. I annex a description of two soldiers who are supposed to have been shot under this order, remarking that it was impossible in the first instance to identify the individual with absolute certainty while in the act of crossing the river; and, in the second, to ascertain whether he were actually killed, the occurrence taking place at night. I beg leave to add, that these measures seem to have checked and nearly stopped the practice.

How far I should have been justified in seeing our ranks daily thinned by the insidious arts of the Mexican general, without resorting to the most efficient steps to stop it, I cheerfully leave to the decision of the War Department. It may not be improper to say that it is known that some of our deserters were employed against us, and actually served guns in the cannonade and bombardment of Fort Brown.

As connected with this subject, I enclose an original draught, found in General Arista's papers, of an invitation to our soldiers to desert. A similar call was previously made by Ampudia, and has already found its way into the public prints. The department may see from these documents what arms were used against us.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, May 31, 1846.

W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

General Arista's advice to the soldiers of the United States army.

Soldiers! You have been enlisted in time of peace to serve in that army for a specific term, but your obligation never implied that you were bound to violate the laws of God, and the most sacred rights of friends! The United States government, contrary to the wishes of a majority of all honest and honorable Americans, has ordered you to take forcible possession of the territory of a friendly neighbor, who has never given her consent to such occupation. In other words, while the treaty of peace and commerce between Mexico and the United States is in full force, the United States presuming on her strength and prosperity, and on our supposed imbecility and cowardice, attempts to make you the blind instruments of her unholy and mad ambition, and forces you to appear as the hateful robbers of our dear homes, and the unprovoked violaters of our dearest feelings as men and patriots. Such villainy and outrage I know are perfectly repugnant to the noble sentiments of any gentleman; and it is base and foul to rush you on to certain death, in order to aggrandize a few lawless individuals, in defiance of the laws of God and man! It is to no purpose if they tell you that the law for the annexation of Texas justifies your occupation of the Rio Bravo del Norte; for by this act they rob us of a great part of Tamaulipas, Coahuila, Chihuahua, and New Mexico, and it is barbarous to send a handful of men on such an errand against a powerful and warlike nation. Besides, the most of you are Europeans, and we are the declared friends of a majority of the nations of Europe. The North Americans are ambitious, overbearing, and insolent, as a nation, and they will only make use of you as vile tools to carry out their abominable plans of pillage and rapine. I warn you, in the name of justice, honor, and your own interests and self-respect, to abandon their desperate and unholy cause, and become peaceful Mexican citizens. I guaranty you, in such case, a half section of land, or 320 acres, to settle upon, gratis. Be wise, then, and just and honorable, and take no part in murdering us who have no unkind feelings for you. Lands shall be given to officers, sergeants, and corporals according to rank; privates receiving 320 acres, as stated.

If in time of action you wish to espouse our cause, throw away your arms and run to us, and we will embrace you as true friends and Christians.

It is not decent or prudent to say more. But should any of you render any important service to Mexico, you shall be accordingly considered and preferred.

Head-quarters at Matamoras, April 20, 1846.

M. ARISTA,
Commander-in-chief of Mexican army.

[No. 48.]

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, June 2, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully acknowledge your communication of May 9, returning the muster roll of Captain Gillespie's company, to be sent to Colonel Harney for completion. The necessary instructions have been given for the due completion of these rolls.

I deem it proper to remark that the most careful instructions were given by my staff officers for the execution of the duty of mustering the volunteers at Austin and San Antonio. Extracts of the laws and general orders governing the subject were communicated to the mustering officers, and no means omitted, by written directions, of securing a proper performance of the duty. It appears that in Major Beall's case it was correctly performed.

It will not, I hope, be deemed out of place to call your attention to the great delay which results from forwarding any communication to San Antonio by way of my head-quarters. Our communications with that point are to the last degree uncertain, and generally occupy nearly as much time as to communicate with the seat of government.

While serving on the Rio Grande, or beyond it, I cannot be expected to exercise a very direct supervision over affairs on the Indian frontier of Texas.

In view of my necessary remoteness from the frontier station and my inability to reinforce them by regular troops, I authorized Colonel Harney, when hostilities first broke out in this quarter, to call upon the governor of Texas for an auxiliary force, if one should be indispensable, to hold the Indians in check. He has availed himself of this authority, and called upon the governor for seven companies.

I have no very recent advices from that quarter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 49.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, June 3, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose herewith a field return of the forces in and near Matamoras, both regular and volunteer. The corps known to have arrived at Point Isabel, of which no returns have yet been received, will carry the entire force under my orders to nearly 8,000 men.

I am necessarily detained at this point for want of suitable transportation to carry on offensive operations. There is not a steamboat at my command proper for the navigation of the Rio Grande, and without water transportation I consider it useless to attempt any extensive movement. Measures have been taken to procure boats of suitable draught and description, and one or two may be now expected. In the mean time I propose to push a battalion of infantry as far as Reinosa, and occupy that town. For any operations in the direction of Monterey it will be necessary to establish a large depot at Camargo, which I shall lose no time in doing as soon as proper transports arrive, unless I receive counter instructions from the department.

I trust the department will see that I could not possibly have anticipated the arrival of such heavy reinforcements from Louisiana as are now here and on their way hither. Without large means of transportation, this force will embarrass rather than facilitate our operations. I cannot doubt that the department has already given instructions, based upon the change in our position, since my first call for volunteers.

Our last accounts of Arista represent his force to be halted at Coma, an extensive hacienda on the Monterey road, about 100 miles from this point. He has pickets covering the roads leading to Matamoras, with a view to cut off all communication with the interior. The departmental authorities have issued a decree, denouncing as traitors all who hold intercourse with us, or with those who do so. I am nevertheless disposed to believe that in some quarters, at least, our presence is not unfavorably viewed. We have no intelligence from the city of Mexico.

Ordnance stores and other munitions of war are continually discovered in the town. Five pieces of cannon and a very large amount of balls, shells, and ammunition generally, have been brought to light.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 50.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, June 7, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose herewith the return of the army of occupation for April.

We have been many days without intelligence from the north; our last date from New Orleans being May 26th, and from Washington May 16th. I anxiously await advices and instructions from general head-quarters.

The body of the Mexican forces is understood to be in the vicinity of Linares. We hear from quite good authority that General Garcia has died, and General Torrejon is severely ill from fever, and that the troops are suffering from the same cause.

From the south we learn—but I hardly know what dependence to place upon the information—that General Alvarez, who some time since raised the standard of revolt, has declared in favor of Herrera, and that the troops ordered against him by Paredes had joined his party. There can be little doubt that there is some commotion in or near the capital. I have not heard from Vera Cruz since the arrival of the fleet.

Lieutenant Colonel Wilson's command marched yesterday. I await the proper kind of transportation to push forward supplies to Camargo.

I have to acknowledge "general orders" No. 12, and "special orders" Nos. 40 and 41.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brigadier General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[Nos. 53 & 54.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, June 24, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully enclose herewith the return of the regular troops of the army of occupation for May, 1846.

We are still without advices from general head-quarters later than the 26th of May, although the newspapers bring intelligence as late as the 8th of June. A mail is hourly expected, and I cannot explain why it has been so long delayed in New Orleans.

Some volunteers have arrived at Brazos Santiago from Tennessee, presumed to be of the 12 months quota; but I have received no report from their commander. The volunteers which previously arrived from New Orleans have nearly all moved to Barrita, except two regiments at this place; and I shall bring them up the river as soon as I can procure transportation, which I am impatiently awaiting, and for want of which I am still unable to make a forward movement. The volunteers from Texas are encamped near Point Isabel, and are now organizing under the direction of the governor.

We have no authentic intelligence from the interior of Mexico. The army at Linares is believed to be moving towards Monterey, much reduced in numbers by desertion and sickness. It is rumored that Bustamente is at the head of the government, and that Paredes is advancing with a large force to this frontier. Another report places Herrera at the head of affairs, but there seems to be no intelligence on which we can safely rely.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Brig. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 26, 1846.

SIR: The department has been very much embarrassed by the proceedings of General Gaines in calling out, mustering into service, and sending to you troops not comprised within your requisitions on Texas and Louisiana. Those embraced in your calls, and some from Alabama and Mississippi, who had left these States before General Gaines's calls could be countermanded, (the President having given validity to his proceedings to that extent,) are legally in service; but there is some question as to the period for which they can be held for service. As they do not come within the provisions of the act of Congress of the 13th of May last, the conclusion to which the department has arrived is that they are to be regarded as in service by virtue of the act of 1795, and consequently for the term of three months. If the exigencies of the service should require their employment for this entire period, you will of course retain them to the end thereof; otherwise they are to be discharged.

But a considerable body of troops beyond those embraced by your requisitions and the President's sanction have been mustered into service for six months by order of General Gaines, and have before this time reported themselves to you. It is in relation to these six-months volunteers that the greatest embarrassment has been felt. They have yielded to invitations which they thought were authoritatively made or would be sanctioned, have in most instances made personal sacrifices to obey the impulses of patriotism, and gone forth in the hope of having an opportunity of rendering valuable services to their country. To decline to receive them, to send them back to their homes without giving them employment, will undoubtedly cause regret, disappointment, and mortification; yet, after mature consideration, the government does not discover that there is any other alternative. They are not legally in the public service under any existing law, and the President cannot receive them as volunteers unless they should tender their services for twelve months, or during the war with Mexico. This latter alternative—that is, to become volunteers under the act of the 13th of May—you have been authorised to tender to them. Should they decline it, there is no other course but to cause them to be returned to their respective homes. This is truly a painful alternative, and most gladly would the government here avoid it, if it could be done consistently with official obligations and a due regard to existing laws.

It is presumed that Congress will make provision to pay them, and authorise the expense which has been incurred in fitting them out and in sending them to you, together with that attending their return. Should your arrangements be such as to require the immediate service of the six-months volunteers—as distinguished from those State troops legally in service—you will be justified in deferring the execution of the order for their discharge. Indeed, it is hoped that many of them will become volunteers for twelve months or during the war, so that they can be placed in service under the sanction of law. Those who responded to your call, or were recognized by the order of the President, can be retained three months; but if their services are not needed, or likely to be needed, you will cause them also to be sent home and discharged.

You will perceive from the copy of a letter to the governor of Louisiana, herewith sent, that the order heretofore given to you has occasioned great dissatisfaction, and is regarded as a violation of contract. I also send you my reply to it, which contains the views of the government upon the whole matter. I sincerely wish there was a course open to be pursued which would avoid the difficulties; but the dictates of duty and respect for the laws must overrule all other considerations. In executing these orders you will do what you can to make the proceedings acceptable to the public spirited and patriotic troops who are to be affected by it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
New Orleans, June 12, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from the War Department, dated the 2d instant, the concluding paragraph of which relates to a matter fully explained and answered, I hope satisfactorily, in my reply to a previous despatch from that department, of the 19th ultimo.

The communication in other respects has, I must confess, given me the greatest surprise and uneasiness; and I cannot contemplate the result likely to arise from the alternative which you have instructed General Taylor to impose on the Louisiana volunteers, of being sent home and disbanded, or of enlisting for twelve months under the act of Congress of the 13th ultimo, without emotions of decided repugnance.

I therefore earnestly entreat the government to ponder and reflect upon the circumstances attending the enlistment of these troops before consummating, as to them, an ex post facto measure of hardship and of flagrant injustice. They were not enlisted, organized, nor mustered into the service of the United States, in virtue of the provisions of the act of the 13th of May; and, in my judgment, it would be a harsh and unnecessary proceeding to subject them to the torture of enlisting under it for twelve months, or of being ordered home in the event of an unwillingness so to enlist. General Taylor's requisition upon this State is couched, in part, in the following terms: "I have the honor, under the authority of the War Department, to call upon the State of Louisiana for four regiments of infantry, to be ordered into the service with the utmost despatch, and for the longest period authorised by law."

The law governing and prescribing the period of enlistment is of course the State law, section 80, of an act entitled "An act for the organization and discipline of the militia of the State of Louisiana," and in the following language: "No detachment shall be required to serve more than three months at one time, unless in case of urgent necessity, when the commander-in-chief is authorized to detain them sixty days longer. The time in going to the place of rendezvous and returning from the place of discharge is not counted in the time of service." It will be seen, by this section, that it was necessary to strain a point to extend the period to six months.

But the emergency appeared to demand it, and with cheerful acquiescence the volunteers engaged for six months, in order that General Taylor's requisition might be met in the spirit as well as in the letter. The act of Congress of 28th February, 1795, (Gordon's Digest, article 2,411,) provides that "no officer, non-commissioned officer, or private of the militia, shall be compelled to serve more than three months." Thus it is apparent that the Louisiana volunteers were enlisted "for the longest period authorised by law," as the law then stood, and their position under it cannot now be changed by the act of the 13th of May, unless forced by the exercise of arbitrary power.

I also beg the department to consider, for one moment, the circumstances under which the enlistment of these volunteers was required. The call upon the patriotism of Lousiana presented a startling view of the critical and perilous situation of the army and of Point Isabel, and left no time for calculating reflection, and none for delay. An absorbing, energetic sentiment of duty to the country possessed the minds and hearts of this entire community. The judge deserted the bench, the lawyer his clients, the physician his patients, the merchant his counting-house, the mechanic his workshop, and the minister of the Gospel his pulpit, to respond to the proclamation for volunteers; and though we had severe difficulties to encounter, by union and decision of action they were speedily overcome. In an incredible short space of time several thousand brave and devoted men were forwarded to the seat of war, where they happily arrived in time to enable General Taylor more confidently to assume an offensive attitude against the enemy, and to crown the brilliant victories of the 8th and 9th, already achieved, with the conquest of Matamoras. These men were despatched with the express condition and understanding that they were enlisted for the term of six months, unless sooner discharged by the cessation of hostilities.

Would it be just or expedient, I ask, or would it be in good faith, to disband these troops now, because they might be unwilling to change their terms of enlistment? I feel sure it would not, and trust with confidence that the department will reconsider and countermand the instructions to General Taylor on the subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISAAC JOHNSON.

Hon. W. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War, Washington.

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 25, 1846.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 12th instant, and regret to learn, as I do by its contents, that there is considerable misapprehension as to the import of my instructions to General Taylor in relation to organizing into volunteers for twelve months, under the act of the 13th May last, all those troops which had been sent to him for a shorter term of service, and to discharge those who should not choose to become such volunteers. I am not a little surprised that you should characterize such a proceeding as "ex post facto measure of hardship and of flagrant injustice," and I am quite sure you will not view it in that odious light when it is properly understood. Both the President and this department too sincerely and highly appreciate the disinterested patriotism of the volunteers, and their devotion to their country's interest, to be capable of inflicting upon them any wrong or injustice whatever. On the contrary, there is not a compenstion, nor a tribute of honor, to which their services and sacrifices justly entitle them, that would not be cheerfully conceded to them to the fullest extent within the power of the government.

Your excellency does not seem to be apprized of the true import of the order to General Taylor. You will perceive by the enclosed extract of that order, containing all that relates to this subject, that it is not an absolute direction to him to discharge those called into service who do not choose to become volunteers under the law of the 13th May. Its explicit language is, that he should proceed to organize into a volunteer force, under that act, the three-months men; and when he should have a sufficient force of that description—that is, of volunteers for twelve months—to meet his views and wishes, he was directed to dischage the remainder of those serving for three months.

The militia from Louisiana and some other States, legally in service with General Taylor, to whom the instructions to that officer applied, were those, and only those, who were embraced in and had responded to that general's requisitions, and those from Louisiana, Alabama, and Missouri, who had left their homes on General Gaines's unauthorized calls, before notice from this department was received that his action was irregular, and could not be sanctioned. Such as had left for the Rio Grande before this notice, though not included in General Taylor's requisition, were legally placed in service by authority of the President. These were the only State troops, except the volunteers under the act of the 13 h May, with whom it can be said there is any contract. And what, let me ask, is the character of that contract? Your excellency is clearly right in the position that the six-months volunteers are not in service under the provisions of the act of 13th of May; and allow me respectfully to say, that, in my view of the case, you are clearly wrong in supposing that the six-months volunteers are in service for that period, or can be so received, under the law of the State of Louisiana. Without stopping to show, as I think it could be clearly done, that your State law does not authorize the organization of such a corps, I confidently maintain the position that by no State law whatever can the militia be called into the service of the United States. The federal constitution gives expressly and exclusively to Congress the power "to provide for calling forth the militia," &c. As your excellency concedes that "six-months volunteers were not called into service under the act of the 13th of May," I am not aware of any other act of Congress providing for calling forth the militia but that of 1795. If, therefore, they are legally in the service of the United States, it must be by virtue of this act, and by its provisions their term of service must be regulated. This act expressly provides that no officer or private shall be compelled to serve more than three months in any one year after arriving at the place of rendezvous. This is "the longest period authorized by law." There was no existing authority prior to the 13th of May for the employment of volunteers, except such as might be turned out by the executive of a State on the President's requisition for the State militia, and whose term of service must be limited to three months. Those volunteers who entered the service before the passage of the act of the 13th of May, or subsequently entered the service, not under its provisions, can only be regarded as militia; and whatever may be the militia laws of the States with respect to the period of service, or whatever the term for which they may have entered, they can only be held to service, under the laws of the United States, for the term of three months. It has never been understood that there is any "contract" or obligation on the part of the government to retain them during that whole term. On the contrary, it has been the frequent practice to discharge them before its expiration, and I have never learned that such a discharge was characterized as a "measure of hardship and flagrant injustice." Indeed, it is considered the imperative duty of the government to discharge the militia, when thus called out, as soon as their services are no longer needed. Considering the short period of engagement, and the sacrifices necessarily resulting from a sudden abandonment of their ordinary avocations, (the urgent circumstances which prompted them to hasten to the field having ceased to exist,) it was reasonable to believe that many would desire to return to their homes as soon as they could be honorably discharged.

Your excellency will perceive, by my letter to General Taylor on this subject, that I had no reference to any but three-months' men. I had, then, no idea that six-months' volunteers, a description of force unknown to any law whatever, would be organized, mustered into service, and sent to the Rio Grande. Such an organization, even through a call upon the executive of a State, and with his approbation, would be unwarranted by law. The President himself could not exercise, or confer on any one, the power to organize six-months' volunteers; and, consequently, he cannot give a valid sanction to such organization, under whatever circumstances it may have been made. From a high sense of duty, he has been compelled to withhold his approval of what has been done in relation to troops thus organized, except those embraced in General Taylor's requisitions, and those who had left under General Gaines's calls before countermanded. These are legally in service, but only for a term of three months. No officer, with his express authority, could legally muster them into service for a longer period.

While the President has been obliged to disavow the whole proceedings in relation to the six-months' volunteers from Louisiana, not embraced in General Taylor's call, he is fully sensible of the high and patriotic feelings which have led them to embark in the cause of their country. He properly appreciates the individual sacrifices they have made, and sincerely regrets the disappointment they must feel when they discover the position in which they have been placed, by the assumption of a power not given by law; and the measures of which you complain have been adopted with a view to place them on a legal footing, and to afford them an opportunity of serving their country without a violation of its laws. Their case may well be regarded as a hard one; but, with the executive government, there is no authority to afford other relief. Were it otherwise, it would give the President most sincere pleasure, as it certainly would this department, to apply the remedy. The best that, under existing laws, could be done, was to offer to those six-months' volunteers, who could not be legally recognised as in service, thus to put them into it by receiving them under the law of the 13th of May. This is not only the best, but all that could be done for these public spirited and meritorious men; and I exceedingly regret that this course, influenced by these motives, has given so much uneasiness to your excellency, and, as you think, will give so much dissatisfaction to the troops affected by it. The department did not seek to coerce them into service for twelve months, as your excellency's letter would seem to imply, but simply to afford an opportunity to such as might feel disposed to do so, to extend their engagements to that period. If I have here taken the right view of the law, and the duty of the Executive—and I am quite confident I have—you will, I trust, be convinced that no alternative was left to the Executive, and that your wishes cannot be carried out. However much you may desire that a different course should be taken, I am quite sure you would neither ask nor expect it, if it involved a disregard of official duty, and a palpable violation of law.

I am apprehensive that these irregular proceedings, in sending troops to General Taylor—not called for by him, not authorised by the Executive of the United States, not warranted by any existing legislative enactment—may create much dissatisfaction, but it is not in the competence of the Executive to remove the cause of it. Having adopted, in advance, the necessary measures to meet any emergency in the condition of the troops under the command of General Taylor, these irregular proceedings could not be anticipated; but, as soon as known to the department, the most prompt measures were taken to arrest them; and it is a matter of the deepest regret that they progressed so far as they did, before the check could be effectually applied. This department is disposed to use all the authority it possesses to mitigate the evils which have thus resulted. It has already asked from Congress a liberal appropriation to defray the expenses which have been thus incurred. But I desire to remind your excellency, that the consequences which you so severely lament, irremediable by the government, as I conceive them to be, are not the only evils likely to flow from this unauthorised procedure. Should those troops not legally in service be employed, it may well be questioned whether, with or without special legislation, they will be subjected to the rules and articles of war; whether the disbursements to them, and, on their account, not being pursuant to any existing law, can be passed by the accounting officers, even with the sanction of this department, if it could be given; and, whether the public property committed to them can be regarded as being disposed of in a legal manner. It is true, that most of these difficulties may be removed by future legislation; but it yet remains to be seen to what extent Congress will feel disposed to apply the remedy. The recent debate in the Senate on the resolution calling for the correspondence between this department and General Gaines, will show the views entertained by some of the prominent members of that body upon the subject, and the obstacles to be apprehended in the way of procuring the favorable interposition of Congress. While I commend the patriotic spirit which animated the citizens of your State, I cannot but regret that it had not been more cautiously directed. Had such been the case, the country might have been as well served, a profitless expenditure avoided, and the extent of personal sacrifices greatly circumscribed. But as it is, I can assure your excellency I am disposed, and ready, to do all that can be legally and properly done to comply with your wishes, and carry out the expectations of those who think they have cause to complain of hardships and injustice.

Considering the heavy sacrifices to which most of those patriotic men had submitted, it certainly was not anticipated that the execution of the instructions to General Taylor would have been so unwelcome to them, or, at least, to such of them as were unwilling to volunteer under the act of the 13th of May. Indeed, it might well have been supposed that "the judge [who] deserted the bench, the lawyer his clients, the physician his patients, the merchant his counting-house, the mechanic his workshop, and the minister of the gospel his pulpit, to respond to the proclamation for volunteers," would have desired to return to their respective avocations, when the exigencies of the public service no longer required the continuance of the praiseworthy sacrifices of individual interest and duty, imposed by a devotion to their country.

It is hoped that the explanations which have been given will satisfy your excellency that, so far from an entire disregard to the feelings and rights of the patriotic volunteers from your State, and of the obligations of the United States towards them, I was governed, in issuing the order referred to, by high considerations of public duty, and by the most sincere desire to do whatever I could within the range of that duty to gratify the wishes and promote the best interests of the volunteers themselves.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,

Secretary of War.

His Excellency Isaac Johnson,

Governor of Louisiana, New Orleans.

[No. 57.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,

Matamoras, July 1, 1846.

Sir: Your communication of May 25, and that of the Secretary of War, dated May 28, relative to the volunteers who have been mustered for a less period than twelve months, have been carefully considered, and I have now respectfully to state that the volunteers from Louisiana and Texas that were raised in obedience to my original call, volunteered for the term of six months, and beyond doubt consider themselves bound for that period. The same remark applies to the two additional Louisiana regiments, the regiments from St. Louis and Louisville, and seven companies from Alabama.

After consultation with General Smith, I have deemed it best not to open the subject of volunteering for twelve months to any of these corps, believing that whatever number might be willing to enrol themselves for that period, the evils of disorganization would far outweigh any practical good likely to result from the change. Much alarm and dissatisfaction have already been exhibited by these volunteers at receiving from home the rumor that they were to be disbanded unless they would volunteer for twelve months. They volunteered, with a promptness and enthusiasm seldom exhibited in any country, for the period of six months, and are willing and anxious to serve out their term if there be any prospect, however remote, of actual collision with the enemy. Should the expiration of the six months find them engaged in active operations, I doubt not a vast majority, perhaps all, would gladly continue their service until the close of the campaign.

I need not assure the department that the excess of volunteer force beyond my requisition, was sent to the army against my expectation and wish; but now that the regiments are on the ground, naturally anxious for service, already well organized and somewhat instructed, I would respectfully recommend that I be allowed to retain them until the expiration of their service, exercising the discretion of discharging any corps who may desire it before that time. They are impatient for service, and I shall spare no exertions to employ them actively and usefully while they remain.

In a day or two I will furnish a return of all the volunteer force. In the mean time the strength of the regiments who are enrolled for less than twelve months may be approximately estimated at 8,000 men.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

War Department,
Washington, August 3, 1846.

Sir: Your letter of the 1st ultimo, requesting permission to retain the six months volunteers in service to the end of the term for which they engaged, has been received, and laid before the President for his consideration.

When you take into view my letter of the 25th of June to the governor of Louisiana, (with a copy of which you have been furnished,) you will perceive the legal embarrassments which are apprehended to be in the way of complying with this request. The positions laid down in that letter are deemed to be correct, and to extend the term of service of the volunteers to six months in such a manner as not to come in conflict with them, is the difficulty now presented.

Upon a further consideration of the subject, I am confirmed in the opinion that by operation of the law of 1795, which gave the authority to call out the troops in question, the legal term of service is only three months. Their voluntary engagement for a longer term could not, it is apprehended, be made obligatory on them by any subsequent executive sanction. I do not question that you are right in assuming that there is no reason to doubt the readiness, on the part of the troops, to continue in service for the entire six months; still, many difficulties would arise from attempting to extend the term beyond the legal limit by an executive order or permission to that effect. I scarcely need point them out to you. They have reference to the authority to pay for their services, to make disbursements on their account, and to enforce the laws and regulations for the government of the army in respect to them. The executive could not give his sanction to retaining troops in public employment for any period of time, however brief, unless he was clearly convinced it could be done with the unquestionable sanction of law.

You will perceive by what is here stated, and by the views presented in the letter to the governor of Louisiana, the difficulties of complying with your request; yet I can assure you that on my own part, as well as on that of the President, a most sincere desire is felt to surmount these difficulties and to carry out your wishes, convinced as we both are that they have a special regard to the good of the service.

It is believed that the services of these volunteers for the period of six months can be obtained in a way which will avoid all legal embarrassments. No doubt is entertained here that, under the law of the 13th of May last, the President may accept volunteers with an understanding, either expressed or implied, that they shall be discharged at any period short of twelve months. The six months volunteers could all be brought legally into service under and by virtue of this act, and retained only to the end of the period of their voluntary agreement. You are, therefore, authorized to receive all or any part of those referred to in your letter of the 1st of July into the service of the United States, as a portion of the fifty thousand volunteers which the President is authorized to accept, and to discharge them at or before the end of the period for which they volunteered.

Should they be taken into service in this way, and with the understanding that they are to be discharged at the end of six months from the time when they entered the service, it is not doubted your expectation would be realized, that "should the expiration of the six months find them engaged in active operations, a vast majority, perhaps all, would gladly continue their service until the close of the campaign."

Such as have received clothing, or pay in lieu thereof, for six months, would, of course, have no further claim upon the government on that account.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande.

[No. 60.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 16, 1846.

Sir: In my communication of July 1st, I stated that the volunteers from Louisiana and Texas, raised in pursuance of my original call and the requisitions of Major General Gaines, had been mustered for six months, and doubtless considered themselves bound for that period. Such was my impression, and it was, I believe, a correct one at the time. It seems, however, that the question has been started among the Louisiana volunteers, perhaps by mischievous persons, whether they can be held for a longer term than three months; and, at the request of Brigadier General Smith, I now have the honor to submit the question to the highest authority. General Smith contends that they may be retained; and to do justice to his argument, I enclose herewith his communication on the subject. My own view certainly is, that they cannot be legally held after the expiration of three months' service; but, at any rate, I should deem it highly impolitic to keep them against their will, except with the law clearly in favor of such retention. I shall, therefore, order the discharge and muster out of service of any regiments that may claim it at the expiration of the three months' service. I do this the more readily, as I shall soon have more 12 months volunteers than I can possibly provide transportation for into the interior of the country.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, LOUISIANA BRIGADE OF VOLUNTEERS,
Camp at San Juan de Buena Vista, July 15, 1846.

CAPTAIN: I find myself very much embarrassed by the opinion expressed by General Scott, in a letter to the Secretary at War, on the subject of his plan of campaign here. Arguing on the impossibility of commencing operations here before the fall, he says that the six months volunteers cannot be retained legally a day over three months, and any exertion of martial law over them after that day will subject any one attempting it to punishment or retribution. Now, this letter has been circulated by some one interested in producing disorder, and there is great danger that an attempt will be made, at the end of three months, to claim a release from service, and that officers will be afraid to incur the responsibility of resisting it in the face of the opinion of the commanding general of the army. Having neither the letters nor the laws at hand, I can quote only from memory; but I will briefly state my view of the question.

Under the laws of the United States the President could only (previous to May 13, 1846) compel the militia to serve three months. This evidently was one of those jealous restrictions on the power of the general government in favor of the rights of the States and of the people. The President cannot exact or compel a longer service than three months. But a provision of law made to protect the rights of any class or person, and with no other view, may be waived by that class or person. The object of the law is to restrain the exertion of power over them, not to limit or restrain their own action. So in Louisiana certain acts of married women, and obligations contracted with them, are null; but they can waive the benefit of these provisions, and are bound by the obligations then made. Now, both the State of Louisiana, by the law providing for the raising of this brigade, and the volunteers, by their enrolment and mustering into service, by their acceptance of the bounty, and other advantages offered by the State to those who should engage for six months, have expressly waived the restriction made in their favor, and the volunteers are bound by the engagements so made. Besides, the 2d section of the act of 13th May, 1846, may have an important bearing on this point. The claim is made, that, being militia called into the service by the President through his delegate, they cannot be compelled to serve but three months. Now, if they have been so called into service by the President by virtue of "any other act," they "may, if in the opinion of the President of the United States the public interest requires it, be compelled to serve for a term not exceeding six months after," &c.; and they cannot say that they are surprised into an engagement they did not foresee, for this is precisely the term they themselves stipulated for. Whatever may be the law on the subject, it is of vital importance that it be settled before any act is done which may involve individuals irrevocably. I therefore respectfully ask, that the general would submit this question to the President, for the opinion of the law officers of the government, that, let the law be as it may, we may conform ourselves to it.

I presume that those mustered into service after the 13th of May, though ignorant of the passage of the law of that day, cannot invoke against their own voluntary contract a law which was then virtually repealed.

As the period of those first mustered into service is within twenty days of its close, if three months be the term, little time is left to hear from Washington; but they can, no doubt, be induced to wait an answer.

Your obedient servant,

PERSIFOR F. SMITH,
Brigadier General Louisiana volunteers.

Capt. W. W. S. Bliss,
Assistant Adjutant General.

[No. 64.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 22, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to acknowledge the receipt, on the 20th instant, of the instructions of the Secretary of War, dated the 26th ultimo, relative to the discharge of certain regiments of volunteers. I had already, on the 16th instant, advised you that I should not attempt to retain, against their consent, any of the six-months volunteers. A large number of those composing General Smith's brigade had expressed a wish to return home at the end of three months before the receipt of the Secretary's instructions; and, agreeably to the views expressed in my communication of the 16th instant, I should have ordered their discharge even without those instructions. With them, however, it became a double duty; and you will see from my "orders" No. 91, of the 21st instant, what measures have been taken for its execution. I think very few of these volunteers will consent to be mustered for twelve months.

Since the publication of "orders" No. 91, I have found it necessary so far to modify its provisions as to cause the St. Louis regiment to be mustered out at St. Louis, requesting the commanding officer of the 3d department, or at the barracks, to detail a proper officer for the purpose.

I hope there will be no unnecessary delay or difficulty attending the payment of these volunteers, or in making an appropriation, if necessary, (as it seems to be,) for the payment of those not regarded as legally in service. They leave the field under circumstances rather mortifying to many of them; and it is very desirable that any unpleasant feelings arising from the legal and necessary action of the government should not be aggravated by delay in procuring their little dues.

You will perceive that I have assigned Captain McCall to the important duty of mustering these volunteers (except the St. Louis legion) out of service. He has been selected from his known experience and fitness, and also in view of his expected appointment to a majority in the staff. I beg that no disposition may be made of him from your office until the completion of this duty.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 65.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 25, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose herewith a return of the volunteer force on the Rio Grande for the month of June. Much delay has unavoidably occurred in the preparation of this return. It will be seen that it exhibits separately the strength of the volunteers to be discharged under the recent instructions of the secretary, the volunteer force from Texas, which has yet some time to serve, and the twelve-months volunteers.

I have found it advisable to order the Alabama volunteers mustered out in Mobile, and have given instructions to that effect to Captain Van Horne, 3d infantry. Upon a comparison of dates, I discover that the battalion of Lieutenant Colonel Raiford comes within the operation of the President's sanction, and will be entitled to pay.

One regiment of Louisiana volunteers has already embarked for New Orleans, and the remaining ones will be shipped as rapidly as possible. In a week I trust the entire force will have sailed.

It is probable that a few companies may be organized from these volunteers to serve for the term of twelve months. I will cause all such to be mustered in and duly organized.

General Smith, colonel of mounted riflemen, is desirous of remaining, and I am equally anxious to secure the benefit of his services on the campaign. I propose, if it be not disapproved, to retain the colonel, and give him a command according to his rank.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 70.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 31, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to acknowledge your communication of the 17th instant, relative to the assignment of general officers, of volunteers, &c.

In regard to the disposition of the volunteers from Texas, I would remark that there seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the kind of volunteers already organized from that State. The Texan volunteers "that have assembled on the lower Rio Grande" are those called for in my requisition on the governor of the State of the 26th of April, properly three-months men; while it is presumed that the "quota" assigned to General Wool's command was intended to be one of the twelve-months volunteers. I have advised your office, from time to time, of the gradual arrival of the Texan volunteers, and have even reported that the governor designed to take the field in person. It was not doubted for a moment that the case was perfectly understood; and when advised from your office, under date of June 20th, that one mounted regiment and one foot battalion from Texas were assigned to General Wool, it was taken for granted that a requisition had been made upon the executive of the State for that force, of twelve-months volunteers.

The Texas volunteers now in service in this quarter, of which I enclose a consolidated return, entered the service upon the same terms with those from Louisiana, viz: for six months. Of course they can be legally held for only three months, and at the expiration of that time I shall have them mustered out of service, and paid. But I deem their services, particularly of the mounted regiments, indispensable to my operations, and I propose at the end of their service to muster them again for three months; discharging, however, all who wish it. The Texas regiment of foot under Colonel A. S. Johnston, formerly of the army, is an excellent corps, inured to frontier service. All the Texan troops are anxious to go forward; they are hardy, and can subsist on little, and I trust I shall be allowed to retain them in the manner indicated. I may add that very few, if any, of those now mustered in would consent to serve for twelve months.

The original call upon the State of Texas was for four regiments; two of horse, and two of foot. As these four regiments, under the organization of May 8, 1792, would constitute two brigades, or a division, I accepted Governor Henderson, who took the field with them, as a major general, and caused him to be mustered accordingly. Although but three of the four regiments have been organized, I deem it best to retain the governor in the capacity of major general, and beg that he may be recognised, with his appropriate staff, as established by the acts of May 8, 1792, and April 18, 1814.

It will be impossible for the mounted regiments from Kentucky and Tennessee to join me before I take the field; and without those from Texas I would be quite too weak in that description of force.

It is not likely, moreover, that the horses of those regiments will be in suitable condition for service for some time after their arrival.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 82.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, August 31, 1846.

SIR: I have already had occasion to address the department on the subject of the regiments from Texas. Called into service for six months, and thus on the same footing with those of Louisiana, they came of course under the same rule, and could not be retained beyond three months, the term fixed by law. But, owing to the great scarcity of regular cavalry, I felt compelled to retain the two mounted regiments, and proposed in my communication to you of July 31st to do so, re-mustering them at the end of their term for another three months. Their term of service expires about this time, and they have this day been mustered for pay. All individuals claiming discharge are of course at liberty to quit the service; but nearly all the men seem willing to remain for another term. This has not been the case with Colonel Johnston's regiment of foot (riflemen,) which has accordingly been mustered out of service and discharged.

One company of this regiment, commanded by Captain Shivers, expressed a great desire to remain, and entered the service under such peculiar circumstances—having come from Mississippi to Galveston in order to find an opening—that I have accepted it for three months, and attached it to the third brigade of regular infantry. Another company, raised by Captain Seefeld, in Galveston, under the orders of Governor Henderson, arrived at this place after Colonel Johnston's regiment was discharged; and being willing to enter the service for twelve months, I have directed its muster and ordered it to Port Lavaca, to be reported to General Wool as a part of the twelve-months quota from Texas. Still another company (Captain Wood's) arriving under similar circumstances, I have discharged and sent back to Galveston, at government expense. For the protection of the settlements about Corpus Christi, a company under Captain Gray has been mustered for twelve months and stationed there.

Of all the Louisiana volunteers, but one company is retained for twelve months—an excellent body of men, under command of Captain Blanchard. I have attached it to the second brigade of regular infantry.

The above comprises a statement of all the volunteers in service in this quarter for other periods than twelve months, and all detached companies of twelve-months men. The necessities of the service have compelled me to deviate, in one or two instances, from the precise instructions of the department. But I have had no other motive than the good of the service, and I trust the department will find, in the circumstances attending the various cases, sufficient reasons for the course taken.

Two of the companies of the first regiment of Texas horse (McCulloch's and Gillespie's) are detached from the head-quarters of the regiment, and employed under my immediate orders as spy companies. This will account for their rolls being transmitted separately.

Colonel Johnston, late commander of the rifle regiment from Texas, has expressed an anxious desire to participate in the campaign. I fully appreciate the value of his services, and the disappointment which the disinclination of his regiment to continue in service has occasioned him, and have therefore given him a position, during the campaign, in General Butler's staff, authorizing the issue of forage and subsistence, but of course clothing him with no rank and giving no assurance as to pay.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. Army, commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

War Department,
Washington, June 8, 1846.

Sir: You will have received before this will reach you a brevet commission of major general, and the President's order assigning you to the command of the army on the Rio Grande, according to your brevet rank. It is the President's intention to continue you in that command, and to commit to you the conduct in the ensuing campaign.

Owing to the irregular proceedings of General Gaines, in mustering into service volunteers without authority, it is impossible for the department to tell at this time what amount of force you have under your command; but such as you have it is not doubted you will employ to the best advantage in prosecuting vigorous operations against Mexico.

In my letter of the 28th ultimo, you were left to your own discretion and judgment as to the measures to be pursued before the end of the unfavorable season shall be passed; and it is not now intended to control that discretion. You best know what amount of force you will have under your command, and what can be best accomplished with that force.

It is presumed you will hold both banks of the Rio Grande, to a considerable distance from its mouth, and secure the uninterrupted use of that river for the transportation of supplies. I hope you will be able to take and hold in possession all places on it as high up as Laredo.

It is proper that I should advise you that a considerable force, which will be also under your command, will soon assemble at San Antonio de Bexar. The ultimate destination of this force is Chihuahua, if it should be determined that such an expedition would have a favorable operation in the conduct of the war; but it might be at once used to take and secure the several places on the Rio Grande. Though we have no despatch from you since those giving an account of the battles on the 8th and 9th of May, we have such information as induces the belief that you are in possession of Matamoras, and that you are not now threatened with any considerable Mexican force. It is desirable that you should find yourself in sufficient strength to capture and hold Monterey with your present force. You are apprized that large reinforcements are preparing to join you. Besides the regular forces now under your command, and which will be speedily augmented, you will soon have nearly 20,000 volunteers, (including those to rendezvous at San Antonio de Bexar,) who are to serve for one year. Your determinations as to immediate movements will, therefore, be somewhat influenced by the consideration of the additional force which will soon join you.

Much apprehension is felt as to what is called the unhealthy season. All agree that it is sickly on the coast, and it is the general opinion that it is healthy in the interior. Your positions should have a particular reference to this consideration. All the towns on the Rio Grande above Matamoras are represented to be healthy, and Monterey, in the interior, particularly so. It is therefore hoped that you may be enabled to place a considerable part of your troops in these towns until the fall campaign shall open. In taking positions, I scarcely need observe that the means of getting supplies, transporting munitions of war, as well as the ability to keep open the channels by which these supplies and munitions are to be furnished, are points to be well considered. Your information as to the practicability of effecting these objects, and as to the probable ability of the enemy to interrupt your lines of communication, and to oppose formidable obstacles to your controlling both banks of the river and to taking and holding Monterey, is far better than any which can be obtained here.

I have nothing to add to what was said in my last letter to you in regard to retaining in the service those now with you who have engaged for a less term than a year. You will not discharge, until the end of their term, those who will not engage as volunteers under the act of the 13th May last, if they can be advantageously employed in carrying on your immediate operations.

The President is desirous of receiving, and hopes soon to be favored with, your views and suggestions in relation to the fall campaign. His determination is to have the war prosecuted with vigor, and to embrace in the objects to be compassed in that campaign such as will dispose the enemy to desire an end of the war. Shall the campaign be conducted with the view of striking at the city of Mexico; or confined, so far as regards the forces under your immediate command, to the northern provinces of Mexico? Your views on this point will doubtless have an important influence upon the determination of the government here. Should our army penetrate far into the interior of Mexico, how are supplies to be obtained? Can they be, to any considerable extent, drawn from the enemy's country, or must they be obtained from the United States? If the latter, what are the facilities and difficulties of transportation? These are very important questions, and the answers to them will have an essential bearing in settling the plan and objects of the campaign; and it is desired that you should express your views fully in regard to them.

Again, it is important to know your opinion of the description of troops best adapted to operations in the interior of Mexico; what proportion should be infantry, artillery, and cavalry, &c. A peace must be conquered in the shortest space of time practicable. Your views of the manner of doing it are requested. It is not doubted that you will push your advantages to the utmost extent it can be done with the means at your command.

With this you will receive a statement of the volunteer force which it is proposed to muster forthwith into service, the description thereof, and the places designated for rendezvous.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande Texas.

[No. 3.]

Head-quarters of the Army,
Washington, June 12, 1846.

Sir: Having been assigned to duty in your present position according to your higher brevet rank, by order of the President of the United States, it is his intention to charge you with the general command of all the United States land forces, regular and volunteer, operating or to be directed against the republic of Mexico, below the province of New Mexico, with a view to the conquest of a speedy and honorable peace of that republic.

After the zeal, intelligence, and prowess you have exhibited in the military service of your country, it is considered that no external stimulus to promptitude and energy, in the further prosecution of the present war, is deemed necessary.

The adjutant general will make you acquainted with the forces, regular and twelve-month volunteers, who have been recently ordered to report to you.

Of other volunteers for shorter periods of service, who have joined or may join you, and who, after reaching you, may volunteer for a twelve month, we can here make no accurate estimate. The whole volunteer force, for twelve months, it is now intended to place under your general command, is (say) 16,280.* Should you deem an augmentation necessary, your wishes will be favorably considered. Recruits to fill up the ranks of the regular companies which are with you, or ordered to join you, to (say) about seventy men each, shall be sent forward as fast as practicable, so as to give you, we hope, in a short time, a total force of about 23,070 men.

*Exclusive of those who may re-volunteer, as suggested above, for twelve months.

Without waiting for the arrival of that amount of force, but before, and as soon as you shall deem it safe, in respect to the relative numbers and positions of the enemy, your knowledge of the country, your supplies and means of transportation, it is the wish and expectation of the President that, with your accustomed energy, you take up lines of march beyond the Rio Grande, and press your operations towards the heart of the enemy's country; that is, upon such important points as you may deem necessary to conquer and to hold. The high road to the capital of Mexico will, of course, be one of those lines; and, if successful in your advances, the establishment of posts in your rear, well guarded, according to their distances from each other, and the dangers of recapture, will be objects demanding your care. How far it may be necessary for for you to penetrate, if not, at least, to the capital, and what halts you may find it proper to make short of that mark, will, of course, depend upon the events of the war. Should continued success attend your operations, you may some time before be met by the proposition to treat for peace, with an intermediate armistice. No such proposition will be entertained by you, without your being first satisfied that it is made in good faith, and without your being in possession, or put by stipulation into possession, of such commanding positions as will insure good faith on the part of the enemy. Being satisfied on this point, you may conclude an armistice for a limited time, and refer the proposition to treat of peace to the government here. In such case, it should be stipulated that, pending the armistice, the authorities of the enemy's country shall furnish your army with all necessary supplies, according, and as near as practicable, to our regulations, for which you may agree to pass the proper receipts; leaving the payment or the settlement on account of such supplies to the definitive treaty of peace between the belligerents. But, as the credit of the Mexican government may be bad even with its own people, you may still be forced, during the armistice, as before, to rely on cash payments for all your necessary supplies. The contingent difficulty is here suggested, that you may turn it in your mind in advance. Instructions will be given here at once, to cause the disbursing staff officers with you to be well supplied with cash, for prompt payments, to satisfy justice, and to conciliate the people among whom you are to carry on military operations.

An expedition set on foot against the province of New Mexico, and probably North California, under Colonel Kearny, is considered, on account of the distance of his theatre of operations from yours, as independent of your general command, unless, indeed, events should bring him, unexpectedly, down the Rio Grande, or south, within your sphere. In such event, you may extend your orders to him, directly, or through Brigadier General Wool.

Of the troops ordered upon San Antonio, it is intended by the President, as intimated in the copy of instructions (herewith) to Brigadier General Wool, that a large portion should, under his immediate command, be directed by you, under the proper general instructions, against the city of Chihuahua and other important points you may indicate within the province of that name, in order to capture and to hold the same, subject to a definitive treaty of peace. The particular forces to constitute this expedition, the President has, to some degree, himself designated, viz: The cavalry, or mounted regiments from Tennessee and Arkansas, (two in all,) and one regiment of infantry or rifle from each of the States of Kentucky and Illinois. Such I understand to be his wish—not his positive command—in respect to those regiments of twelve-month volunteers. Thinking an addition of regular troops might be needed with that expedition, I have ordered upon San Antonio de Bexar two companies of the 1st United States dragoons, from Fort Gibson; one company of the United States 4th artillery, (Washington's,) with a harnessed battery, and two companies of the 6th United States infantry from Fort Smith. All those regular companies may be computed at about seventy men each. So many of them as you may deem necessary, you will put under the immediate command of Brigadier General Wool, as a part of the expedition against Chihuahua. The latter should be instructed by you not to interfere with the expedition under Colonel Kearny, except as above; but avail himself of, or make, opportunities to communicate occasionally with the colonel. In respect to reciprocal communications, Colonel Kearny will receive instructions from me, as such intercommunications may become useful or necessary to all parties.

Any forces remaining at San Antonio, beyond those you may order to march upon Chihuahua, will, of course, be subject to be disposed of according to your general plan of operations.

I need scarcely to direct your attention to the high importance of obtaining frequent, and, as far as possible, accurate intelligence of the enemy's numbers, positions, movements, and designs. For this purpose, many employés, each known only to yourself or one of your staff, will probably be needed. They, of course, must be more or less liberally paid by the quartermaster's department—in each case on your orders, or, in highly confidential cases, directly by yourself, out of money drawn by you specially from that department. You may extend like instructions to the commanders of any columns under your orders on detached and distant service.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Brevet Major Gen. Taylor,
U. S. Army, commanding, &c.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Adjutant General's Office, Washington, June 11, 1846.

GENERAL: On completing the duties to which you were specially assigned, in instructions from this office dated the 28th ultimo, I am directed by the major general commanding the army to desire you to repair without delay to San Antonio de Bexar, Texas, and there assume the immediate command of the troops, regulars and volunteers, ordered to that point.

Brevet Major General Taylor having been assigned to duty according to his higher brevet, by the President of the United States, and charged with the command of all the land forces of the United States operating, or to operate against the republic of Mexico in that quarter, you will previously, and after your arrival, report yourself, by letter, to him, from whom you will probably soon receive instructions to march, with a part of the troops assembling at San Antonio, against Chihuahua, the capital of the province of that name. In advance of such instructions, you will hold yourself in readiness for that particular expedition.

Captain Washington's company of light artillery (full battery) is en route for San Antonio de Bexar; and two companies of the 1st dragoons, and two companies of the 6th infantry, drawn from Forts Smith and Gibson, are under orders for the same point. This regular force will, it is supposed, constitute a part of your command.

As soon as you can dispense with the services of Colonel Groghan, the general-in-chief directs that you order him to report in person to Brevet Major General Taylor for duty as inspector general.

In reply to your letter of the 5th instant, on the subject of arms and equipments required for the volunteer regiments, I may refer you to Lieutenant Colonel Talcott's communication of the 5th instant, which apprizes you of the measures adopted by the Ordnance Department to insure the prompt and adequate supply.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Brigadier General JOHN E. WOOL,
United States Army, Cincinnati, Ohio.

[With the approbation of the War Department, I propose to write immediately to General Taylor, as follows:]

[No. 4.] HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, June 15, 1846.

SIR: For the greater certainty of reception, I send, herewith, a duplicate of my letter to you of the 12th instant.

You will please consider this note as a post scriptum to that letter.

Should you be met, as therein supposed, by a proposition to treat for a peace, under circumstances which you may deem sufficiently formal and sincere, you may, with or without agreeing to an armistice, at your own sound discretion—looking to the intimations of that letter on the subject—grant written passports for the use of any minister or commissioner, and his suite, who may be duly appointed by the Mexican government to treat with that of the United States, to enable such legation to communicate with our blockading squadron on the gulf of Mexico coast, or to enable the legation to pass, by land, our military posts in your rear. In the latter case, a small military escort to (say) Point Isabel, with permission to the legation to take passage in some vessel thence to (say) New Orleans, may be necessary.

I remain, sir, with high respect, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

[I think the within should be sent to General T. W. L. M.]

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 58.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, July 2, 1846.

SIR: In reply to the communications of the Secretary of War dated May 28 and June 8, and to that of the general-in-chief dated June 12, I have the honor to submit the following views in regard to the operations against Mexico from this quarter. I will remark that my constant efforts to procure information in relation to the nature of the country, amount of supplies, &c , have not been as satisfactory as I could wish, the various accounts often differing even in important particulars. Either from the ignorance or interested motives of those who profess to give information, it is extremely difficult to obtain any upon which we can implicitly rely.

In calling upon the States of Louisiana and Texas for an auxiliary force of about 5,000 men, it was my expectation with that force to be able to clear the course of the Rio Grande as high as Laredo, and to occupy or control the country to the foot of the mountains, capturing and holding Monterey, if circumstances permitted. With the proper river transportation, this could have been easily done: a depot would now have been established at Camargo, and our operations pushed up the valley of the San Juan. The difficulties and embarrassments that I have experienced for want of such transportation have already been sufficiently made known. These difficulties have been increased by the great excess of volunteers that have been sent out—say 3,000 men beyond my original call. I nevertheless propose, upon the arrival of the steamers now hourly expected, to throw forward this force with the regular troops to Camargo, and establish there a depot and base from which to operate towards the mountains. My reasons for retaining these six-months volunteers in service have been set forth in another communication; and I desire, from motives of health and other considerations, to keep them employed as actively as possible. The twelve-months volunteers can in the mean time form camps at healthy points in my rear, and, while receiving instruction, await the season for more extensive operations. The above dispositions can be made in the rainy seasons perhaps better than at any other time, as the river is then in a good navigable state. For operating with a heavy force, say 6,000 men, from this point towards Monterey and Saltillo, through which passes the only artillery route across the mountains, it is indispensable to employ the river as a channel of supply, and the valley of the San Juan, on one of the heads of which Monterey is situated, as a line of operations. The direct land route from this point to Monterey is much longer than the line from Camargo; in wet weather, impassable for artillery or heavy wagons, and in dry scantily supplied with water. Assuming, then, Camargo as the depot, and the valley of the San Juan as the line of operations, the question arises, what amount of supplies can be obtained, and how can a column be subsisted on this route? It is pretty well determined that we cannot depend upon any considerable supply of breadstuffs short of Monterey, or perhaps Saltillo, seventy five miles further south. Beef in abundance, it is believed, may be procured; and on this, with perhaps occasional issues of mutton, we must mainly depend for the meat part of the ration. From Camargo to Saltillo, then, we must expect to depend upon our depot for bread; and I am of opinion, from all I can learn of the resources of the country in pack mules and means of transportation generally, that a column exceeding 6,000 men cannot be maintained in bread alone as far as Saltillo. Saltillo itself is at no great distance from two or three fertile grain-growing districts; but how far the production in those districts may exceed the supply, I cannot with any certainty determine.

The above calculations in regard to subsistence are made on the supposition that we shall find the people of the country, if not friends, at least passive, and willing to part with their produce to the best advantages. I believe we shall find such to be their temper on this side of the mountains; whether this neutrality or indifference extends beyond, may well be questioned. Should they prove hostile, destroy their corps, and drive away their stock, it will be an extremely difficult matter to sustain a column at Saltillo—still more so to pass beyond that city..

Supposing a column of the above strength (say 6,000 men) able to maintain itself at Saltillo, it will become a question, depending for its solution upon the elements above indicated, how far that force may be increased, or what amount of the twelve months volunteers may be safely and profitably thrown forward from the rear, with a view to future operations.

From Camargo to the city of Mexico is a line little if any short of 1,000 miles in length. The resources of the country are, to say the best, not superabundant, and over long spaces of the route are known to be deficient. Although the road, as we advance south, approaches both seas, yet the topography of the country, and the consequent character of the communications, forbid the taking up a new line of supply either from Tampico or the Pacific coast. Except in the case (deemed improbable) of entire acquiesence, if not support, on the part of the Mexican people, I consider it impracticable to keep open so long a line of communication. It is, therefore, my opinion that our operations from this frontier should not look to the city of Mexico, but should be confined to cutting off the northern provinces—an undertaking of comparative facility and assurance of success.

With the view of cutting off the northern provinces, the projected expedition from San Antonio to Chihuahua may be of great importance. From the best information, however, which I now possess, I would suggest mounted troops alone for that expedition. I am satisfied that the route from that point to Chihuahua is not practicable for artillery or wagons, and infantry would rather embarras the movement of a mounted expedition. Mounted howitzers, to be packed, with their carriages, on mules, might be advantageously employed on that service, and indeed with the column designed to penetrate to Saltillo. There may be a great difficulty in supplying any considerable force between San Antonio and Chihuahua, although the line is not very long—probably not exceeding 300 miles. I hope to procure better information than any I now possess in regard to this route.

It will be perceived that my remarks on the line of operations from the Rio Grande southward have been confined to the question of subsistence, which is certainly the most important one to be considered. There are military obstacles on the route, particularly in the space between Monterey and Saltillo, where the defile of "La Riconada" is represented to be of great strength. This point, and perhaps others, if fortified, may give us some trouble; but if they can be turned by light troops—and such I believe to be the case—they will not long impede our march.

In regard to the "description of troops best adapted to operations in the interior of Mexico," I am scarcely prepared at this time to give a definite reply. The facility or difficulty of obtaining forage must necessarily control to some extent the amount of cavalry employed. At the estate of the Conde de Jarral, some 40 leagues from Saltillo, there will, I understand, be no difficulty in obtaining a remount when necessary, and forage for the cavalry. The field artillery under my orders (four batteries, including Washington's) will, particularly if filled up to the complement of guns, be quite sufficient for any operation in this quarter. We may have occasion for heavier guns, and I have directed two 12-pounder field guns to be procured, which, with the 24-pounder howitzers now in depot at Point Isabel, will constitute an efficient battery. We shall have two, perhaps three, regiments of horse from Texas under my original call. They are now organizing, under the governor's directions, at Point Isabel. These are six-months men. Should I find it necessary to increase the cavalry force, I can draw certainly one regiment from San Antonio and still leave quite enough for the expedition to Chihuahua.

I have given my views on most of the points connected with the operations from this frontier, purposly abstaining from any reference to movements against Tampico or Vera Cruz. The former place, I am induced to believe, could have been easily taken a month since, and could be so even now; but the yellow fever would not have permitted us to hold it, and I deemed it best to undertake no movement in that direction at this season of the year. Should we advance as far as San Luis Potosi, which has a communication, though not for wheels, with Tampico, the possession of the latter place would be important.

I am awaiting with the utmost impatience the arrival of steamboats suited to the navigation of this river to establish a depot at Camargo, and throw the troops gradually forward to that point. The rainy season has commenced, and the river is now in the best possible condition for navigation. Several boats were to leave New Orleans about the 20th of June. If not wrecked in the recent severe gales, they may be hourly expected here.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, general, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 9, 1846.

SIR: The proclamation which you were directed to spread among the Mexican people, will have put you in possession of the views of the government in relation to the mode of carrying on the war, and also in relation to the manner of treating the inhabitants. The war is only carried on to obtain justice, and the sooner that can be obtained, and with the least expenditure of blood and money, the better. One of the evils of war is the interruption of diplomatic communications between the respective authorities, and the consequent ignorance under which each party may lie in relation to the views of the other. The natural substitute of these interrupted diplomatic communications, is the military intercourse which the usages of war allow between contending armies in the field, and in which commanding generals can do much towards re-opening negotiations, and smoothing the way to a return of peace.

The President has seen, with much satisfaction, the civility and kindness with which you have treated your prisoners, and all the inhabitants with whom you have come in contact. He wishes that course of conduct continued, and all opportunities taken to conciliate the inhabitants, and to let them see that peace is within their reach the moment their rulers will consent to do us justice. The inhabitants should be encouraged to remain in their towns and villages, and these sentiments be carefully made known to them. The same things may be said to officers made prisoners, or who may visit your head-quarters according to the usages of war; and it is the wish of the President that such visits be encouraged; and, also, that you take occasions to send officers to the head-quarters of the enemy for the military purposes, real or ostensible, which are of ordinary occurrence between armies, and in which opportunity may be taken to speak of the war itself as only carried on to obtain justice, and that we had much rather procure that by negotiation than by fighting. Of course authority to speak of your government will be disavowed, but a knowledge of its wishes will be averred, and a readiness will be expressed to communicate to your government the wishes of the Mexican government to negotiate for honorable peace, whenever such shall be their wish, and with the assurance that such overtures will be met in a corresponding spirit by your government. A discreet officer, who understands Spanish, and who can be employed in the intercourse so usual between armies, can be your confidential agent on such occasions, and can mask his real under his ostensible object of a military interview.

You will also readily comprehend that in a country so divided into races, classes, and parties, as Mexico is, and with so many local divisions among departments, and personal divisions among individuals, there must be great room for operating on the minds and feelings of large portions of the inhabitants, and inducing them to wish success to an invasion which has no desire to injure their country; and which, in overthrowing their oppressors, may benefit themselves. Between the Spaniards, who monopolize the wealth and power of the country, and the mixed Indian race, who bear its burdens, there must be jealousy and animosity. The same feelings must exist between the lower and higher orders of the clergy; the latter of whom have the dignities and the revenues, while the former have poverty and labor. In fact, the curates were the chief authors of the revolution which separated Mexico from Spain, and their relative condition to their superiors is not much benefited by it. Between the political parties into which the country is divided, there must be some more liberal and more friendly to us than others; the same may be said of rival chiefs, political and military; and even among the departments there are local antipathies and dissensions. In all this field of division—in all these elements of social, political, personal, and local discord—there must be openings to reach the interests, passions, or principles of some of the parties, and thereby to conciliate their good will, and make them co-operate with us in bringing about an honorable and a speedy peace. The management of these delicate movements is confided to your discretion; but they are not to paralyze the military arm, or in any degree to arrest or retard your military movements. These must proceed vigorously. Policy and force are to be combined; and the fruits of the former will be prized as highly as those of the latter.

It is seen from the Mexican papers, that great attempts are made to prejudice and exasperate the minds of the people against us. The war is represented on their part as one of "national existence;" as if it was our wish to destroy the Mexican nation! It is represented as a war of "rapine and plunder;" as if we intended to rob and oppress the people? It is represented as a war of "impiety;" as if we were going to rob churches and pull down altars! The conduct of yourself, your officers, and men, has shown to all Mexican citizens that you have met, and as far as you have gone, the injustice and absurdity of all these imputations; but they are still systematically propagated through the country, and must find believers in a country where ignorance is so great, and the means of disseminating truth so small. The counteraction of these injurious imputations will be your particular duty; first, by a continuation of your just and honorable conduct towards the people, their property and religion, and kindness to prisoners; and next, by making it a point in your interviews with the commanders of the army of the enemy to speak of these unjust imputations, for the purpose of correcting them. It is the President's wish not only to bring the war to a speedy conclusion, but so to conduct it as to leave no lasting animosities behind to prejudice the future friendship and commerce of the two countries; nor to permit injurious reports to go forth to excite the ill will of the other republics, of Spanish origin, against us.

Availing yourself of divisions which you may find existing among the Mexican people—to which allusion has been made—it will be your policy to encourage the separate departments or States, and especially those which you may invade and occupy, to declare their independence of the central government of Mexico, and either to become our allies, or to assume, as it is understood Yucatan has done, a neutral attitude in the existing war between the United States and Mexico. In such of the departments or states as may take this course, you will give the inhabitants assurances of the protection of your army until the return of peace, so far as may be consistent with your military plans of operation. When peace is made, they may decide for themselves their own form of government. In such departments as may be conquered, or assume a neutral attitude, you may, at your discretion, observe the same course of conduct as that presented in the instructions given to General Kearny by the department on the 3d day of June, 1846. A copy of the instructions to General Kearny is herewith transmitted to you.

No reply has yet been received to the inquiries contained in my letter addressed to you on the 8th of June last. From your superior opportunities of acquiring correct information of the country to be invaded, and the facilities or difficulties of conducting a successful campaign through it, much reliance will be placed on your opinions. If, from all the information which you may communicate to the department, as well as that derived from other sources, it should appear that the difficulties and obstacles to the conducting of a campaign from the Rio Grande, the present base of your operations, for any considerable distance into the interior of Mexico, will be very great, the department will consider whether the main invasion should not ultimately take place from some other point on the coast—say Tampico, or some other point in the vicinity of Vera Cruz. This suggestion is made with a view to call your attention to it, and to obtain from you such information as you may be able to impart. Should it be determined that the main army should invade Mexico at some other point than the Rio Grande—say the vicinity of Vera Cruz—a large and sufficient number of transport vessels could be placed at the mouth of the Rio Grande by the time the healthy season sets in—say, early in November. The main army, with all its munitions, could be transported, leaving a sufficient force behind to hold and occupy the Rio Grande, and all the towns and provinces which you may have conquered before that time. In the event of such being the plan of operations, your opinion is desired what increased force, if any, will be required to carry it out with success. We learn that the army could be disembarked a few miles distant from Vera Cruz, and readily invest the town in its rear, without coming within the range of the guns of the fortress of San Juan d'Ulloa. The town could be readily taken by land, while the fortress, being invested by land and sea, and all communication cut off, must soon fall. From Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico there is a fine road, upon which the diligences or stage coaches run daily. The distance from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico is not more than one-third of that from the Rio Grande to the city of Mexico. Upon these important points, in addition to those mentioned in my letter of the 8th of June, your opinion and views are desired at the earliest period your duties will permit you to give them. In the mean time the department confidently relies on you to press forward your operations vigorously to the extent of your means, so as to occupy the important points within your reach on the Rio Grande, and in the interior. It is presumed that Monterey, Chihuahua, and other places in your direction, will be taken and held. If in your power to give the information, the department desires to be informed of the distance from Chihuahua to Guaymas, on the gulf of California; whether there be a road over which ordnance and baggage wagons could be taken, and whether it be practicable for an army to march from the former to the latter place, and what time would probably be required for mounted men, and what time for infantry or artillery, to do so. This information is desired before the department can be prepared to decide upon the propriety of sending forward such an expedition.

Your answer to this communication you will please to address directly to the President of the United States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding, &c.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, August 1, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the confidential communication of the Secretary of War, dated July 9, and to present the following remarks in relation to the several points embraced in it. Agreeably to the injunction of the Secretary, this communication is addressed directly to the President of the United States.

1st. As to the intercourse with the enemy, and means of obtaining information with regard to his movements, &c., I fear that no very satisfactory results will be obtained in the way proposed. The Mexican generals and other officers have exhibited, since the commencement of hostilities, a determination to hold with us as little intercourse as possible. A most rigid non-intercourse has been observed throughout, and since the 17th of June no communication whatever has passed between the head-quarters of the two armies. I shall not fail to improve such occasions, when they present themselves, in the manner pointed out by the Secretary. Since crossing the Rio Grande, it has been my constant aim to conciliate the people of the country; and I have the satisfaction of believing that much has been done towards that object, not only here, but at Reinosa, Camargo, and other towns higher up the river. The only obstacle I encounter in carrying out this desirable policy, arises from the employment of volunteer troops. Some excesses have been committed by them upon the people and their property, and more, I fear, are to be apprehended. With every exertion, it is impossible effectually to control these troops, unaccustomed as they are to the discipline of camps, and losing in bodies the restraining sense of individual responsibility. With increased length of service, these evils, it is hoped, will diminish.

2d. In regard to availing ourselves of internal divisions and discords among the Mexicans, it is hardly time yet to say how far this may be relied upon as an element of success. I have good reason to believe that the country lying between the Rio Grande and Sierra Madra is disposed to throw of the yoke of the central government, and will, perhaps, do so as soon as it finds a strong American force between it and the capital. I shall do all in my power to encourage this movement, of which I received indications from many quarters, and shall comply fully with the instructions of the Secretary on that point.

3d. As to the military operations best calculated to secure an early and honorable peace, my report of 2d July will have put the department in possession of my views touching operations in this quarter, and I have now little to add to that report. Whether a large force can be subsisted beyond Monterey, must be determined by actual experiment, and will depend much upon the disposition of the inhabitants towards us. If a column (say, 10,000 men) can be sustained in provisions at Saltillo, it may advance thence upon San Luis Potosi, and I doubt not would speedily bring proposals for peace. If, on the other hand, a column cannot be sustained beyond Monterey, it will be for the government to determine, from considerations of state, whether a simple occupation of the frontier departments, (including Chihuahua and New Mexico,) or, in addition to such occupation, an expedition against the capital, (by way of Vera Cruz,) be most expedient. I cannot give a positive opinion as to the practicability of an expedition against Vera Cruz, or the amount of force that would probably be required for it. The Department of War must be much better informed than I am on that point. From the impracticable character of the routes from Tampico, particularly that leading to Mexico, I should judge an expedition against the capital from that point to be out of the question. The simultaneous embarkation of a large body of troops at Brazos Santiago, as proposed in the Secretary's communication, would be attended with great difficulty, if we may judge from the delays and danger which accompany the unloading of single transports, owing to the almost perpetual roughness of the bar and boisterous character of the anchorage. It may also well be questioned whether a force of volunteers, without much instruction, more than those now here can receive in season for such an expedition, can prudently be allowed to form the bulk of an army destined for so delicate an operation as a descent upon a foreign coast, where it can have no proper base of operations or supplies.

I have already had occasion to represent to the department that the volunteer force ordered to report to me here is much greater than I can possibly employ—at any rate in the first instance; the influx of twelve-months volunteers has even impeded my forward movement by engrossing all the resources of the quartermaster's department to land them and transport them to healthy positions. This circumstance, in connexion with the possibility of an expedition against ———, leads me to regret that one division of the volunteers had not been encamped, say, at Pass Christian, where it could have been instructed until its services were required in the field.

These embarrassments, however, are now mostly overcome; the regular force is nearly all at Camargo, and all the arrangements are made to throw forward the volunteers to the same point.

The President may be assured that no one laments more than I do the inevitable difficulties and delays that have attended our operations here, and that no exertion of mine has been or will be wanting to press forward the campaign with all possible vigor. But I deem it indispensable to take such amount of force and observe such precautions as not to leave success a matter of doubt.

In answer to the inquiry relative to the route from Chihuahua to Guaymas, I have the honor to submit a memorandum derived from ———, an American gentleman residing in this place, who has lived in Chihuahua, and travelled over the routes. The distances on the mule route are probably overrated, as it is a direct route across the mountains. The wagon road by the city of Arispe is the only one practicable for artillery.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

To His Excellency the Hon. James K. Polk,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Memorandum of two routes from Chihuahua to Guaymas—one a wagon road, the other to be travelled only with mules and packs.

The wagon road from Chihuahua to Guaymas leads at first in a northwest direction to the small village of Carmel, upon a large creek, 110 miles; the next village is Galeuna, also on a large creek, 50 miles; then Casas Grandes, 36 miles; then Presidio de Yanos, 39 miles. This is the most northwest settlement, at a distance of 235 miles from Chihuahua. From this point the road bears to the southward, having made this turn to avoid the high mountains. At 70 miles from Yanos the Sonora line is crossed, and we enter the department or State of that name. It is thence 80 miles to Fronteras, thence 60 to Bacuachi, and 40 thence to Arispe, the capital of the State; making from Yanos to Arispe 250 miles. Arispe contains 5,000 inhabitants, and is on a small river called the Sonora river. From Arispe to Pitic or Hermosillo it is 250 miles, and thence to Guaymas 60 miles; making from Arispe to Guaymas 310 miles, and from Chihuahua to Guaymas, by the wagon route, 795 miles. The mule route from Chihuahua to Guaymas, to be travelled with packs only, leaves Chihuahua in a direction a little south of west, to the mining town of Cosiquiriachi, 70 miles, then 40 miles to Sierra Prieta, then 40 miles to Conception, then over the first mountain to Jesus Maria, 140 miles; making from Chihuahua to Jesus Maria 260 miles. Jesus Maria being an extensive mining town, numbers 10,000 inhabitants. Thence to Real de Alamos, 240 miles; thence to Pitic or Hermosillo, 250 miles; and thence to Guaymas, as before, 60 miles; making the distance from Chihuahua to Guaymas, by the mule route, 810 miles. This route is over stupendous mountains: it crosses the Hiaqui river, and passes through the tribe of Indians of that name.

War Department,
Washington, September 2, 1846.

Sir: It is intended to make a descent on the gulf coast of Mexico as soon as the season shall have so far advanced as to render it safe in regard to the health of our troops.

Our attention is turned to Tampico, as one of the places for the attack. It may be important to take that place, and hold possession of it and the surrounding country, with reference to your line of operations. Though our information is not so full and accurate as we desire in relation to the interior of the country in the vicinity of Tampico, yet it is such as induces us to believe that this will be an important position to be occupied to facilitate the future prosecution of the war. The possession of the northern provinces of Mexico, as far south as San Luis de Potosi, is undoubtedly an important object with reference to bringing the war to a successful termination. The difficulties you will encounter in pushing your forces thus far can be much better appreciated by yourself than any other. San Luis de Potosi is stated to be from 150 to 180 miles from Tampico; and if there be a good road between these two places, as some allege to be the case, while it is questioned by others, it will be highly advantageous to have possession of Tampico, and to penetrate the country from that point in the direction of San Luis de Potosi with a considerable force. This matter is under consideration, and will receive the attention it deserves. It is important, in respect to the plan of operations to be adopted for a movement on this point, that you should furnish the government here at the earliest period with your opinion of the progress you will be able to make on your present line of operations. When you shall have arrived at Monterey, you will be enabled to determine as to the practicability of your further progress. It is important that we should know whether you can reach San Luis de Potosi, and your opinion on this point is particularly desired. The administration is, to some extent, aware of the obstacles you will have to encounter, of the difficulties of sustaining so long a line of communication, and of the uncertainty as to the force which will oppose you; but your better information on these several points will enable you to form much more accurate opinions.

Your views, also, as to the effect of taking possession of Tampico, of penetrating the enemy's country from that point, of the amount and kind of force to be assigned to that service, are desired.

It is not intended to weaken the force of your advancing column by any movements on the coast. It is supposed that 1,500 or 2,000 men will be a sufficient number of troops to take and hold possession of Tampico. At least half of this force ought to be of the regular army. These, it is presumed, can be obtained without withdrawing any of that description of force now with you. The amount of the volunteer force required for this purpose can be taken from the Rio Grande, it is presumed, without too much weakening that line.

As you are in a situation to obtain more full and accurate information in relation to all the matters touched on in this communication, it is desirable—indeed, quite important—that the administration should have your views upon them. It is unnecessary to assure you that they will have an important influence upon its determinations.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. army in Mexico, Camargo, Mexico.

War Department,
Washington, September 22, 1846.

Sir: You will perceive by a copy of a despatch, herewith confidentially communicated, from the Mexican government, in reply to one from our own, proposing to open negotiations for terminating the existing war, by a peace, just and honorable to both parties, that the Mexican authorities have declined to treat at this time, and defer definitive action on our offer until the advice of a new Congress, to assemble on the 6th of December next, can be taken.

This determination on the part of our enemy has an important bearing on our military movements, and suggests the propriety of a change of policy in regard to our dealings with the people of the country occupied by our troops.

Public opinion, it is to be presumed, will have some influence upon the decision of that Congress. The progress of our arms, and the positions we may occupy when that body shall come together, cannot fail to have effect upon its action in regard to our proposal to negotiate. Should the campaign be successful, and our troops be in possession of important departments of the enemy's country, the inducements for a speedy peace will be greatly strengthened.

It is far from being certain that our military occupation of the enemy's country is not a blessing to the inhabitants in the vicinity. They are shielded from the burdens and exactions of their own authorities, protected in their persons, and furnished with a most profitable market for most kinds of their property. A state of things so favorable to their interests may induce them to wish the continuance of hostilities.

The instructions heretofore given have required you to treat with great kindness the people, to respect private property, and to abstain from appropriating it to the public use without purchase at a fair price. In some respects this is going far beyond the common requirements of civilized warfare. An invading army has the unquestionable right to draw its supplies from the enemy without paying for them, and to require contributions for its support. It may be proper, and good policy requires, that discriminations should be made in imposing these burdens. Those who are friendly disposed or contribute aid should be treated with liberality, yet the enemy may be made to feel the weight of the war, and thereby become interested to use their best efforts to bring about a state of peace.

It is also but just that a nation which is involved in a war, to obtain justice or to maintain its just rights, should shift the burden of it, as far as practicable, from itself by throwing it upon the enemy.

Upon the liberal principles of civilized warfare, either of three modes may be pursued in relation to obtaining supplies from the enemy. First, to purchase them on such terms as the inhabitants of the country may choose to exact. Second, to pay a fair price, without regard to the enhanced value resulting from the presence of a foreign army; and, third, to require them as contributions, without paying or engaging to pay therefor.

This last mode is the ordinary one, and you are instructed to adopt it, if in that way you are satisfied you can get abundant supplies for your forces. But should you apprehend a difficulty in this respect, then you will adopt the policy of paying the ordinary price, without allowing to the owners the advantages of the enhancement of the price resulting from the increased demand. Should you apprehend a deficiency under this last mode of dealing with the inhabitants, you will be obliged to submit to their exactions, provided by this mode you can supply your wants on better terms than by drawing what you may need from the United States. Should you attempt to supply your troops by contributions or the appropriation of private property, you will be careful to exempt the property of all foreigners from any and all exactions whatsoever. The President hopes you will be able to derive from the enemy's country, without expense to the United States, the supplies you may need, or a considerable part of them; but should you fail in this, you will procure them in the most economical manner.

It is proposed to take possession of the department of Tamaulipas, or some of the principal places in it, at the earliest practicable period. In this enterprise it is believed that a co-operation of our squadron in the gulf will be important, if not necessary. It is presumed that a force of about three or four thousand men will be sufficient for this purpose, one-third of which should be of the regular army.

We have not now sufficiently accurate knowledge of the country to determine definitively as to the manner of conducting this enterprise. The dangerous navigation of the gulf at this season of the year induces the hope that a column may be advanced by land from the present base of operations—the Rio Grande—and that it may have an occasional communication with our ships in the gulf. Should this land route be adjudged impracticable, or a debarkation be preferred, two points of landing have been suggested; one at the bay of Santander, and the other at Tampico. If a force be landed at the bay of Santander, or in the vicinity of Soto la Marina, it could probably reach, without much difficulty, some of the principal places in the department of Tamaulipas, and march to and take possession of Tampico. While the route is yet open to be settled as a better knowledge of the country may indicate, it is proper to speak more in detail of the force to be employed in this service.

It is not proposed to withdraw any of that now with you in your advance into the interior, nor to divert any of the reinforcements that you may need to carry on your operations in that quarter. It is believed that a sufficient force of the regular army for this expedition—about one regiment—may be drawn from the seaboard, including such companies as may have been left on the lower Rio Grande, and can be spared for that purpose. If a column should advance beyond that river into the interior of Tamaulipas, a part of the troops now on that line might, it is presumed, be safely withdrawn to augment the invading column. It is not, however, intended to weaken the force on that line any further than it can, in your opinion, be safely done.

It is also proposed to put the force for the invasion of Tamaulipas under the immediate command of Major General Patterson, to be accompanied by Brigadier Generals Pillow and Shields, unless it should interfere with your previous arrangements with regard to these officers. To prevent delay, General Patterson will be directed to make preparations for this movement, so far as it can be done without disturbing your present arrangements on the Rio Grande, and proceed immediately, and without further orders from the department, unless you should be of opinion that the withdrawal of the force proposed for this expedition would interfere with your operations. This direction is given to General Patterson because the time necessary to receive information from you and return an answer from the department may be the propitious moment for operating with effect. The movement ought to be made with the least possible delay consistently with the health of the troops. It will be left to General Patterson, under your instructions, to decide whether the movement shall be by land or by sea, or partly by each. It is desired that you should give him your views in regard to the last mode of prosecuting this expedition, particularly as to the amount and description of force, and the quantity and kind of ordnance, &c., which may be required. Preparatory arrangements will be immediately ordered here for fitting out the expedition herein proposed, by which transports, provisions, &c., will be in readiness at the Brazos Santiago. By the time this communication will be received by you, it is expected you will have reached Monterey, and perhaps Saltillo, and be able to present to the department a satisfactory opinion of your ability to progress beyond that point. We shall anxiously look for information from you. Your advance to San Luis Potosi, if practicable, is rendered greatly more important by the movement contemplated to Tampico, by which you will, it is believed, be enabled to effect a co-operation with the squadron, and with the column under Major General Patterson, on a line in advance of the Rio Grande. The squadron is now under orders to attack Tampico, with every prospect of success, and the probability is that the place will be captured in advance of General Patterson's movement.

I enclose for your perusal the last despatch received from Commodore Connor, which contains interesting information on Mexican affairs.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 22, 1846.

SIR: With this you will receive a copy of a despatch forwarded to Major General Taylor. In that despatch you will find the views of the government in relation to an expedition to be fitted out to take possession of the southern part of the department or State of Tamaulipas. Unless General Taylor has made arrangements to employ you otherwise, it is designed that this expedition shall be under your immediate command. We have not the requisite information to enable us to determine whether it shall be conducted by land or by water or in part by each. It is very important that the department here should be put in possession of all the information which can be collected on the subject at the earliest period. You are therefore directed to forward to this department, with the least possible delay, all the facts you can collect on this subject. We are aware that the land route is long; and but for the dangerous navigation at this season of the year, we should at once determine to proceed along the coast by water and make debarkations at certain points. Your particular attention should be directed to this matter. In case of a debarkation on the coast, it is presumed a smaller force would effect the objects of the enterprise than would be required for a land expedition. You will perceive that I have suggested in my communication to General Taylor that three or four thousand men may be considered a column of sufficient strength for penetrating the interior of the department of Tamaulipas. Perhaps we have not rightly estimated the obstacles which may be brought to resist this movement. On this point the department desires to be favored with your views. It is not anticipated that any part of the force now with General Taylor can be withdrawn, and it may be that he is calculating upon reinforcements. If so, then it may be difficult to assemble a larger force than that named for this undertaking.

The Rio Grande is regarded the base of operations, and that must be firmly maintained. It is left to General Taylor to determine what force is necessary for that purpose. But the movement of the expedition is not, as you will learn from my letter to General Taylor, to be delayed for further direction from this place as to the mode of advancing into the enemy's country. As soon as you shall learn from General Taylor that a sufficient force for the enterprise can be spared, and receive his direetions in regard to it, you will lose no time in putting them in execution. If General Taylor should not give direction as to moving by land or water, the choice will then be left for your determination. As soon as you have settled this point, you will at once make known to the officers of the several branches of the public service now on the Rio Grande what may be required. They will be instructed to comply with your requisitions as expeditiously as practicable. Measures will be adopted, by direction from this department, to have them prepared to answer the requisitions you may make on them.

Should you determine to embark your troops in transports, it will be necessary to give the earliest notice not only to the department, but also to the commander of our squadron in the gulf, who will be instructed to despatch a force to attend your movements and to co-operate with you, should there be occasion for such aid.

It is proper to apprize you that the squadron has orders to attack and capture Tampico. This may be done without waiting for the presence of the land forces.

Your attention is directed to that part of the despatch to General Taylor which relates to subsisting our troops while in the enemy's country by supplies to be procured from the inhabitants thereof. Should the representations which have been made of the friendly feelings of the people of Taumaulipas towards the United States, and of their disposition to withdraw from the Mexican government, be realized, you will treat them with great kindness and cherish friendly relations with them. But should they manifest decidedly hostile feelings towards our people and government, you will act on the same principles in your treatment of them which have been prescribed to General Taylor. This matter is left to your discretion, which will be influenced and controlled by circumstances.

You will perceive that it is suggested in the communication to General Taylor that Brigadier Generals Pillow and Shields should be assigned to the expedition under your command. Should this suggestion be adopted by him, you will, as a matter of course, avail yourself of their services in collecting the information desired, and in preparing for as well as in conducting the contemplated enterprise.

The department will expect from you, without the delay of sending through General Taylor, a reply to this communication, embracing your views and all the facts you may possess on the points suggested for your consideration, and on any other having a bearing on matters connected with the proposed expedition. This communication, as well as that to General Taylor, will be sent by a messenger, with instructions to deliver it to you, or in your absence, to either General Pillow or General Shields. He will proceed with that to General Taylor to his head-quarters. You will, if in your power, afford him all necessary facilities for sending him forward.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Patterson.

[No. 91.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp before Monterey, September 25, 1846.

Sir: At noon on the 23d instant, whilst our troops were closely engaged in the lower part of the city, as reported in my last despatch, I received by a flag a communication from the governor of the State of New Leon, which is herewith enclosed, (No. 1.) To this communication I deemed it my duty to return an answer, declining to allow the inhabitants to leave the city. By 11 o'clock, p. m., the second division, which had entered the town from the direction of the bishop's palace, had advanced within one square of the principal plaza and occupied the city up to that point. The mortar had in the mean time been placed in battery in the cemetery, within good range of the heart of the town, and was served throughout the night with good effect.

Early in the morning of the 24th I received a flag from the town, bearing a communication from General Ampudia, which I enclose, (No. 2,) and to which I returned the answer, (No. 3.) I also arranged with the bearer of the flag a cessation of fire until 12 o'clock, which hour I appointed to receive the final answer of General Ampudia, at General Worth's head-quarters. Before the appointed time, however, General Ampudia had signified to General Worth his desire for a personal interview with me, for the purpose of making some definitive arrangement. An interview was accordingly appointed for one o'clock, and resulted in the naming of a commission to draw up articles of agreement regulating the withdrawal of the Mexican forces, and a temporary cessation of hostilities. The commissioners named by the Mexican general-in-chief were Generals Ortega and Raquena, and Don Manuel M. Llano, governor of New Leon: those named on the American side were General Worth, General Henderson, governor of Texas, and Colonel Davis, Mississippi volunteers. The commission finally settled upon the articles of which I enclose a copy, (No. 4,) the duplicates of which (in Spanish and English) have been duly signed. Agreeably to the provisions of the 4th article, our troops have this morning occupied the citadel.

It will be seen that the terms granted the Mexican garrison are less rigorous than those first imposed. The gallant defence of the town, and the fact of a recent change of government in Mexico, believed to be favorable to the interests of peace, induced me to concur with the commission in these terms, which will, I trust, receive the approval of the government. The latter consideration also prompted the convention for a temporary cessation of hostilities. Though scarcely warranted by my instructions, yet the change of affairs since those instructions were issued seemed to warrant this course. I beg to be advised as early as practicable whether I have met the views of the government in these particulars.

I regret to report that Captain Williams, topographical engineers, and Lieutenant Terrett, first infantry, have died of the wounds received in the engagement of the 21st. Captain Gatlin, 7th infantry, was wounded (not badly) on the 23d.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

GOVERNMENT OF THE STATE OF NEW LEON.

Your excellency having resolved to occupy this place by force of arms, and the Mexican general-in-chief to defend it at every cost, as required by his honor and duty, thousands of victims, who, from their poverty and want of means, find themselves still upon the theatre of war, and who would be uselessly sacrificed, claim the rights which in all times and in all places humanity holds sacred.

As governor of this State, and as the legitimate representative of the people thereof, I now address your excellency, and I hope, from your regard to humanity, and from your sense of the rules which govern civilized nations, that whatever may be the result of the present struggle, you will give orders that the resident families shall be respected, or will concede a sufficient time for them to remove from this capital.

I have the honor to salute your excellency, general-in-chief of the army of occupation of the United States, and to assure you of my highest consideration.

God and liberty! Monterey, September 23, 1846, 8 o'clock in the morning.

HEAD-QUARTERS, MONTEREY,
September 23, 1846, at 9 o'clock at night.

GENERAL: As I have made all the defence of which I believe this city capable, I have fulfilled my obligation and done all required by that military honor which, to a certain degree, is common to all the armies of the civilized world; and as a continuation of the defence would only bring upon the population distresses to which they have already been sufficiently subjected by the evils consequent upon war, and believing that the American government will appreciate these sentiments, I propose to your excellency to evacuate the city and citadel, taking with me the personnel and materiel of war which is left, and under the assurance that no prosecution shall be undertaken against the citizens who have taken part in the defence.

Be pleased to accept the assurance of my most distinguished consideration.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

[No. 3.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp before Monterey, Sept. 24, 1846, 7 o'clock, a. m.

SIR: Your communication bearing date at 9 o'clock, p. m., on the 23d, has just been received by the hands of Colonel Moreno.

In answer to your proposition to evacuate the city and fort with all the personnel and materiel of war, I have to state that my duty compels me to decline acceding to it. A complete surrender of the town and garrison, the latter as prisoners of war, is now demanded. But such surrender will be upon terms, and the gallant defence of the place, creditable alike to the Mexican troops and nation, will prompt me to make those terms as liberal as possible. The garrison will be allowed, at your option, after laying down its arms, to retire to the interior, on condition of not serving again during the war, or until regularly exchanged. I need hardly say that the rights of non-combatants will be respected.

An answer to this commuication is required by 12 o'clock. If you assent to an accommodation, an officer will be despatched at once under instructions to arrange the conditions.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General, U. S. A., commanding.

Señor D. Pedro de Ampudia,
General-in-chief, Monterey.

Terms of capitulation of the city of Monterey, the capital of Nuevo Leon, agreed upon by the undersigned commissioners, to wit: General Worth, of the United States army, General Henderson, of the Texan volunteers, and Colonel Davis, of the Mississippi riflemen, on the part of Major General Taylor, commanding in chief the United States forces, and General Raquena and General Ortéga, of the army of Mexico, and Señor Manuel M. Llana, governor of Nuevo Leon, on the part of Señor General Don Pedro Ampudia, commanding in chief the army of the north, of Mexico.

Art. I. As the legitimate result of the operations before this place, and the present position of the contending armies, it is agreed that the city, the fortifications, cannon, the munitions of war, and all other public property, with the under mentioned exceptions, be surrendered to the commanding general of the United States forces now at Monterey.

Art. II. That the Mexican forces be allowed to retain the following arms, to wit: The commissioned officers their side arms, the infantry their arms and accoutrements, the cavalry their arms and accoutrements, the artillery one field battery, not to exceed six pieces, with twenty-one rounds of ammunition.

Art. III. That the Mexican armed forces retire, within seven days from this date, beyond the line formed by the pass of the Rinconada, the city of Linares, and San Fernando de Presas.

Art. IV. That the citadel of Monterey be evacuated by the Mexican and occupied by the American forces to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Art. V. To avoid collisions, and for mutual convenience, that the troops of the United States will not occupy the city until the Mexican forces have withdrawn, except for hospital and storage purposes.

Art. VI. That the forces of the United States will not advance beyond the line specified in the 3d article before the expiration of eight weeks, or until the orders or instructions of the respective governments can be received.

Art. VII. That the public property to be delivered shall be turned over and received by officers appointed by the commanding generals of the two armies.

Art. VIII. That all doubts as to the meaning of any of the preceding articles shall be solved by an equitable construction, and on principles of liberality to the retiring army.

Art. IX. That the Mexican flag, when struck at the citadel, may be saluted by its own battery.

[No. 96.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 12, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the communication of the Secretary of War, with enclosures, dated the 22d ultimo; also one from your office of September 21, relative to the resignations of volunteer officers, and "general orders" No. 41; all of which were delivered by Lieutenant Armistead on the 10th instant.

It will be seen at once that, under the terms of the capitulation of Monterey, I cannot detach a force south of a line from Linares to San Fernando, and cannot therefore, even were there no other obstacles, comply at present with the instructions of the Secretary. I cannot doubt that, on receiving the intelligence of the capture of Monterey, modified instructions were issued by the department.

I shall, with as little delay as possible, reply at length to the Secretary's communication, and present my views in extenso on all topics connected with the campaign.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 98.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 15, 1846.

Sir: In my acknowledgment, dated the 12th instant, of the instructions of the Secretary of War, of September 22, I briefly stated that the detachment to Tampico could not be made without contravening the convention of Monterey. Other reasons and more detailed views on this point, and the general question of the campaign, I left to a subsequent communication, which I have now the honor to submit for the information of the general-in-chief and the Secretary of War. Such a point has been reached in the conduct of the war and the progress of our arms, as to make it proper to place my impressions and convictions very fully before the government.

I wish to remark, first of all, that I have considered Brigadier General Wool, though formerly under my orders, yet as charged by the government with a distinct operation, with which I was not at liberty to interfere. Though greatly in doubt as to the practicability of his reaching Chihuahua with artillery, and deeming the importance of the operation at any rate to be not at all commensurate with its difficulty and expense, I have accordingly refrained from controlling his movements in any way. His force, therefore, forms no element in my calculations, particularly as it is now, or soon will be, entirely beyond my reach.

The Mexican army under General Ampudia has left Saltillo, and fallen back on San Luis Potosi—the last detachment, as I understand, being under orders to march to-day. General Santa Anna reached San Luis on the 8th instant, and is engaged in concentrating and organizing the army at that point. Whether the withdrawal of the forces to San Luis be intended to draw us into the country, far from supplies and support, or whether it be a political movement, connected with Santa Anna's return to power, it is impossible to say; it is sufficient for my present argument to know that a heavy force is assembling in our front. Saltillo, the capital of Coahuila, is virtually in our possession, and can be occupied, if necessary, the moment the convention is at an end. The occupation of Saltillo will lengthen our line seventy-five miles, but, on the other hand, may enable us to draw at least a portion of our breadstuffs from the country. San Luis is about three hundred miles from Saltillo—perhaps more.

San Luis is a city of some sixty thousand inhabitants, in a country abundant in resources, and at no great distance from the heart of the republic, whence munitions of war and reinforcements can readily be drawn. It is at the same time nearly six hundred miles from the Rio Grande, which must continue to be the base of our operations, at least until we reach San Luis.

In view of the above facts, I hazard nothing in saying that a column, to move on San Luis from Saltillo should, to insure success, be at least 20,000 strong, of which 10,000 should be regular troops. After much reflection, I consider the above as the smallest number of effective troops that could be employed on this service, without incurring the hazard of disaster, and perhaps defeat. There would be required, besides, to keep open our long line, protect the depôts, and secure the country already gained, a force of 5,000 men; this, without including the force necessary to send to Tampico, to take or hold that place.

The above estimate may seem large when it is remembered that important results have been gained with a much smaller force. But we have hitherto operated near our own base, and the Mexicans at a great distance from theirs. Saltillo may be considered about equi-distant from the Rio Grande and San Luis. Every day's march beyond it lengthens our already long line, and curtails theirs; weakens us, and gives them strength. Hence, the movement should not be undertaken except with a force so large as to render success certain.

In the above calculation I have supposed the Mexicans able to concentrate at San Luis a force of 40,000 to 50,000 men. With tolerable stability in the government, I doubt not their ability to do this; and it is not safe to assume any less number as a basis.

The force of twelve-months' volunteers has suffered greatly from disease. Many have died, and a great number have been discharged for disability. So much has their effective strength been reduced by this cause, and present sickness, that, in the absence of official returns, I am satisfied that 500 men per regiment would be a large average of effectives among the volunteers. This would give, including the cavalry, a force a little short of 9,000 men; or, adding 4,000 regulars, (our present strength is not 3,000,) a total force of 13,000 men. Leaving the very moderate number of 3,000 to secure our rear, I should not be able to march from Saltillo, with present and expected means, at the head of more than 10,000 men; a number which, from considerations above stated, I deem to be entirely inadequate.

And I now come to the point presented in the Secretary's letter. A simultaneous movement on San Luis and Tampico is there suggested; but it will readily be seen that, with only half the force which I consider necessary to march on one point, it is quite impossible to march on both; and, that nothing short of an effective force of 25,000 to 30,000 men would, on military principles, justify the double movement. And it is to be remarked that the possession of Tampico is indispensable in case we advance to San Luis, for the line hence to the latter place is entirely too long to be maintained permanently, and must be abandoned for the shorter one from Tampico the moment San Luis is taken.

I have spoken only of the number of troops deemed necessary for the prosecution of the campaign beyond Saltillo. It will be understood that largely increased means and materiel of every kind, will be equally necessary to render the army efficient; such as cavalry and artillery horses, means of transport, ordnance stores, &c.

The department may be assured that the above views have not been given without mature reflection, and have been the result of experience and careful inquiry. It will be for the government to determine whether the war shall be prosecuted by directing an active campaign against San Luis and the capital, or whether the country already gained shall be held, and a defensive attitude assumed. In the latter case, the general line of the Sierra Madre might very well be taken; but even then, with the enemy in force in my front, it might be imprudent to detach to Tampico so large a force as 3,000 or 4,000 men, particularly of the description required for that operation. If the co-operation of the army, therefore, be deemed essential to the success of the expedition against Tampico, I trust that it will be postponed for the present.

I have not been unmindful of the importance of taking Tampico, and have at least once addressed the department on the subject. Nothing but the known exposure of the place to the ravages of yellow fever prevented me from organizing an expedition against it last summer. I knew that if taken, it could not, with any certainty, be held, and that the cause would not be removed before the last of November or first of December.

It may be expected that I should give my views as to the policy of occupying a defensive line, to which I have above alluded. I am free to confess that, in view of the difficulties and expense attending a movement into the heart of the country, and particularly in view of the unsettled and revolutionary character of the Mexican government, the occupation of such a line seems to me the best course that can be adopted. The line taken might either be that on which we propose to insist as the boundary between the republics—say the Rio Grande—or the line to which we have advanced, viz: the Sierra Madre, including Chihuahua and Santa Fé. The former line could be held with a much smaller force than the latter; but even the line of the Sierra Madre could be held with a force greatly less than would be required for an active campaign. Monterey controls the great outlet from the interior. A strong garrison at this point, with an advance at Saltillo and small corps at Monclova, Linares, Victoria, and Tampico, would effectually cover the line.

I have limited my remarks to the position of the army on this frontier and the requirements for a campaign against San Luis Potosi, the suggestions in the Secretary's letter being confined to this general theatre of operations. Should the government determine to strike a decisive blow at Mexico, it is my opinion that the force should land near Vera Cruz or Alvarado; and, after establishing a secure depot, march thence on the capital. The amount of troops required for this service would not fall short, in my judgment, of 25,000 men, of which at least 10,000 to be regular troops.

In conclusion, I feel it my duty to make some remarks which I would gladly have been spared the necessity of submitting. I feel it due to my position and to the service to record my protest against the manner in which the department has sought to make an important detachment from my command, specifically indicating not only the general officers, but to a considerable extent the troops, that were to compose it. While I remain in command of the army against Mexico, and am therefore justly held responsible by the government and the country for the conduct of its operations, I must claim the right of organizing all detachments from it, and regulating the time and manner of their service. Above all do I consider it important that the Department of War should refrain from corresponding directly with my subordinates, and communicating orders and instructions on points which, by all military precept and practice, pertain exclusively to the general in chief command. Confusion and disaster alone can result from such a course. The reason alleged, viz: the loss of time in communicating with General Patterson, has no application, for the Secretary's despatch came from that officer to my head-quarters in sixty hours, and he could not move, at any rate, without drawing largely upon this column for artillery and regular troops.

I beg it may be understood that my remarks have no personal application. It is quite probable that in the event of making such a detachment, I would have placed it under Major General Patterson; but I conceive that this mode of regulating details and ordering detachments direct from the Department of War is a violation of the integrity of the chief command in the field, pregnant with the worst evils, and against which I deem it my duty respectfully but earnestly to protest.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Maj. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 100.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 26, 1846.

Sir: In reply to so much of the communication of the Secretary of War, dated September 22, as relates to the mode of supplying the army, I beg leave to submit the follow remarks:

It would have been impossible hitherto, and is so now, to sustain the army to any extent by forced contributions of money or supplies. The country between the Rio Grande and Sierra Madre is poor, furnishing only corn and beef. These articles we obtain at moderate rates; but if a different system had been adopted, it is certain that they would not have been procured at all in sufficient quantities. The prompt payment in cash for the few articles of supply we have drawn from the country has neutralized much of the unfriendly feeling with which we were regarded, and has contributed greatly to facilitate our operations. The people have it in their power at any time to destroy their crops, and would undoubtedly do so rather than see them taken forcibly. Add to which, they would have no inducements to plant again. The prices that have been paid are reasonable, being in almost all cases the prices of the country.

Should the army in its future operations reach a portion of the country which may be made to supply the troops with advantage, I shall not fail to conform to the wishes and instructions of the department in this particular.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 13, 1846.

SIR: Your communications of the 22d, 23d, and 25th ultimo, detailing the operations of the army under your immediate command at Monterey, have been received. The skill, courage, and gallant conduct displayed on that occasion by the troops under your command, both regulars and volunteers, have added glory to our arms, and merit from the government and people of the United States the warmest expressions of gratitude and praise.

In relation to the terms of the capitulation of Monterey, the President instructs me to say that he regrets it was not deemed advisable to insist upon the terms which you had first proposed. The circumstances which dictated doubtless justified the change. The President, uninformed of these circumstances, does not know in what degree the recent change in the government of Mexico may have contributed to this result. Certain it is, however, that the present rulers of that republic have not yet given any evidence that they are "favorable to the interests of peace." Of this you will have already been informed by my despatch of the 22d ultimo.

The government did not contemplate, as you will perceive by the tenor of the despatches from this department, that there would probably happen any contingency, in the prosecution of the war, in which it would be expedient to suspend hostilities before the offer of acceptable terms of peace.

In my despatch of the 22d ultimo, which had not reached you when you entered into the arrangement with General Ampudia on the 25th ultimo, there are considerations and facts stated which render the continuance of the armistice extremely embarrassing. As the offer recently made by the United States to open negotiations for a peace was not acceded to by the present rulers of Mexico, but reserved to be submitted to and acted on by a congress to be assembled on the 6th of December next, it was deemed by the government here highly important that the war in the mean time should be prosecuted with the utmost vigor, to the end that they might be made sensible of the evils of its continuance, and thereby become more inclined to bring it to a speedy close. In pursuance of this policy, an expedition was proposed, in my despatch of the 22d ultimo, for the purpose of taking possession of the entire department of Tamaulipas; and, under the belief that it would not interfere with your plans and operations, no doubt was entertained that it would receive your concurrence and support. In anticipation thereof, measures have been already taken to carry it out at the earliest practicable period.

By the arrangement you have made for a temporary suspension of hostilities within certain limits of the enemy's country, if continued to the end of the time stipulated, a considerable part of Tamaulipas will be exempted from military operations until within a few days of the time fixed for the meeting of the Mexican congress, and the expedition thereby delayed, or if prosecuted by the land or naval forces, might bring into question the good faith of the United States.

In the despatch before referred to you will perceive that an attack by our naval force upon some places on the coast of Tamaulipas is also contemplated. Whatever may be the advantage or the necessity of the co-operation of a land force, it must be withheld until near the close of November, if the armistice is continued to the end of the stipulated period.

The government is fully persuaded that if you had been aware of the special reasons disclosed in the despatch of the 22d ultimo, and the intentions of the government still entertained, you would not have acceded to the suspension of hostilities for even the limited period specified in the articles of capitulation; but as its continuance depends upon the orders of your government, you are instructed to give the requisite notice that the armistice is to cease at once, and that each party is at liberty to resume and prosecute hostilities without restriction.

The city of Monterey is regarded as an important acquisition. While held by a competent force, the authorities of Mexico may be considered as dispossessed of the department of New Leon. It is therefore proposed that you should make the necessary arrangements for retaining possession of it during the war. For this purpose it is suggested that you should strengthen its defences, and take the proper measures for procuring supplies for the forces which may be there stationed, not only for holding it securely, but for carrying on military operations in the northern provinces of Mexico.

Not only Monterey, but the State of New Leon, may, it is presumed, be regarded as a conquered country; and, as a consequence, the civil authorities of Mexico are in a measure superseded, or at least subject to your control. You will give this subject your consideration, and permit only such civil functionaries to retain and exercise power as are well disposed towards the United States.

It is an object of much interest to the government to be put in possession of your views as to your future operations. The advantages and the difficulties of penetrating further into the interior of Mexico, are now probably satisfactorily ascertained by you. Would it, in your judgment, be advisable, under existing circumstances, to advance beyond Monterey, or the positions necessary to its security? The department has not the requisite information to enable it to answer this question, but must leave it to your determination and to your discretion to act in accordance with your views upon that point.

In your communications of the 2d of July and 1st of August, you express the opinion that your operations should be confined to the northern provinces of Mexico; but whether, in carrying out your views, you proposed to advance beyond the point you have already reached, or Saltillo, is not stated, and probably could not be determined till your arrival at Monterey. It is desirable to do whatever can be done to make an impression upon the enemy; but to determine what it shall be, requires knowledge of the localities of the country; of the means at your command; the force and resources of the enemy; in fine, such knowledge as you possess or have the means of acquiring.

The season for carrying on military operations in the enemy's country lying on the gulf has now arrived. It is deemed important that we should have possession of the whole of Tamaulipas before the meeting of the Mexican congress in December. It is hoped that the expedition for that purpose, suggested in my communication of the 22d September, can be organized and sent forward without at all interfering with the contemplated operation of the forces under your immediate command.

Among the officers presented to your consideration to be employed in this expedition was Brigadier General Shields. Attention was directed to him by the knowledge that he had become acquainted with some of the principal inhabitants of Tamaulipas, and by that means had acquired information which would have been useful in conducting the enterprise. He has, however, since received orders to join General Wool, and probably cannot be conveniently recalled. If this can be done, and another brigadier sent to General Wool, it might be advantageous to the public service to make the exchange. This is, however, left entirely to yourself. As to the employment of Major General Patterson and Brigadier General Pillow, the wishes of the President and department are unchanged.

It is under consideration by the government, though not yet fully determined, to land a considerable force in the vicinnity of Vera Cruz and invest that city. Should this be undertaken, a larger force of regular troops will be required than that assigned to the Tamaulipas expedition. It is desired to know if in your opinion a detachment of two thousand of this description of force can be spared for that purpose from those under your command, without essentially interfering with your plans and operations. It is not desired or intended to weaken the force with you at Monterey, or to embarrass you by diverting troops from the Rio Grande which you may deem necessary as reinforcements to the execution of your own contemplated operations.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

To Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation, Monterey, Mexico.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 13, 1846.

SIR: A messenger will leave this place to-morrow morning with despatches for General Taylor. It is proper to apprize you that an end will be put to the armistice agreed on by him and General Ampudia for eight weeks, subject to the orders of their respective governments by instructions from this department. General Taylor, when he entered into it, was not apprised of the determination (subject to his concurrence) of the government to send an expedition into the southern part of Tamaulipas. The continuance of the armistice for eight weeks might interfere with that expedition. You will not suspend your arrangements and efforts to move forward with that expedition at the earliest period.

You will have been apprised, by my communications of the 22d of September, of the views of the government in regard to this expedition. As the force to compose it is to be organized from the troops under the command of General Taylor, and of course the movement subject to his approval, you will receive orders from him in regard to it. It is not doubted that it will receive his hearty approval. It is very desirable that the department of Tamaulipas should be occupied by our troops before the meeting of the Mexican Congress. All the regular troops which can be spared from the seaboard, &c., have been or will be immediately ordered to the Rio Grande. It is probable they will be needed for your command.

We shall anxiously await your determination as to the route to be taken. Since writing the last despatch to you, I have received information which induces me to believe that it can be made by land; but that information is not of such a character as to warrant any limitation to the discretion given by the department on that point.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General R. PATTERSON,
U. S. A., Matamoras, Mexico.

[No. 105.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 3, 1846.

SIR: I have only time before the departure of the mail to report the arrival last evening of Major Graham, (topographical engineers,) with despatches from the Department of War and Adjutant General's office.

I acknowledge the receipt, by Major Graham, of the communication of the Secretary of War dated October 13th; yours of October 13th; copy of your letter to Lieutenant Parham, of October 7th; and "special orders" No. 99.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 107.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 8, 1846.

Sir: In reply to so much of the communication of the Secretary of War, dated October 13th, as relates to the reasons which induced the convention resulting in the capitulation of Monterey, I have the honor to submit the following remarks:

The convention presents two distinct points:

First. The permission granted the Mexican army to retire with their arms, &c. Secondly. The temporary cessation of hostilities for the term of eight weeks. I shall remark on these in order.

The force with which I advanced on Monterey was limited, by causes beyond my control, to about 6,000 men. With this force, as every military man must admit who has seen the ground, it was entirely impossible to invest Monterey so closely as to prevent the escape of the garrison. Although the main communication with the interior was in our possession, yet one route was open to the Mexicans throughout the operations, and could not be closed, as were also other minor tracks and passes through the mountains. Had we, therefore, insisted on more rigorous terms than those granted, the result would have been the escape of the body of the Mexican force, with the destruction of its artillery and magazines; our only advantage being the capture of a few prisoners of war, at the expense of valuable lives and much damage to the city. The consideration of humanity was present to my mind during the conference which led to the convention, and outweighed in my judgment the doubtful advantages to be gained by a resumption of the attack upon the town. This conclusion has been fully confirmed by an inspection of the enemy's position and means since the surrender. It was discovered that his principal magazine, containing an immense amount of powder, was in the cathedral, completely exposed to our shells from two directions. The explosion of this mass of powder, which must have ultimately resulted from a continuance of the bombardment, would have been infinitely disastrous, involving the destruction not only of the Mexican troops but of non-combatants, and even our own people, had we pressed the attack.

In regard to the temporary cessation of hostilities, the fact that we are not at this moment (within eleven days of the termination of the period fixed by the convention) prepared to move forward in force, is a sufficient explanation of the military reasons which dictated this suspension of arms. It paralyzed the enemy during a period when, from the want of necessary means, we could not possibly move. I desire distinctly to state, and to call the attention of the authorities to the fact, that with all diligence in breaking mules and setting up wagons, the first wagons in addition to our original train from Corpus Christi (and but 125 in number) reached my head-quarters on the same day with the Secretary's communication of October 13th, viz: the 2d inst. At the date of the surrender of Monterey our force had not more than ten days' rations; and even now, with all our endeavors, we have not more than twenty-five. The task of fighting and beating the enemy is among the least difficult that we encounter: the great question of supplies necessarily controls all the operations in a country like this. At the date of the convention I could not, of course, have foreseen that the department would direct an important detachment from my command without consulting me, or without waiting the result of the main operation under my orders.

I have touched the prominent military points involved in the convention of Monterey. There were other considerations which weighed with the commissioners in framing, and with myself in approving, the articles of the convention. In the conference with General Ampudia I was distinctly told by him that he had invited it to spare the further effusion of blood, and because General Santa Anna had declared himself favorable to peace. I knew that our government had made propositions to that of Mexico to negotiate, and I deemed that the change of government in that country since my last instructions fully warranted me in entertaining considerations of policy. My grand motive in moving forward with very limited supplies had been to increase the inducements of the Mexican government to negotiate for peace. Whatever may be the actual views or disposition of the Mexican rulers, or of General Santa Anna, it is not unknown to the government that I had the very best reason for believing the statement of General Ampudia to be true. It was my opinion at the time of the convention, and it has not been changed, that the liberal treatment of the Mexican army, and the suspension of arms, would exert none but a favorable influence in our behalf.

The result of the entire operation has been to throw the Mexican army back more than 300 miles to the city of San Luis Potosi, and to open the country to us, as far as choose to penetrate it, up to the same point.

I has been my purpose in this communication not so much to defend the convention from the censure which I deeply regret to find implied in the Secretary's letter, as to show that it was not adopted without cogent reasons, most of which occur of themselves to the minds of all who are acquainted with the condition of things here. To that end I beg that it may be laid before the general-in-chief and the Secretary of War.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 108.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 9, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, in compliance with the instructions of the Secretary of War, communicated in his letter of October 13th, I have formally notified the Mexican general-in-chief that the temporary suspension of arms agreed upon in the convention of Monterey will cease on the 13th instant, the date at which the notice will probably reach San Luis de Potosi. This notification was sent by Major Graham, topographical engineers, who left on the 6th instant.

You will perceive from my "orders" No. 139 what arrangements have been made for the occupation of Saltillo, at the earliest moment, by our troops. Whether our operations are pushed forward towards San Luis or not, the occupation of Saltillo is important; politically, as the capitally of Coahuila, and in a military view as covering an important region from which we may draw supplies.

Brigadier General Wool, with a portion of his force, arrived at Monclova on the 29th of October, and is now joined by the rear division. He reports no practicable route to Chihuahua, except the one by Paras, which will bring within a few leagues of Saltillo. He inquires what is to be gained by going to Chihuahua? And I am free to answer, nothing, at all commensurate with the excessive length of his line of operations. Chihuahua, moreover, is virtually conquered, and can be occupied at any moment while we hold Saltillo and Santa Fé. I shall instruct General Wool to remain at Monclova, where there are supplies, until I can determine what disposition to make of his column, which cannot be done until I visit Saltillo.

I have taken the first steps towards organizing the expedition on Tampico, and propose to accompany it, for the purpose at least of commanding a covering force. There will be some delay for the want of means of land transports.

The information received since my communication of October 15th, relative to the route hence to San Luis, renders it more than probable that, from the want of permanent water, it will be impossible to march a large force from Saltillo to that city. I hope to acquire certain information on this point in a few days.

At the latest advices from the interior the army was yet at San Luis, some 12,000 strong. It is reported, also, that Tampico has been entirely evacuted; but I deem this hardly credible. Some rumors that Santa Anna had been proclaimed dictator have not been confirmed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[Orders No. 139.]

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 8, 1846.

I. Under instructions from the Department of War, the general-in-chief of the Mexican forces has been duly notified that the temporary cessation of hostilities, agreed upon at the convention of Monterey, will cease and determine from the 13th inst., after which date the American forces will be free to cross the line of demarcation established in said convention.

II. Saltillo, the capital of the State of Coahuila, will be occupied by the United States troops. The following corps of the 2d division will form the garrison in the first instance, to be increased as circumstances may require: Lieutenant Colonel Duncan's battery, artillery battalion, (8 companies,) 8th infantry, 5th infantry, and Captain Blanchard's company of Louisiana volunteers; the whole to be commanded by Brigadier General Worth. Lieutenant Mackall's battery, the 7th infantry, and one company of the artillery battalion, (to be selected by General Worth,) will remain in Monterey, under command of Colonel Smith, regiment of mounted riflemen.

III. The corps above designated for the occupation of Saltillo will march, under General Worth, on the 12th inst. The commanding general will march at the same time, with the two squadrons of the 2d dragoons under Lieutenant Colonel May. The troops will take four rations in their haversacks. Rations of salt meat for ten days, of bread for five days, and small rations for twenty days, will be thrown forward at the same time.

IV. Suitable arrangements will be made by the medical director for the care of the invalids necessarily left behind by the 2d division. They will be sent forward to their companies as rapidly as they may recover health and strength.

V. The quartermaster's department will provide the necessary transportation to carry out the above order.

By order of Major General Taylor.

W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Official:
H. S. GARNETT,
Lieutenant and A. D. C.

WASHINGTON, October 22, 1846.

SIR: Major Robert W. McLane, who is charged with the despatches which he will deliver to you, possesses the entire confidence of the President and myself, and has had communicated to him the purport of the despatches which he will deliver to you, and you can confer freely and safely with him. He is commended to your favorable consideration and kind attention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. Army in Mexico.

War Department, October 22, 1846.

Sir: It is apprehended here that the recent change in the political affairs of Mexico will have an important bearing upon our military movements, and may render it necessary to modify in some respects the plans of operation.

Santa Anna is at the head of the war party, and appears to have entered with zeal upon his duties as general-in-chief of the Mexican army. It is not improbable that he may succeed in collecting and keeping together a considerable force; but the promise of change in the form of government is probably a more important consideration in regard to the prosecution of the war. The northern departments of Mexico were opposed to the central, and in favor of the federal system. The former was forced upon them and maintained by military power. This undoubtedly produced throughout these provinces considerable disaffection to the central government.

The existence of this disaffection was not overlooked either by yourself or the government here in the plan of the campaign, designed to be principally confined to these provinces, and it was presumed that it would materially affect the extent to which our operations in them could be safely carried.

The views presented in your communications of the 2d of July and 1st of August appeared to be sound, and were fully concurred in by the government. According to these views, the extent to which you could penetrate the enemy's country in the direction of Montery would depend mainly upon the facility of obtaining supplies, and of keeping open your line of communication with the Rio Grande. In both these respects, it was foreseen that much would depend upon the disposition and feelings of the Mexican people. Though there was, when you wrote your letter of the 1st August, as you state, good reason to believe that the country lying between the Rio Grande and the Sierra Madre was disposed to throw off the yoke of the central government, and there was then a hope that it would do so when there should be a strong American force between it and the city of Mexico, the aspect of things in this particular appears to have since changed. The new rulers of Mexico have declared in favor of the federal system, and thus gratified the wishes of the northern provinces. It is, I apprehend, no longer reasonable to expect from them even neutrality, and our measures must be taken on the assumption that they will co-operate with the enemy in carrying on the war, and do all they can to impede our movements.

In your communication of the 1st of August you state that "whether a large force can be subsisted beyond Monterey must be determined by actual experience, and will depend much upon the disposition of the inhabitants towards us." We are led tobelieve, from all the information we have received, that the inhabitants are not only hostile, but will be active in obstructing our march into the interior; and that it will not be safe to proceed beyond Monterey, with a view of taking and holding a permanent position. The risk of extending your line beyond that point, or such positions as you may occupy for its defence and security, would probably counterbalance the advantages of proceeding further into the interior, unless you have an adequate force, and could command ample means to reach San Luis Potosi, with a view to its secure occupation. It is believed you are not in a condition to do this, if the disposition of the Mexican people is such as has been indicated. Indeed, serious doubts are entertained here whether you ought to extend your line beyond the place you have reached and its necessary dependencies. Should your concur in this view, as it is presumed you will from the tenor of your despatches, you will then turn your attention to securing your position at Monterey, keeping open your line of communication with the Rio Grande. I refer you to what was said on this subject in my letter of the 13th instant. It is not intended, by what is here said, that you should be restrained from making excursions beyond Monterey and the department of New Leon, if you should see occasion to do so. The enemy should be impressed with the belief that you intend to move forward, to the end that they may not withdraw their forces and employ them on other points. Should the force assembled to resist you be withdrawn, or ascertained not to be in sufficient number to oppose serious obstacles to your further advance, you will exercise your own discretion, under all the circumstances, in regard to any forward movement; but it is not thought here that this can be done with a view to take a permanent position much beyond that you now occupy, unless you should deem it proper for your own security at Monterey to advance so far as to occupy the difficult passes between that city and Saltillo. This, however, is left altogether to your own judgment. Monterey may be considered a position in advance of Monclova and Chihuahua, and it is questionable whether, in a military point of view, the occupation of them, with the ascertained change in the circumstances and feelings of the inhabitants, will produce compensating advantages, as a considerable force, which might be usefully employed in other quarters, will be required to take and hold them.

It is not doubted that General Wool will be able to capture Chihuahua; but if the population should be disposed, as it is apprehended they will be, to obstruct his movements and withhold supplies, it is doubtful whether he has a sufficient force to sustain himself long in that position. Should the contemplated military and naval operations on the gulf coast be put in execution, troops to reinforce him, in case his condition required it, cannot well be spared. Under a full view of all the circumstances, it is suggested whether it would not be best to have his forces united with yours at Monterey, or on the Rio Grande. If he should not have advanced too far on his march to Chihuahua before you can communicate with him, it may be advisable that he should at once form a junction with you. With these suggestions, which are necessarily vague for want of more full and particular information on the subject, this matter is left entirely to your discretion..

In a communication received from General Kearny, written soon after he had taken Santa Fé, he informed the department that he might have more troops than were necessary for his purposes, and in that event should detach a few hundred men and send them to General Wool. Should General Wool be ordered to join you, it will be important that information should be sent to notify this detachment of the change in his position, and to give it instructions for its conduct. Should it proceed to Chihuahua, and General Wool not be there, it will be exposed to be cut off. I am not prepared to say what disposition should be made of this detachment, if it has in fact been sent forward to join the Chihuahua expedition. It is important that it should receive such orders as will lead to its safety. General Wool will be instructed by you to look to this. The mere intimation from General Kearny that he might send off such a detachment, renders it necessary that proper steps should be taken to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy.

I informed you in my last despatch that, in connexion with an invasion of Tamaulipas and attack on Tampico, an expedition against Vera Cruz was then under advisement. Upon a more full consideration of the subject, it is believed that Vera Cruz may be taken; and, having possession of that city, the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa might probably be reduced or compelled to surrender. If the expedition could go forth without the object being known to the enemy, it is supposed that four thousand troops would be a sufficient force for the enterprise, receiving, as they would, the co-operation of our naval force in the gulf; but at least fifteen hundred or two thousand of them should be of the regular army, and under the command of officers best calculated for such an undertaking. In looking at the present disposition of the troops, it appears to be scarcely possible to get the requisite number of regulars without drawing some of those now with you at Monterey, or on the way to that place. Should you decide against holding military possession of any place in Coahuila or Chihuahua, and order the troops under General Wool to join you, it is presumed that the requisite force for the expedition to Vera Cruz could be detached without interfering with your plans of operation. Whilst the government is anxious that nothing should occur to prevent the expedition to Vera Cruz, regarding it of great importance, yet if by withdrawing from your immediate command the force necessary for this purpose the army with you may be placed in danger, this expedition must, for the present, be either deferred or abandoned; a result deeply to be regretted. On the spot, you will know the strength of the force advancing against you, and the number of troops necessary to resist it; you will by no means weaken yourself so as to expose the army under your command to the probable hazard of disaster. It is desirable to avoid delay; you will, therefore, unless it materially interferes with your own plan of operations, or weakens you too much in your present position, make the necessary arrangements for having four thousand men (of whom fifteen hundred or two thousand should be regular troops) ready to embark for Vera Cruz, or such other destination as may be given them, at the earliest practicable period. The place of embarkation will probably be the Brazos Santiago, or in that vicinity.

The preparations for such a movement will necessarily attract public attention, and give rise to rumors as to its destination; and knowledge of it may reach the enemy in season for them to take additional measures to defend that place unless great caution is observed. It seems now to be generally understood that an expedition is about to be fitted out against Tampico, or some place in the department of Tamaulipas. It may be well to have such generally considered the point of attack; and should unforeseen difficulties arise in regard to Vera Cruz, the movement may be turned in that direction. If the impression generally prevails that an expedition is fitting out for Tampico, or some place on the coast of Tamaulipas, the enemy will more readily expect a forward movement on your part towards San Luis Potosi as cotemporaneous with such an attack, and, under this view of our operations, would be diverted from any extraordinary preparations for the defence of Vera Cruz. Tampico may be attacked by the squadron alone, before the embarkation of the land force; but to accomplish the primary object, the military expedition will proceed directly to Vera Cruz, and with the co-operation of the squadron have better assurance of success in the combined attack on that place. Secrecy is, therefore, of the utmost importance. The belief should be encouraged that Tampico is the destination of the expedition, and its real object be made known only to such officers as must be apprised of it, to enable them to perform their duty in the enterprise, and to them under the strictest injunctions of confidence.

Enclosed you will receive a copy of a communication from Mr. ———, and it is believed that entire confidence may be placed in the accuracy of his representations, as they are founded on his personal observations. You will also receive herewith a rough sketch of the topography of Vera Cruz and the adjacent localities. These you are desired to place in the hands of the commanding officer of the expedition, with such remarks and suggestions of your own as may be useful to him.

As it was suggested in former communications that Major General Patterson should be placed in command of the expedition against Tamaulipas, it is deemed proper that he should still occupy that position in the expedition fitted out against Vera Cruz. I have no further suggestions to make as to a brigadier general to command the volunteers. In regard to the commanding officer of the regular force, it would meet the views of the government if you should select Brevet Brigadier General Worth. In that event you are directed by the President to assign him to that command by virtue of his brevet rank.

It is proposed that Colonel Totten, the chief engineer, Major Baker, of the ordnance corps, and some officer of rank and experience of the topographical corps, shall accompany the expedition, with others of inferior rank in these respective branches of the public service. Such of these officers as are not now with the army will be ordered to proceed to the Rio Grande, and report to the commander of the expedition.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding U S Army in Mexico.

War Department,
Washington, October 29, 1846.

Sir: As the views in relation to the expedition on the gulf coast, presented in my last despatch, embraced some matters not set forth in that of the 22d of September, I thought it might be useful to make Major General Patterson acquainted with them sooner than it could be done through you. I have, therefore, transmitted a copy of it to him. I send you herewith a copy of the letter to General Patterson, and a copy of instructions from the Navy Department to the commander of our squadron in the gulf, relating to the contemplated expedition and the co-operation of the naval force.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding U. S. Army in Mexico.

War Department,
Washington, October 28, 1846.

Sir: I herewith enclose to you a copy of a despatch of the 22d instant to Major General Taylor, and also a copy of one from the Secretary of the Navy to the commander of our squadron in the gulf of Mexico.

By the former you will perceive that, beyond the objects proposed in my communications to you and to General Taylor of the 22d ultimo, for the expedition therein suggested, the attention of the government has been since turned towards an attack upon Vera Cruz.

The fitting out of such an expedition was a suggestion, and depended upon General Taylor's concurrence in its expediency. Should he approve of it, and find himself in a condition to detach the necessary force, it will then become an important question whether it shall be directed against Vera Cruz, or confined to operations in the department of Tamaulipas; and this question can only be determined by a full view of all the circumstances as they shall exist when the expedition is prepared to begin operations. If, at the time it is so prepared, the latest information shall warrant the belief that Vera Cruz cannot be attacked with a reasonable prospect of success, it is not expected it will be attempted.

Our object is to strike an effective blow at the enemy; and, if Vera Cruz can be taken, and by that means the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa reduced, it would be an important event in the war; but the force which is proposed to be sent against that place, or the largest which could be assembled for that purpose without materially interfering with other operations, may not be sufficient to insure reasonable hopes of success, provided the enemy should anticipate our design upon that place in season to strengthen its defences and greatly increase his forces at that point. Whether Vera Cruz will be found in a condition to be attacked by such means as may be collected for that purpose, must be left to your own determination, and that of the commander of our gulf squadron. As you are to co-operate with the naval force, your movements will necessarily be the result of your joint counsels. If Vera Cruz should, all circumstances considered, be found to be too dangerous an enterprize to be attempted, your attention will then be directed to the capture of Tampico. It is not doubted that you will have ample means, aided as you will be with the co-operation of the squadron, to take that place, or make a descent on any other place in Tamaulipas, and subdue the whole department.

You will not expect from this place directions in regard to the particular movements of the expedition, for they must depend in a great measure upon the condition of things at the moment of action. The objects which it is desirable to accomplish have been indicated, but how far the expedition can go in obtaining these objects, or any of them, you must judge, comparing, as you will, your means with the obstacles to be met and overcome.

For the information necessary to guide your movements, you must depend in a great measure upon the navy; and you will perceive, by the orders from the Navy Department, that steps have been already taken for constant communication between you and the commander of the squadron. You will avail yourself of it to confer freely with him, and to indicate such aid and co-operation as you may need from the naval force.

The department is anxious for your reply to my communication of the 22d ultimo. The Quartermaster General is, I presume, at this time on the Rio Grande. He has general instructions to prepare all that may be required for the expedition to be fitted out under your command. Officers in the other branches of the military service will be sent, as stated in the copy of the despatch to General Taylor, to accompany the expedition, and will be with you in season to attend your movements.

It is proper that I should remark that the department has not received from General Taylor, and could not have received, on account of the short period since he was addressed on the subject, any information as to what are his views in regard to the expedition. In my despatches to him you were presented to his consideration as the commanding officer, and this is addressed to you, as other communications have been, on the supposition that orders will be given by him for the employment of yourself, as well as the other officers therein named, for duty as suggested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Robert Patterson,
U. S. Army, commanding on the Rio Grande.

War Department,
Washington, November 25, 1846.

Sir: You will have perceived by my despatch of the 13th ult. that the government apprehended at that time that you would be likely to encounter many and serious difficulties in extending your line of operations as far as San Luis Potosi. These apprehensions are confirmed by your despatch of the 15th ult., which was received on the 20th inst. In the belief that it might not be advisable, unless circumstances favored, to push forward in that direction, it became more important that operations should be undertaken on the gulf coast. In case that it should be decided not to attempt at present to take any place beyond Monterey or Saltillo, with a view of holding permanent possession, it was believed that a sufficient force would be detached from the troops now in the field (with such additions as can be soon made) for a successful attack upon the most important points on the coast, still leaving enough to hold the positions you have gained, and menace the enemy with a forward movement.

By intercepting my despatch of the 2d of September, (a copy of which I herewith transmit,) and probably through other means, the enemy has already become aware of our intentions to operate in that quarter, and undoubtedly will be prepared to make a vigorous resistance. It has become quite evident that a larger force than that indicated in my communication of the 13th ult. will be required for that expedition. The President having decided to send Major General Scott to the seat of war, communicated this determination to him on the 18th inst. Since that time the general has been engaged in making preparations here, principally with a view to military operations on the shores of the gulf, and left yesterday for the Rio Grande.

The competence of a military tribunal to take cognizance of such a case as you have presented in your communication of the 11th ult., viz: the murder of a Mexican soldier, and other offences not embraced in the express provision of the articles of war, was deemed so questionable that an application was made to Congress at the last session to bring them expressly within the jurisdiction of such a tribunal, but it was not acted on. I am not prepared to say that, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and particularly by the non-existence of any civil authority to which the offender could be turned over, a military court could not rightfully act thereon; yet very serious doubts are entertained upon that point, and the government do not advise that course. It seriously regrets that such a flagrant offender cannot be dealt with in the manner he deserves. I see no other course for you to pursue than to release him from confinement, and send him away from the army; and this is recommended. It is intended to invite the attention of Congress again to this subject, in order to have provision made for such cases; but it cannot be so done as to operate ex post facto, and of course will not embrace the case in question.

I refer with reluctance to your remarks upon that part of my despatch of the 22d of September which relates to the Tampico expedition. As you have misconceived the views of the government, and made the course pursued here the ground of a formal protest, it seems to be proper that I should notice your animadversions upon it. I think you have erred in regarding what was put forth as suggestions, in the light of peremptory commands. It was intended to leave the whole subject, as well the organizing and sending forth the expedition as the designation of the officers to command it, to your approval and final judgment. Such I think the fair import of the language used to manifest this intention. Considering the large number of troops on the Rio Grande, and on the way there, it was presumed here that a part of them could be spared for the Tampico expedition; but you were expressly informed that none would be withdrawn from that line if, in your opinion, it "would interfere with your operations;" and it was not then suggested that any should be taken from your advancing column. So in relation to the general officers proposed for the command of the force: they were not to be taken if "it should interfere with your previous arrangement in regard to these officers." They were presented to your consideration for that service, because they were not employed with the column advancing into the enemy's country, but were with the troops on the Rio Grande, from which most of the force for the expedition, it was presumed, would be detached.

Certainly no disrespect was intended towards you as commanding general; nothing was proposed which could deprive you of the means of securing success to your own plans of operation. After a respectful consideration of your remarks, and a re-examination of that part of my despatch which you deem exceptionable, I cannot regard it as an encroachment upon your just rights, or "a violation of the integrity of the chief command in the field."

You must be aware that in my official communications I am only the medium of presenting the views of the President; and you will not question his right as commander-in-chief to make suggestions as to the movements of the forces under your command, or as to the officers to be employed in these movements. Having, in this instance, carefully qualified his suggestions so as to prevent them from being regarded as positive directions or commands, and expressly disclaimed the intention of employing any part of the troops which, in your opinion, "would interfere with your operations," he is entirely unconscious of having given any just cause for protest or complaint.

The reason offered for communicating directly with General Patterson, and instructing him "to make preparations for the movement, (the Tampico expedition,) so far as it can be done without disturbing your present arrangements on the Rio Grande," &c., was "to prevent delay." This you declare to be inapplicable. Your language is: "The reason alleged, viz: the loss of time in communicating with General Patterson, has no application, for the Secretary's despatch came from that officer to my head-quarters in 60 hours, and he could not move without drawing largely upon this column for artillery and regular troops." To vindicate the good faith with which this reason was assigned, I deem it proper to apprise you that it was not known here that General Patterson was at Camargo; but as he was in command on the Rio Grande, it was reasonable to conclude that my communication would reach him at Matamoras, or in that vicinity: neither was it known at what place in the enemy's country my despatch would reach you. The casualties of sending communications to and from you after you had penetrated far into it, was not overlooked. The fact that one from this department of the 2d of September, having relation to the Tampico expedition, was intercepted by the enemy, shows that it was not unreasonable to apprehend delay from this cause.

There were causes for delay in the contemplated expedition other than that suggested in your remarks, viz: the concentration of troops. By my letter to General Patterson, it will be perceived that it was here considered important that he should be at once engaged in acquiring accurate information as to the routes, whether by land or sea, and in forwarding it, with the least possible delay, to the department. The early receipt of this information was deemed important for the reasonable preparation of transports, and collecting needful supplies, &c.

With the disposition which I am sure you possess to judge fairly on the subject, I allow myself to hope that on reflection you will perceive that the reason alleged for a direct communication with General Patterson was not an idle one; and perhaps you may regard it as it was and still is here regarded, as of sufficient importance to justify the course adopted.

In conclusion, I assure you that nothing could be further from the views of the department than any intention to interfere with, or derogate from, the authority belonging to you by right or usage as commanding general; and allow me to add, that after full consideration of the part of the despatch deemed by you exceptionable, I am unable to convince myself that either in the manner or matter, all circumstances considered, it furnishes just grounds for your animadversions.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor, &c., &c.

War Department,
Washington, November 23, 1846.

Sir: The President several days since communicated in person to you his orders to repair to Mexico, to take command of the forces there assembled, and particularly to organize and set on foot an expedition to operate on the gulf coast, if on arriving at the theatre of action you shall deem it to be practicable. It is not proposed to control your operations by definite and positive instructions, but you are left to prosecute them as your judgment, under a full view of all the circumstances, shall dictate. The work is before you, and the means provided, or to be provided, for accomplishing it, are committed to you, in the full confidence that you will use them to the best advantage.

The objects which it is desirable to obtain have been indicated, and it is hoped that you will have the requisite force to accomplish them.

Of this you must be the judge when preparations are made, and the time for action has arrived.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Winfield Scott,
Commanding the Army, Washington.

Head-quarters of the Army,
West Point, New York, September 12, 1846.

Sir: In the letter I had the honor to address to you the 27th of May last, I requested that I might be sent to take the immediate command of the principal army against Mexico—either "to-day or at any better time he (the President) may be pleased to designate."

The horse regiments (twelve months volunteers) destined for that army being, I suppose, now within fifteen or twenty marches of the Rio Grande, and the season for consecutive operations at hand, I respectfully ask to remind the President of that standing request. I do this without any hesitation in respect to Major General Taylor, having reason to believe that my presence at the head of the army in the field, in accordance with my rank, is neither unexpected nor undesired by that gallant and distinguished commander.

A slight return of chills and fevers may detain me here with my family long enough to receive your reply to this note. Should the President yield to my wishes, a few hours in New York and Philadelphia would enable me to make certain arrangements and save the necessity of a return to those cities from Washington. I suppose it would be easy for me to reach the Rio Grande by the end of this month.

With high respect, I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Hon. W. L. Marcy, Secretary of War.

War Department,
Washington, September 14, 1846.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 12th instant, and submitted it to the President. He requests me to inform you that it is not within the arrangements for conducting the campaign in Mexico to supersede General Taylor in his present command, by assigning you to it.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,

Major General W. Scott.

[Private and confidential.] New York, November 25, 1846.

My Dear General: I left Washington late in the day yesterday, and expect to embark for New Orleans the 30th instant. By the 12th of December I may be in that city, at Point Isabel the 17th, and Camargo, say, the 23d, in order to be within easy corresponding distance from you. It is not probable that I may be able to visit Monterey, and circumstances may prevent your coming to me. I shall much regret not having an early opportunity of felicitating you in person upon your many brilliant achievements; but we may meet somewhere in the interior of Mexico.

I am not coming, my dear general, to supersede you in the immediate command on the line of operations rendered illustrious by you and your gallant army. My proposed theatre is different. You may imagine it, and I wish very much that it were prudent at this distance to tell you all that I expect to attempt or hope to execute. I have been admonished that despatches have been lost, and I have no special messenger at hand. Your imagination will be aided by the letters of the Secretary of War, conveyed by Mr. Armistead, Major Graham, and Mr. McLane.

But, my dear general, I shall be obliged to take from you most of the gallant officers and men (regulars and volunteers) whom you have so long and so nobly commanded. I am afraid that I shall, by imperious necessity—the approach of yellow fever on the gulf coast—reduce you, for a time, to stand on the defensive. This will be infinitely painful to you, and for that reason distressing to me. But I rely upon your patriotism to submit to the temporary sacrifice with cheerfulness. No man can better afford to do so. Recent victories place you on that high eminence, and I even flatter myself that any benefit that may result to me personally from the unequal division of troops alluded to will lessen the pain of your consequent inactivity.

You will be aware of the recent call for nine regiments of new volunteers, including one of Texas horse. The President may soon ask for many more, and we are not without hope that Congress may add ten or twelve to the regular establishment. These, by the spring—say April—may, by the aid of large bounties, be in the field, should Mexico not earlier propose terms of accommodation; and long before the spring (March) it is probable you will be again in force to resume offensive operations.

I am writing at a late hour of the night, and more than half sick of a cold. I may despatch another note before I embark; but from New Orleans, Point Isabel, &c., you shall hear from me officially and fully.

It was not possible for me to find time to write from Washington, as I much desired. I only received an intimation to hold myself in preparation for Mexico on the 18th instant. Much has been done towards that end, and more remains to be executed.

Your detailed report of the operations at Monterey, and reply to the Secretary's despatch, by Lieutenant Armistead, were both received two days after I was instructed to proceed south.

In haste, I remain, my dear general, yours faithfully,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Major General Z. Taylor,
United States Army, commanding, &c.

War Department,
November 25, 1846.

Sir: A letter, of which the enclosed is a copy, was sent to Commodore Connor, commander of the United States squadron off Vera Cruz, and by him has been transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy, with the remark that it is from a reliable source, and is corroborated by similar information obtained through other channels.

It is deemed important that you should be in possession of the statements contained in that paper, to the end that means may be taken to ascertain whether they are well founded; and if there be any reason to believe them true, that you may act with reference to the movements of the enemy therein indicated.

A copy of the enclosed paper has been sent to Major General Scott and to General Patterson.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor.

[No. 110.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 12, 1846.

Sir: The communication of the Secretary of War, of October 22, with its enclosures, by the hands of Major McLane, was received this morning. You will have seen by my orders, and my despatch of the 9th, what measures have been taken to conclude the armistice and to occupy Saltillo. Being advised, by special express from Matamoras, of Major McLane's approach, I had postponed my intended departure this day for Saltillo until his arrival.

As I deem it still important to occupy that position, for reasons to be explained below, I shall march thither to-morrow, according to my first intention. On my return, say by the 20th instant, I shall probably be able to inform the department more fully on certain important points connected with our operations; but I now avail myself of the return of Major McLane to Washington to state briefly my views on some of the topics embraced in the Secretary's communication.

Without active operations towards San Luis Potosi from this quarter, I still deem the occupation of Saltillo important, for three reasons:

First. As a necessary outpost of the main force at Monterey, covering, as it does, the important defile which leads from the low country to the table land; and also the route to Monclova.

Secondly. As controlling a region from which we may expect considerable supplies of breadstuffs and cattle, viz: the fertile country around Parras; and Thirdly. As the capital of Coahuila, which renders it very important in a political point of view.

I have already represented to the department the difficulties to be encountered in a forward movement upon San Luis, and the amount of force which would be necessary to insure success. Those reasons only apply to the country beyond Saltillo. I consider the occupation of that point as a necessary complement to our operations and to the policy of holding a defensive line, as the Sierra Madre, and trust the department will concur with me in this view.

As already reported, Brigadier General Wool is now at Monclova, having found no practicable route to Chihuahua, save the well-known but very circuitous one by Parras. I fully agree with the department that no commensurate benefit is likely to result from the march on Chihuahua of General Wool's column, and shall accordingly direct him to suspend his movement in that direction. The occupation of Saltillo in force renders it still less necessary that Chihuahua should be occupied. I cannot yet determine specifically what disposition to make of General Wool's column. Meanwhile I have directed him to remain in his present position until further orders.

In regard to the expedition against Vera Cruz, after a good deal of reflection upon the subject, I feel bound to express my conviction that four thousand men will be a force quite too small for the purpose contemplated. In my despatch of October 15 I stated twenty-five thousand troops, of which ten thousand to be regulars, as the least force that should make a descent in that quarter, with a view of marching on the capital. I now consider that simply to invest and take Vera Cruz, and of course hold the position, we should have ten thousand troops, of which four thousand, if possible, should be regulars. It is quite probable that a smaller force, even four thousand, might effect a landing and carry the town; but could they sustain themselves until the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa should be reduced by famine? The country lying between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico is populous, and at least one portion (Puebla) understood to be very loyal. Would not a force be brought against us before the castle could be reduced, sufficiently strong to endanger our safety, cut off, as we should be, from succor? When to these considerations we add the uncertainty of weather during the winter season, rendering our communication with the fleet liable to interruption, I think it will be seen that the force should be large enough not only to land and invest the town, but also to hold itself secure against any attack from the interior, and for such purpose I consider ten thousand men quite as small a force as should be ventured.

A force of ten thousand men cannot be spared from the occupation of the line of the Sierra Madre. Four thousand may be diverted from that object; and if to these, six thousand fresh troops from the United States were added at the proper time, the expedition might be undertaken with a promise of success. I propose, therefore, to proceed with the preparation for a movement on Tampico; and after accomplishing every thing that is to be done in that quarter, I will, if the department approve, hold four thousand men, of which perhaps three thousand regulars, ready to embark at some point on the coast, and effect a junction with the additional force from the States. The movement towards Tampico will not produce any delay if my views are adopted; and I consider it quite important to occupy Victoria and the lower portion of Tamaulipas, after securing properly the line to be held in this quarter.

I conceive it all-important, having in view the Mexican character, that as little should be left to accident as possible, and that we should be careful, as far as human foresight can provide, to avoid the smallest liability to disaster. A descent upon a hostile coast, notoriously dangerous, and in an inclement season of the year, is an operation requiring the most careful preparations and exact management, and possessing, under the most favorable circumstances, more or less elements of failure. It seems the part of prudence, therefore, to take a sufficient force to meet any contingency that may arise.

Being pressed for time, I have given my views briefly, and perhaps somewhat crudely, on the most important points presented in the despatch of the secretary. There are other topics which will probably claim my attention, but which must now be passed over. I would only suggest that, in the event of an expedition to Vera Cruz, the heavy ordnance, engineers' stores, &c., should be shipped direct from the north. The additional force from the Atlantic seaboard might embark, say, by the 10th of January.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 113.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 24, 1846.

SIR: I reported briefly from Saltillo, on the 16th instant, the occupation of that city by our troops. A duplicate of that report is transmitted herewith. I seize the first opportunity after my return from that place to report more in detail the circumstances of its occupation, and also to refer to the position of Brigadier General Wool, and the orders which I have given to that officer.

While in route to Saltillo on the 14th instant, I was met by a white flag conveying a despatch from General Santa Anna, in reply to the notice given him of the cessation of the armistice. Copies of these letters and of my final reply are forwarded by this mail.

On approaching the city of Saltillo a messenger placed in my hands a document, herewith enclosed, protesting, in the name of the State of Coahuila, against the occupation of the city. The individual signing the protest had been elected governor the day previous, and left the city in the morning of the day on which we took possession. The troops of General Worth's division were immediately quartered in the town, and arrangements were made before I left for procuring a supply of breadstuffs and forage at reasonable rates.

A reconnoissance was also made of the country some 25 miles in front, and one projected, to be executed after my departure, of the Parras route as far as Patos, a rich hacienda about 35 miles from Saltillo. I left a squadron of the 2d dragoons to serve under General Worth's orders until relieved by other cavalry, proposing to assign Lieutenant Kearny's company 1st dragoons and a squadron or two of the Kentucky horse to his division as soon as they can be brought forward. I shall also reinforce him by a volunteer force—probably a brigade.

The division at Saltillo covers the direct route from San Luis Potosi. The other route would be covered by a force at Parras, which would at the same time control the abundant supplies to be drawn from the neighboring country, the richest of the north of Mexico. Brigadier General Wool being in position at Monclova, and it being now fully ascertained that he cannot march thence on Chihuahua, even were it desired, I have ordered him to move on Parras. The State of Coahuila will then be completely occupied and covered; and in case active operations towards the interior should hereafter be determined on, we shall be in position to march on San Luis, Zacatecas or Durango. Brigadier General Wool will at once abandon his communications by San Antonio and Lavaca, and adopt that by the Rio Grande and Monterey.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL .
Of the army, Washington, D. C.

GOBIERNO DEL ESTADO DE COAHUILA.

El movimiento emprendido por V. con las fuerzas que militan á sus ordenes, no deja la menor duda que tiene por objeto invadir esta ciudad, lo mismo que lo han sido la majoria de los pueblos de Coahuila por las tropas que han abanzado hasta Monclova. La falta de armas en el Estado de mi cargo para oponer la fuerza á la fuerza, dará lugar á que V. ocupe sin obstaculo esta capital compeliendome las circunstancias á retirarme de ella; mas al alejarme debo y quiero que conste de una manera autentica, la protesta que hago solemnemente á nombre del Estado de Coahuila, contra el gobierno de los Estados Unidos del norte, por la usurpacion del territorio ocupado por sus armas; por los ultrajes y perjuicios que se infieran en las personas y haciendas de los habitantes de estos pueblos indefensos; por las depredaciones que sufran los intereses publicos, y por cuantos males son consiguientes á la invasion mas injustificable que conoce el mundo.

Dios y libertad! Saltillo, Novembre 16 de 1846.

JOSE MARIA DE AGUIRRE.

Señor Mayor General Don Z. Taylor,
General-en-gefe del Ejercito de los Estados Unidos.

[Translation.]

The movement you are making with the forces under your command leaves no doubt that your object is to invade this city, as have been the greater part of the towns of Coahuila, by the troops which have advanced to Monclova. The want of arms in this State leaves me no means to oppose force to force, and will enable you to occupy this capital without opposition, and compel me to retire from it; but in doing so I ought, and I desire, to place upon record, in the most authentic manner, this protest, which I solemnly make in the name of the State of Coahuila, against the government of the United States of the north, for the usurpation of the territory occupied by their arms; for the outrages and damages which may accrue to the persons and property of the inhabitants of these defenceless towns; for the injuries the public interests may suffer, and for all the evils consequent upon the most unjustifiable invasion ever known to the world.

God and liberty! Saltillo, November 16, 1846.

JOSE MARIA DE AGUIRRE.

Major General Taylor,
General-in-chief of the army of the United States.

[No. 114.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 26, 1846.

Sir: I have to report that I received official information last evening of the occupation of Tampico on the 14th instant, by the naval forces under Commodore Perry. I had before learned from the Mexican newspapers that the garrison had been withdrawn on the 27th of October.

On the requisition of Commodore Perry, who brought the first intelligence of the occupation to Brazos Santiago, Major General Patterson promptly gave orders for Lieutenant Colonel Belton's battalion (six companies) to proceed to and garrison Tampico, and also took measures to ship thither a sufficient supply of heavy ordnance and provisions. These orders have been fully approved by me, and I have directed a regiment of volunteers to be added to the garrison, the whole to be under the command of a brigadier general, probably Brigadier General Shields, who is now here and will soon report to Major General Patterson.

I propose still to throw forward a force as far as Victoria, with the view of examining the country, and particularly the passes which lead from Linares and other points towards the interior.

I shall take the earliest occasion to reply to the communication of the Secretary of War, dated October 29, but am obliged to postpone it for a day or two.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[No. 121.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, December 8, 1846.

Sir: As I expect to march in a few days for Victoria, I consider the present a proper occasion to explain somewhat in detail the dispositions which have been made, and which are contemplated, for the occupation and defence of this frontier. With this view, I enclose a sketch exhibiting the line from Parras to Tampico, and showing how a portion of that line is naturally marked by the chain of the "Sierra Madre."

It will be seen at once, that San Luis Potosi is a position almost equally distant from the points of this line. This would give a force at San Luis a very great advantage over us, were it not for the nature of the country and the communications—the region between San Luis and the mountains being scantily supplied with water and subsistence, and the road by Saltillo and Monterey being the only practicable route for artillery across the mountains. Without artillery, the Mexican troops are not at all formidable, and, I think, have but little confidence in themselves. I therefore consider the positions of Saltillo and Parras as of prime importance. With an intermediate post at Patos, and the means, by a good road, of rapidly uniting, if necessary, I deem the columns of Brigadiers General Wool and Worth quite equal to hold that flank of the line. I shall, however, reinforce the latter general, particularly in cavalry, and shall establish a reserve at this place to support the advanced positions, should the movements of the enemy require it.

Brigadier General Wool is understood to be now at Parras with his column—say 2,400 strong, with six guns. Brigadier General Worth has his head-quarters at Saltillo, his command consisting of some 1,200 regular troops, with eight guns. I propose to reinforce him by two regiments of volunteer foot, and a portion of the Kentucky cavalry. Lieutenant Kearny's company is all the regular cavalry force I can assign to him at present.

At Monterey will be the head-quarters of Major General Butler, commanding the reserve. Two companies of artillery, and one of the weak infantry battalions, (4th,) will compose the garrison of the place. The troops of General Butler's proper division (Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky) will be at this point, and in echellon on the route hence to Camargo and the mouth of the Rio Grande, except those which may be ordered to reinforce General Worth, as above indicated.

Tampico is now garrisoned by eight strong companies of artillery and the Alabama regiment of volunteers—say 1,000 effectives. I consider this force quite sufficient to hold the place, controlling, as we do, the harbor. Between Tampico and this place, Victoria offers itself at once as an important position to be held by us. It is the capital of the state of Tamaulipas; it is situated at the debouchée of a pass through the mountains, and it has a port, Soto la Marina, where we shall probably be able to establish a convenient depot. It also threatens the flank of the Mexican army, should it advance from San Luis. These considerations attracted my attention to Victoria before the surrender of Tampico; but I now deem it more than ever important, for I have reason to believe that a corps of observation is in that quarter, under the orders of General Urrea, having its head-quarters, perhaps, at Tula, and sending forward advanced parties as far as Victoria. I have, therefore, changed nothing in my original purpose of moving on Victoria, believing it important to occupy that point, and knowing that any surplus force would then be in position for the ulterior views of the government, should any further operations on the gulf coast be ordered. Major General Patterson has accordingly been instructed to march from Matamoras on Victoria with three regiments of volunteers from his division, one being the Tennessee horse. I propose to move from this point, say by the 12th instant, with the regular troops now here under Brigadier General Twiggs, (except those to be left in garrisons, as above,) and the regiments of General Patterson's division under Brigadier General Quitman. At Montemorelos, 68 miles from this, I shall effect a junction with Riley, who is now there, and incorporate with the column the second Tennessee regiment under orders for that place. With this augmented force I expect to effect a junction with Major General Patterson before Victoria.

After establishing a depot, if it be found practicable, at Soto la Marina, examining the passes of the mountains, and making such dispositions as may be found necessary for the security of the position, it is my intention, unless otherwise instructed, to return with a portion of the regular force, and establish my head-quarters in advance of Saltillo, which, after all, I consider to be our most important point.

You will perceive, that one effect of the arrangements above indicated, will be, to throw Major General Patterson, with the troops of his appropriate division,(Tennessee, Illinois, Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia,) on the left, and near the coast, while Major General Butler, with his division, occupies the line of communication from the Rio Grande to Saltillo.

Intelligence, received this moment from Saltillo, represents all quiet in front. We have reports of a revolution in Mexico, embracing two or three States, and directed against General Santa Anna, but the information does not come in an authentic form.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[No. 122.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, December 14, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to report that the movement toward Victoria has commenced. The regular troops (except a portion of the dragoons to join in route) marched yesterday, under Brigadier General Twiggs; the volunteers, under Brigadier General Quitman, marched this morning. I shall leave to-morrow, and expect to overtake the columns at Montemorelos.

In my communication of the 8th instant, I alluded to the occupation of Tampico, and the force which I considered sufficient to hold that place. I fully approved of the first measures taken by Major General Patterson, to garrison Tampico; and, after giving him instructions to despatch thither a regiment of volunteers in addition to the battalion of artillery, was not a little surprised to hear from him that he had, besides, ordered the Illinois brigade by water, and proposed going there himself to assume the command. This proceeeding I considered not only wholly unnecessary, but as a direct and unwarrantable interference with the plan which I had already communicated to General Patterson, for a combined movement upon Victoria; for, while the Illinois regiments were to proceed by water to a place where their services were not needed, the Tennessee regiment of horse was to be compromitted by matching, unsupported by infantry, from Matamoras to Victoria. By special express I succeeded in arresting this fatal misdirection, and have now hopes of concentrating a respectable force at Victoria, as first intended.

I wish my report of interferences could stop here; but another of the gravest character has been brought to my notice, to which I beg leave to invite the earnest attention of the general-in-chief and the Department of War. In an official letter addressed, under date of November 26th, to the commanding officer at Point Isabel, Commodore Perry, of the navy, writes thus:

"Since I wrote you by Lieutenant Anderson, I have visited New Orleans, conferred with Governor Johnson and Generals Jesup and Brooke, all of whom unite with me in placing great importance upon the immediate possession, by a military garrison, of Tampico.

"I have on board this ship eight pieces of artillery, with all the requisite appurtenances and munitions, borrowed from the State arsenal of Louisiana by General Brooke; also Lieutenant Crittenden with forty-five infantry, (recruits.) General Brooke assures me that four hundred mounted riflemen, hourly expected at New Orleans, will be immediately despatched in the steamer 'Massachusetts' so soon as they arrive; but I fear there will be difficulty in landing the horses, on account of the roughness of the sea at the bar of Tampico."

It is hardly necessary to make any comment upon the above. It will be seen at once that by the advice of officers at a distance, totally ignorant of my views, and incurring no responsibility for the failure of operations, a large and efficient corps of cavalry, upon which I had reckoned for important service in the interior, has been intercepted without authority, and sent where it is not needed, and where it may lose many of its horses. Had the mounted riflemen been sent back to Jefferson barracks, they could not have been more completely lost to the present operations.

I have now no assurance that any reinforcements or supplies will reach me through New Orleans. The advice of General Brooke or "Governor Johnson" may divert recruits and the most important objects of supply to Tampico, under the new principle of war that the enemy, after destroying his heavy guns, will attack a place which he dared not defend.

With such proceedings on the Rio Grande and in New Orleans, I cannot be held responsible for the efficient prosecution of the objects of the government here. The departure of General Patterson from the full and precise instructions I had given him is, in my opinion, a legitimate result of the position of quasi-independence given to that officer by the Department of War, against which I have protested, and again protest. As for the interference of General Brooke, the War Department, I cannot doubt, will give that officer the most stringent orders in no case to stop or divert the troops or supplies that may be destined for the army under my command.

While I am considered competent to exercise the chief command in the field, it is no more than reasonable that subordinates, and above all, officers not serving with the army against Mexico, should be compelled to keep in their proper places, and not expose to hazard, by mischievous meddling, the success of military operations involving the reputation of the army and the country.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, 2d DIVISION, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, Mexico, December 8, 1846.

SIR: On the 22d of November I had the honor to inform you that I had been apprized of the capture of Tampico, and of the measures adopted by me for occupying and holding that place, and that I intended to go there by sea and assume the command. * * I regret to say that the general commanding the army in Mexico has disapproved of my proceedings. Herewith I send copies of the letter of disapproval, and of my answer. * * * I am ordered to move by land from this point, and am using every exertion to obtain means of transportation, and will leave here as soon as those means can be obtained. I hope to march in eight or ten days, but as transportation has not been provided for me, or officers of the quartermaster's department assigned to me in time to procure a sufficient amount, I do not consider myself responsible in any degree for delay caused by want of it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. PATTERSON,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

HON. W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 28, 1846.

SIR: Your communication of the 24th inst. has just been received and laid before the commanding general, who directs me to express his entire disapproval of your orders respecting the Illinois regiments of foot and the Tennessee horse. He now directs that the movement of these corps towards Tampico, in the manner suggested, be at once suspended, and then carried out only in the mode prescribed by him in previous instructions. It is considered by the general that 1,000 men, of which say one-half regular troops, are more than sufficient to defend Tampico; and it is not his purpose to divert a larger force to that object. The battalion under Colonel Gates, or Lieutenant Colonel Belton, together with one regiment of volunteer infantry, as directed in the instructions by Major McCall, are intended to compose the garrison of that place, and may even be reduced if circumstances require. The Alabama regiment having already started, will not be recalled, although a different arrangement was proposed. The Tennessee horse and the Illinois brigade will now march from Matamoras, the former regiment being immediately recalled to that point until it can march supported by a column of infantry. This march will be under your own orders, and the general desires to be informed when it will commence, that he may regulate his own march accordingly.

I am directed further to say that the general disapproves of your order directing Captain Hunter to proceed to New Orleans. No officer in the field, except the general himself, has any right to order an officer out of the country; and the general sees nothing in the case to justify a departure from regulations and usage.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Major General R. PATTERSON,
Commanding 2d division, Camargo, Mexico.

A true copy:
SETH WILLIAMS, 2*d Lieut.* 1*st Artillery, A. D. C.*

HEAD-QUARTERS, 2D DIVISION, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
U. S. steamer Corvette, December 3, 1846.

MAJOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th of November. In accordance with the orders of the commanding general, I have suspended the embarkation of the Illinois foot until I have received the instructions which you say were sent by Major McCall, who I hope will soon join me, I desire to say that I have given no orders to the Tennessee regiment of horse, except for its improvement in police and discipline. In my letter of the 24th of November I informed you that I should order the regiment of Tennessee horse to proceed as directed in your letter of the 5th of the same month. I am therefore somewhat at a loss to understand why the commanding general should in this case direct you to express to me "his entire disapproval" of my proposing to do precisely what I had been ordered by him to do. Although I think I had a clear right to order "Captain Hunter, 2d dragoons, to proceed to New Orleans and bring out the horses and equipments for companies H and K of that regiment, so that the men may be at once mounted, and prepared for the field," and that there has been no departure from the regulations of the army, yet as the commanding general disapproves of this step, and as Captain Hunter is now on the boat with me, I will order him back to Camargo. As I have been very anxious that all my proceedings in Mexico should merit and receive the approbation of the general commanding, I cannot but regret that any act of mine should meet with his disapprobation.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of extract from special orders No. 179, the original of which was sent direct to Colonel Baker, although he was under my immediate command, and stationed at the same place. I have to remark that I neither sent up nor approved any application of Colonel Baker to go to Washington; that his correspondence with head-quarters was direct, and did not pass through the usual channel. Colonel Baker's regiment will now march with only one field officer, the major. I venture to request that hereafter all correspondence with officers under my command be passed through the usual channel. This is a courtesy due me, and I shall expect it.

On my arrival at Matamoras I will ascertain the means of transportation, and inform you when the column under my command will move.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. PATTERSON,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

Major W. W. S. Bliss,
Ass't Adj. Gen., Head-quarters A. O., Monterey, Mexico.

[No. 123.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, December 22, 1846.

Sir: Agreeably to the plan announced in my despatch, No. 122, I left this place on the 15th instant for Victoria, having previously put in motion the troops destined for that point. At Montemorelos a junction was effected, on the 17th, with the 2d infantry and 2d regiment of Tennessee foot from Camargo, and it was intended with the whole force, say 3,500 men, to march on the 19th for Victoria. But the very evening of my arrival at Montemorelos a despatch arrived from General Worth, commanding at Saltillo, with the intelligence that Santa Anna designed to take advantage of the diversion of force towards Victoria, and by a rapid movement to strike a heavy blow at Saltillo; and, if successful, then at General Wool's force at Parras. Under these circumstances, and with no means of judging how far this information might be well founded, I deemed it proper to return to this point with the regular force, and thus be in position to reinforce Saltillo, if necessary. The volunteers under Brigadier General Quitman, reinforced by a field battery, were ordered to continue their march, and effect a junction with General Patterson, at Victoria, while I returned hither with General Twiggs's division, now increased by the 2d infantry.

In the mean time Major General Butler and Brigadier General Wool, being advised by General Worth of a probable attack upon his position, moved rapidly to join him with all the available force at Parras and Monterey, while orders were despatched by Major General Butler to hasten up troops from the rear. The latter general proceeded in person to Saltillo and assumed the command, agreeably to instructions which I had given before my departure to meet a case like the present.

I had proceeded beyond this point, on my way to Saltillo, when I was met on the 20th by a despatch from the front, announcing the early arrival of General Wool's column, and also that the expected concentration and movement of the Mexican troops upon that position had not taken place; indeed, that their advanced posts had rather been withdrawn. Deeming the force now and soon to be at Saltillo quite sufficient to repel any demonstration at this season from San Luis Potosi, I have not thought it worth while to throw forward General Twiggs's division to that place; and, after resting it to-day, I shall to-morrow put it again in march for Victoria, moving forward myself to that point.

Major General Patterson is supposed to be now well on his march from Matamoras to Victoria, where his division, except the Alabama regiment, (in garrison at Tampico,) will be brought together. With a force holding in observation the passes from Tula, the garrison at Tampico may be much reduced, with advantage to the service. I shall withdraw from that place, at once, the mounted riflemen and recruits that have been sent there.

I respectfully enclose a letter received yesterday from General Santa Anna, in reply to my communication of December 4, a copy of which has been forwarded.

My last official date from Washington is November 10.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

Of the army, Washington, D. C.

[Translation.]

GENERAL: The communication of your excellency, of the 4th instant, and the enclosed printed sheet, inform me that the government of the United States have ordered the release of General Dias de la Vega, and of the Mexican officers who accompanied him, thus carrying into effect an exchange for the prisoners of the brig Truxton, as agreed upon between the commanding general of Vera Cruz and Commodore Connor. I shall give notice of this event to my government.

I shall also make known to it the measures your excellency has taken for the liberation of the Mexicans who were detained near Matamoras; and in the name of the republic I give you most sincere thanks for this trait of humanity and generosity, which, to a certain extent, alleviates the distresses consequent on a state of war.

I have the honor to offer to your excellency my esteem and high consideration.

Head-quarters, San Luis Potosi, December 17, 1846.

ANTO. LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

General Z. Taylor,
Major General, commanding the army of the United States.

[No. 124.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Montemorelos, December 26, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report that I reached this place yesterday, and shall to-morrow resume my march towards Victoria. I have despatched a topographical officer, with a squadron of cavalry, to reconnoitre a pass through the mountains from this point to Labradores, and thence to Linares. General Twiggs's division came up this morning, and encamps three miles in advance. It will also march to-morrow.

It is understood that Major General Patterson was to march on the 21st from Matamoras, having been delayed at that point by unavoidable causes. He will probably join me near Victoria.

I learned yesterday that the Mexican Congress had elected Santa Anna president, and Gomez Farias vice president, of the republic, and have heard from several quarters that that body is favorably disposed towards negotiation. I hope, at Victoria, to obtain more precise intelligence as to the state of things in the interior.

I have to acknowledge your letter to Captain Turpin, (v. s.,) of November 25; copy of your letters to Major Johnson and Lieutenant Bell, (v. s.,) of November 11; "general orders" No. 50, and "special orders" Nos. 108 and 111.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General
Of the army, Washington, D. C.

[No. 125.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Montemorelos, December 26, 1846.

Sir: Your communication of November 30, with enclosures, relative to the occupation of Tampico, has been received.

The prompt and, in my opinion, sufficient measures taken to garrison Tampico the moment that Commodore Perry arrived at the Brazos, were duly reported to the department, and I regret that it should have been considered necessary to give orders from Washington to garrison a place voluntarily abandoned by the enemy and within the theatre of my operations; but above all, that the diversion of a large body of regular troops to that point by the orders of Brigadier General Brooke should be approved, as seems to be the case. Those troops are not required at Tampico, but are much wanted at other points.

In regard to the direct correspondence with Major General Patterson, I have nothing to add to what has been said in former letters, except that confusion and embarrassment have resulted from this unusual course; and I must again insist, while invested with the chief command, upon being left perfectly free to employ the officers and the troops under my orders as may, in my own judgment, seem most expedient for the public service.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL
Of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[No. 1.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Victoria, Mexico, January 7, 1847.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that on the 29th ultimo Brigadier General Quitman occupied, without resistance, the city of Victoria, capital of the State of Tamaulipas. The enemy had a body of some 1,500 cavalry in the town, with its advanced picket at Santa Engracia, but it fell back as General Quitman approached, and is understood to be now at Jaumave, in the direction of Tula. At Tula there is a strong division of observation under the command of General Valencia.

An examination of the mountain pass leading to Tula shows that it is entirely impracticable for artillery or wagons. Such is also believed to be the character of the Santa Barbara pass, which opens in the direction of Tampico.

I arrived here with the division of Brigadier General Twiggs on the 4th instant, and was joined on the same day by the force which Major General Patterson conducted from Matamoras. The force now collected here is over 5,000 strong, and, I am happy to add, in excellent health, and in good condition for service.

I am unofficially advised that Major General Scott is now in the country, under orders from the government. I propose to remain at this point until I can hear from him and determine what disposition to make of the troops now here. I am constantly expecting despatches from his head-quarters.

The reconnoissance of the mountain passes leading to Labradores, alluded to in my communication of December 26, was completely successful, so far as to determine the character of the routes, &c.; but I regret to report that on the return of the party to Linares, the escort was attacked in a difficult pass of the mountain, and the baggage and ten men of the rear guard cut off. It is hoped that the rear guard may have effected their escape, and will yet join us. The officer and non-commissioned officer of the rear guard are in arrest, and the former under charges. I am happy to say that no blame can attach to Lieutenant Colonel May, who commanded the escort, for this unfortunate occurrence. His detailed report will be forwarded hereafter.

We have newspapers from the city of Mexico to the 19th of December, at which date the congress had taken no action in regard to the war or the election of president. The country seems to be in a very distracted condition, and the tone of the public press more desponding than heretofore.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 4, 1847.

SIR: Some anxiety is felt here in regard to the position of our troops in Mexico. Everything indicates that it is the policy of the enemy to strike at our detached posts, or cut our lines of communication. We are not fully advised what lines it is proposed to sustain, or what posts are to be held. The line, should it not extend beyond Monterey, is a long one, and a considerable force will be required to keep it open, and to hold that place. If, in addition to retaining possession of Monterey, an attempt should be made to establish posts at Parras, Saltillo, Linares, Victoria, &c., it is feared that an opportunity will be offered to the enemy to gain some advantage over us at one or more of these points, or along the chain of connexion neccessarily to be kept up with them. You are well acquainted with the present plans of operation. While engaged in an expedition on the seacoast, it is not proposed to penetrate the country beyond Monterey, with a view to its permanent occupation, though it is desirable to maintain a threatening attitude at that point. Monterey must be held with a sufficient force. Such a force being provided for that object, the remainder will of course be at your disposal to maintain other proper positions, and to operate on the gulf coast, and especially at Vera Cruz. Your position will enable you to determine, better than can be done here, what should be the best disposition for the safety of our troops, and to disappoint the expectations of the enemy, who is undoubtedly watching for opportunities to fall upon them while in detachments of small bodies, with greatly superior numbers. No positive directions will, therefore, be given touching these matters.

It was expected that General Taylor would have deemed it expedient to order the force under General Wool to join him at Monterey, and not to extend his line to Saltillo, with a view to hold permanent possession of it. At the last advices from Gen. Wool he had not received orders to unite his forces with those under the immediate command of General Taylor, but it is hoped that before this time the suggestions in my despatch to General Taylor of the 22d of October have been received, approved, and carried into effect. The detachment which it is proposed to make from the forces at and near Monterey, for the expedition on the coast, will render it proper, if not indispensable, that they should be reinforced by General Wool's command.

As a considerable part of the forces under General Taylor may be withdrawn for the expedition you are to conduct against Vera Cruz, it is urged that great caution should be observed in regard to the safety of those which may be left on the present line of operations.

If any reliance can be placed on the accounts which have reached us as to the number and condition of the army under the command of the Mexican general, he could have rendered it difficult and hazardous for our troops to advance to Saltillo, and his retiring beyond that place wears the appearance of a ruse to draw us far into the country in that direction, to the end that he may practise, with better hopes of success, his system of guerrilla warfare. If such be his object, I trust proper measures will be taken to disappoint him. It seems now to be generally understood that he is at Tula with a large body of cavalry. The object of this movement is not clearly perceived. The withdrawing of the Mexican force from Tampico would seem to indicate a determination on his part to yield up Tamaulipas to our arms; but the occupation of Tula with a strong force does not appear consistent with such a course of policy, unless he is apprehensive that we may move upon San Luis Potosi through the passes of the mountains in that vicinity. Should we undertake to hold Victoria with a small force, might he not move from his present position at Tula against that place, and surprise it; or fall upon some of our detachments moving by land to Tampico? Though the Sierra Madre is difficult to pass, and with wagons or wheel-carriages impassable, yet may not the enemy's cavalry find a way through the gorges of this mountain? It is not unreasonable to expect that some such movement is contemplated. It is therefore suggested that this matter should be well considered, and great care taken to guard against any surprise in this quarter.

We have no news from Mexico on which much reliance can be placed; but from such information as we have, it is doubtful whether a Mexican Congress will have assembled at the time fixed for it—the 6th of December; and it is equally doubtful whether, whenever it shall come together, it will be disposed to enter upon negotiations for peace. Mexico is undoubtedly in a wretched condition, and without the prospect of improvement. A hope was entertained, and not now wholly abandoned, that the northern departments would see that their interest would be promoted by withdrawing from the central government and forming an independent republic. Should any such disposition manifest itself, it ought to be encouraged, and those engaged in the movement should have all the protection and support from our forces that can be properly given to them; without any pledge, however, that its separate existence will be made a condition in the treaty of peace which may be entered into between Mexico and the United States.

We have not yet learned that Mexico is making any extraordinary efforts to assemble a large covering army at Vera Cruz, and it is hoped that you will not find a formidable force to oppose your landing. Securely on shore in the vicinity of Vera Cruz, I have but little doubt of your success in getting possession of the city, and hope the surrender of the castle will follow.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General WINFIELD SCOTT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 27, 1847.

SIR: I deem it proper to send you a letter (taken from a newspaper) which first appeared in the "New York Morning Express," and has since, as a matter of course, been transferred to many other journals. I learn from General Gaines that the letter is genuine. This information, I am assured, he had previously given to others. As the letter was not marked "confidential," he adjudged that circumstances existed which justified the publication of some part of it, though he expresses an opinion that it was not written with such a view.

It will in a short time be in possession of our enemy; and coming, as it does, from the general to whom the conduct of the war on our part was confided, it will convey most valuable information to the Mexican commander, not only in relation to our present line of operations, but as to the new one, which alone, in your opinion, can be taken with a prospect of success, if an attempt is to be made on the city of Mexico.

The disclosure of your views as to the future operations of our forces, accompanied, as it is, with your opinion that the fruits of the war, if completely successful, will be of little worth to us, will, it is greatly to be feared, not only embarrass our subsequent movements, but disincline the enemy to enter into negotiations for peace. With particular reference to these effects, the publication is most deeply to be regretted.

The 650th paragraph of the General Regulations for the army, published March 1, 1825, declares that "Private letters or reports relative to military marches and operations are frequently mischievous in design, and always disgraceful to the army. They are, therefore, strictly forbidden; and any officer found guilty of making such report for publication, without special permission, or of placing the writing beyond his control, so that it finds its way to the press, within one month after the termination of the campaign to which it relates, shall be dismissed from the service."

This paragraph was not included in the compilation of the general regulations published in 1841, but is deemed peculiarly applicable to a state of war; and the President has directed it to be republished, and the observance of it strictly enjoined upon all officers.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
United States Army, in Mexico.

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 11, 1846.

SIR: The President and this department feel no little embarrassment on the subject of brevets to the officers who served with distinction in the affairs of the 8th and 9th of May, and in the defence of Fort Brown. With every wish and desire to reward those who distinguished themselves by their gallant conduct on these several occasions, in the presence of the enemy, efforts have been made to form a list of brevet appointments for the favorable action of the Senate; but it has been found impossible to do that justice to the subject here, which the occasion seems to demand, under the apprehension that, for the want of full and particular information, so necessary in deciding questions of this nature, some highly meritorious officers might be passed over, whose gallantry and efficiency on the occasions would lose nothing by a comparison with others more favorably noticed. In this doubt and uncertainty, the President naturally looks to you for advice and assistance, which, from your knowledge of the character and conduct of the officers under your command, and of the services rendered by each on the occasions referred to, he does not question you will be able and willing to give; and he therefore requests that you will furnish a list of such officers as, in your opinion, are entitled to reward for their gallant conduct.

You are also requested to state whether there are any non commissioned officers or privates whose general conduct and gallantry in these affairs are such as to warrant their being favorably noticed by the government, or whose claims would entitle them to promotion.

An early answer is requested, as the President is desirous of submitting the list to the Senate before the adjournment of Congress, which, it is presumed, will not be protracted beyond four weeks from this time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande.

Mr. Brooke, who is the bearer of this, will take charge of any communication you may make.

[No. 66.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, July 27, 1846.

SIR: The communication of the Secretary of War, dated the 11th instant, requesting me to furnish a list of such officers as, in my opinion, are entitled to the distinction of brevet commissions for their services in the affairs of the 8th and 9th of May, and in the defence of Fort Brown, was received yesterday by the hands of Mr. Brooke.

The task of making the selection desired by the Secretary is one of peculiar delicacy and difficulty, increased, at this particular moment, by the fact that nearly all the corps of the army have moved forward to Camargo; and I am thus deprived of consultation with their chiefs. I fear that the list which I shall present will appear large; but where all behaved so well, it has been impossible, without unjust distinctions, to form a more restricted one; and it may be that I shall find it necessary, hereafter, to recommend a few names in addition. The list which I subjoin presents the names of such officers as I conceive entitled to brevet commissions for their participation in the affairs of the 8th and 9th of May, and the defence of Fort Brown.

Affairs of the 8th and 9th of May.

General staff.—Lieutenant Colonel Payne, Captain Bliss, Lieutenant Eaton, A. D. C., Captain Crosman, (affair of the 8th, only,) Captain Waggaman, Lieutenant Scarritt, engineers, Lieutenants Meade and Wood, (affair of the 8th, only,) topographical engineers, Major Craig, ordnance.

Light artillery.—Captain Duncan, Lieutenants Ridgely, Roland, Shover, Fremont, Hays, Peck, and French.

Second Dragoons.—Colonel Twiggs, Captain May, Lieutenant and Adjutant McDonald.

Artillery battalion.—Lieutenant Colonel Childs, Captain Smith, 2d artillery; Captain Scott, 4th artillery; Lieutenant Luther, 2d artillery; Lieutenants Chase and Daniels, 2d artillery; Lieutenant Churchill, (affair of the 8th, only,) Lieutenant and Adjutant Garnett.

Third infantry.—Captain Morris, Captain Barbour, Lieutenant and Adjutant Irwin.

Fourth infantry.—Lieutenant Colonel Garland, Major Allen, Captain McCall, Captain Buchanan, Lieutenants Alvord, Hoskins, adjutant, Beaman, Woods, and Hays.

Fifth infantry.—Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh, Major Staniford, Captains Scott, Hooe, and Chapman, Lieutenant and Adjutant Deas.

Eighth Infantry.—Lieutenant Colonel Belknap, Captain Montgomery, Lieutenants Gates, Lincoln, Lee, Maclay, Clark, adjutant, and Jordan.

Defence of Fort Brown.

Captain Mansfield, engineers; Captain Lowd, 2d artillery; Lieutenant Bragg, 3d artillery; Captain Miles, and Lieutenant and Adjutant Page, 7th infantry.

I have underscored such names as may properly be selected, to form a smaller list, should the above be found too large.

I will only add, that the above list has been prepared in great haste, in order to allow the bearer of the Secretary's communication, Mr. Brooke, to proceed to New Orleans in the return steamboat.

The inquiry relative to such non-commissioned officers and soldiers as were distinguished, cannot be answered until I can have an opportunity of consulting the various subordinate commanders.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 17, 1846.

GENERAL: It affords me sincere pleasure to be the medium of communicating to you the complimentary notice of yourself and the army under your command, as conveyed in the accompanying resolutions of the general assembly of the State of Connecticut.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding Army of Occupation on the Rio Grande, Texas.

War Department,
Washington, July 27, 1846.

Sir: The commissioners appointed by the United States to treat with the Camanche Indians redeemed from them a captive Mexican boy, by paying a ransom of $150. He accompanied a deputation of the Prairie Indians to this city. It has been determined to restore him to his parents and friends, who reside in the department of Chihuahua, and in order to do this he has been sent to the quartermaster at New Orleans, with directions to send him to you. You will, in the way you deem most expedient, return him to his friends. All we know of him or them we have learned from himself. He will inform you of the particular part of the department from which he was taken. By the treaty between the United States and Mexico, that republic would be bound to refund the sum paid for his ransom and the expenses of returning him, but the occurrence of war has abrogated that treaty in this respect. It is thought the sending him to his parents would have a good effect upon the people of that province.

Mr. Wm. S. Parrott, now of this city, long a resident in Mexico, is personally acquainted with the present governor of Chihuahua, and has written him a letter on the subject of returning this captive. I herewith enclose it to you, to be forwarded to him.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor.

War Department, October 5, 1846.

Sir: By a joint resolution of Congress, approved July 16th, the President is authorized and requested to have a medal of gold procured, with appropriate devices and inscriptions thereon—presented to you in the name of the republic, as a tribute due to your good conduct, valor, and generosity to the vanquished. Preparations are being made to carry this resolution into effect, and the only difficulty that seems to present itself is the want of a faithful bust likeness of yourself, in order to enable the artist to prepare the die. It is possible that you may have a faithful miniature likeness of yourself, which could be made use of for this purpose: if so, and you will direct it to be sent to this department, it shall be taken good care of and safely returned to you. If you have no such likeness, it is suggested that one may be taken by a competent artist and forwarded to the department—the expense of which will be defrayed by the government. It is believed that a daguerreotype likeness would answer every purpose, and insure a faithful resemblance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding Army of Occupation, Monterey, Mexico.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, Mexico, December 8, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of October 5th relative to the furnishing a likeness of myself for the purpose of aiding the artist in preparing the die for a medal designed for me.

This communication came to me when absent at Saltillo, and hence the reason why it has remained so long unanswered. I regret, however, to say that I have neither portrait nor miniature of myself, and there is not in the army or this place an artist who could execute one sufficiently accurate for the purpose. The earliest opportunity shall be devoted to procuring a good likeness, and which shall at once be appropriated to the use of the artist employed upon the medal.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. Army.

Hon. W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 30, 1846.

SIR: In transmitting the enclosed communications from Colonel R. C. Hall, of Lewistown, Pennsylvania, I beg to say that the department would feel gratified by an early attention to his request, with as full and circumstantial account of the death, burial, and place of interment of the late gallant officer who is the subject of the inquiry, as may be obtained.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding, &c., Army of Occupation, Monterey, Mexico.

[No. 59.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, July 3, 1846.

SIR: It has been brought to my notice that an omission occurred in my detailed report of the action of May 9, which I beg leave to supply in the following words, to follow immediately after the mention of Lieutenant Colonel McIntosh as "being twice severely wounded:"

The command of the 5th infantry then devolved upon Major Staniford, who conducted it with zeal and ability to the close of the engagement.

I need hardly say that this omission was entirely accidental; and I beg, as an act of justice to Major Staniford, as well as myself, that the above paragraph may be inserted in the original report, and may receive the same publicity.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Maj. Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 60.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 11, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully report that several of the steamboats procured for the navigation of the Rio Grande have arrived since my last communication to your office, and that with their aid a forward movement to Camargo has been commenced. The 7th infantry, with two pieces of artillery and a company of Texan rangers, is now, or will very soon be, in position at that place, and a depot of supplies established. General Smith, with his brigade, (four regiments Louisiana volunteers,) has taken a position on the river between this point and Reinosa, which town is still held by the battalion of the 1st infantry, under Lieutenant Colonel Wilson. There has been an extraordinary rise in the river, and our boats, most of which have little power, find it difficult to stem the current ascending. I nevertheless hope soon to transfer the greater part of the regular force to Camargo, with such regiments of volunteers as I may determine to move forward. Any delay in our movement is the less important, as the whole country, from ten days' incessant storm and rain, is now under water and impracticable.

The court for the trial of Colonel Whistler and Captain Thornton meets to-day. Lieutenant Colonel Whiting and Major Craig are necessarily absent from head-quarters on duties connected with their departments; and to have waited for the arrival of Colonel Gates would have prevented the session of the court altogether, as in a few days the army will commence its movement.

No mail has been received from the United States since the 1st instant. Newspapers three days later than the last letter dates have reached us by way of Mobile, bringing out the news by the "Caledonia" relative to the proffered mediation of England. I am looking with great anxiety for the next advices.

I have no authentic intelligence from the interior.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Brevet Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

MATAMORAS, MEXICO, July 16, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of commissions from your office of brevet major general and of major general of the army of the United States, and to signify my acceptance of them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 61.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, July 16, 1846.

SIR: Agreeably to your instructions of June 20th, just received, I respectfully enclose such returns, for the month of June, of the volunteer regiments and battalions, as have been received at my head-quarters. The returns of the regiments of General Smith's brigade, and of the two regiments of Texas mounted riflemen, have not been received. It is believed that the returns now forwarded embrace all the other regiments that had arrived prior to the 1st of July. No return of Lieutenant Colonel Watson's battalion is furnished, as it is supposed you already have one in your office. There are slight imperfections in some of these returns, which could not well be corrected, owing to the distance of the corps from head-quarters. As soon as the missing returns shall be received, I will furnish a consolidated return of the volunteer force for June.

I may remark that all the volunteers embraced in the returns here enclosed were mustered for six months, except the Tennessee regiment, which belongs to the twelve months' quota.

I have received one package containing fifty blank returns, intended for regiments, brigades, or divisions; also a package of blank department returns.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obediet servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 63.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, July 22, 1846.

SIR: I have respectfully to report that the city of Camargo was occupied, without opposition, on the 14th instant, by a detachment of two companies of the 7th infantry, under command of Captain Miles. The captain was joined the next day by the remainder of the regiment, two pieces of artillery, and a company of irregular cavalry. He has since been reinforced by the 5th infantry, and the first brigade of infantry under General Worth is now in route to Camargo, except a guard of two companies left to escort the train by land—the main body proceeding by water. The third brigade will immediately follow, and in a few days all the active regular force will be at Camargo, or in motion thither. I am unavoidably compelled, much to my regret, to leave several companies of the artillery regiments to guard the different depots in my rear.

We have now several steamboats in the river, and the business of sending up troops and supplies is urged as much as possible. I find the difficulty of throwing supplies up the river to be very great, in consequence of the rapidity of the current, and the entire absence of dry steamboat fuel. But every effort will be employed to overcome these difficulties, and I have no doubt that we shall be able to keep up a depot at Carmargo quite sufficient for any operations from that point.

As yet the land route to Camargo is impassable for wagons, owing to the recent rains and freshets. As soon as it shall become practicable, the field artillery and train of the army will move forward to Camargo.

As soon as I can complete the necessary arrangements for throwing forward the volunteer troops to Camargo, I propose to establish my head-quarters at that point, and organize, without delay, a marching column to move to Monterey.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

[No. 67.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 28, 1846.

Sir: Your communication of the 8th instant, relative to the case of * * * has been duly received. In conformity with its instructions, * * * has been released from arrest, and the papers connected with the case are herewith returned.

I beg leave to remark, in regard to this case, that, owing to the active service of the army soon after the charges were received, and the distance of important witnesses afterwards, no proceedings had been instituted * * * , nor was he placed in arrest until further delinquencies of the same character were reported against him, late in June, when the commanding officer of his regiment deemed it his duty to arrest him, and report the case to general head-quarters. Although the decision of the Secretary seems to refer only to the original charges, I have still deemed it best to release * * * , leaving it for the department to determine whether further proceedings shall be instituted against him.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 68.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Matamoras, July 29, 1846.

Sir: On the 26th of April last, after hostilities had commenced in this quarter, I addressed a communication to Brevet Colonel Harney, commanding at San Antonio, saying that at such a distance I could not give him precise instructions, but authorizing him, if the safety of the country required it, to call upon the governor for an additional military force. I gave this discretionary power with reluctance, but felt it necessary in the existing state of things. Colonel Harney accordingly called out seven companies, as I have already reported to your office.

On the 6th of July, he reports that he has concentrated at San Antonio three companies of the 3d dragoons, seven companies of mounted volunteers, and one company of Delaware Indians—making a total force of about 600 men, with which he intended to march to the Presidio, Rio Grande, on the 15th July.

I need not say that this concentration of force at San Antonio, and intended employment of it, were not only wholly without my authority, but in direct opposition to my views and wishes. They were likely to cause the utmost embarrassment to General Wool, and delay, if not defeat, the expedition with which he has been entrusted. At the date of his communication, Colonel Harney was in receipt of the general orders directing a heavy force upon San Antonio.

I fortunately learned, on the day his report was received, (28th instant,) that he could not move for some time for want of supplies, and availed myself of an opportunity, direct to San Antonio, to send him the most peremptory orders to stop his projected movement, and if already in route, to return forthwith to San Antonio, and await the arrival of General Wool; to arrest any measures in progress to organize an additional force on his requisition; and to employ Indians under no circumstances, except as guides or spies.

How far an officer so regardless of orders and the known intentions of the government may be safely entrusted with an important independent command, may be well inferred from this example.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 69.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, Mexico, July 30, 1846.

SIR: You will receive herewith my "orders," No. 93, of this date, regulating the forward movement of a portion of the volunteer force. All the foot regiments of 12-months volunteers intended for this quarter, as indicated in your communication of June 30, have arrived, except those from Illinois and Missouri, and possibly a few rear companies of other States. I propose eventually to throw all this force, except two or three regiments to protect the depots in rear, forward to Camargo, or its vicinity, where I hope healthy camps may be established. The difficulties of transportation and subsistence, before reported, will prevent me from taking in the direction of Monterey more than a small portion of the 12-months volunteers. If it be found that a large force can be subsisted at that point, or at Saltillo, the corps in rear may be brought forward.

The volunteers from Louisiana and other States to be discharged under recent instructions are now embarking as rapidly as possible for New Orleans. It is hoped that in a very few days the last of them will sail.

I have to acknowledge the communication of the Secretary of War dated July 6th; from your office of June 27th, July 2d, 7th, and 9th; copies of your letters to Generals Wool, Patterson, and Butler, of July 3d and 16th; "general orders" Nos. 25, 26, 27, and 29, and "special orders" 57 to 61, inclusive.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 71.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, August 1, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully enclose herewith the proceedings of a general court martial recently convened at this place for the trial of * * * * * *, 3d infantry.

I also enclose lists of the enlisted men killed and wounded in the affairs of the 8th and 9th of May, and in the defence of Fort Brown; prepared in conformity with your instructions of June 27th. This list is chiefly derived from the regimental returns, the only accessible source of information in most cases. The deficiencies in these returns have been supplied in regard to the corps that had not marched for Camargo; other defects, such as omission of first names, may be supplied from the muster-rolls on file in your office. I have deemed it better to forward the list, imperfect as it is, than to hold it back until it could be completed.

The list of commissioned officers present in the several engagements, called for by the Secretary of War, will be furnished as soon as practicable

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 72.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Matamoras, August 3, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully enclose statements of the commissioned officers present in the affairs of the 8th and 9th of May, and during the bombardment of Fort Brown, prepared agreeably to your instructions of July 11th.

I am in hourly expectation of leaving for Camargo. The regular troops, except the cavalry and two or three batteries of artillery, will have left by to-morrow, to be followed immediately by a large portion of the volunteer force.

I regret to report that the Camanche Indians have been committing extensive depredations upon the Mexican inhabitants near Mier. This circumstance, taken in connexion with our recent treaty with those Indians, is calculated to give much embarrassment; but I deem it a paramount duty to protect the Mexican citizens from their ravages, and to apprehend and punish them if possible. Active measures have already been taken by Gen. Worth to give security to Mier and the vicinity. Should we exhibit any lukewarmness in this matter, the cry would instantly be raised that the Indians are our allies—an impression already carefully disseminated by the Mexican chiefs.

Captain Gillespie, with his company of rangers, recently marched from San Antonio to the Rio Grande, passing through Laredo, Revilla or Guerrerro, and Mier, to Camargo. He represents all quiet in that quarter, and the inhabitants well disposed towards us. I trust the irruption of the Camanches may not have an effect to diminish this feeling.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major General U. S. A., commanding.

W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

[No. 73.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, August 10, 1846.

SIR: I have to report my arrival at this place on the evening of the 8th instant. As previously reported, a large proportion of the regular troops is now concentrated here. The battalions, though most of them very weak, are in good order and ready for the field. The means of transportation are rapidly accumulating, and I hope to commence a movement on Monterey at latest by the 1st of September, with about six thousand troops, of which, say 3,200 regulars. A larger force cannot with present means be transported or subsisted on the route.

A reconnoissance has been made up the valley of the San Juan as far as China, a distance of 62 miles, where an irregular force was quartered of 115 men, under a noted leader, Seguin. Captain McCulloch, who conducted the reconnoissance with about 50 men of his company, made his dispositions to attack Seguin, but the latter became apprised of his approach, and promptly took to flight. This expedition has given valuable information touching one of the routes to Monterey. I shall despatch another on the Mier route, before determining which to follow in the march.

Captain Vinton's company is temporarily at Mier, to give security to the inhabitants, who have recently suffered from the depredations of the Indians. The people seem well disposed at Mier, and at Guerrerro, a town higher up.

From Monterey I acquire no positive information, nor do I expect to obtain it until we advance and occupy the country.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 74.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, August 14, 1846.

SIR: From the copy of your letter to Captain T. Taylor, 1st artillery, dated July 21st, I perceive that measures have been taken at general head-quarters to provide a battery for his company. On the 21st of June, I communicated to your office, in an endorsement upon a report of Captain Duncan, that I had the means, through Captain Taylor's company, of manning a fourth battery at once; and in my "orders" No. 90, of July 20th, directions were given for that purpose. The company has already received its battery, and is daily receiving its horses. It has been filled up by transfers and with recruits, and will take the field before Captain Taylor can possibly join it. His absence at this time is a matter of regret; but I have found it essential to push the preparation of the company, as its services will be greatly needed with its proper arm.

I have to acknowledge the communication of the Secretary of War dated July 27th; your communication of July 21st, with copies of your letters to certain recently appointed surgeons and assistant surgeons, and to Major Plympton, 2d infantry, and Captain Taylor, 1st artillery; memoranda of divisions and brigades of volunteers.

The commission of Surgeon McPhail has been received, and is returned by this mail, Surgeon McPhail having died at Matamoras on the 13th of July. The other commissions are not yet received, but will be duly distributed when they come to hand.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 75.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camargo, August 15, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose a copy of the instructions this day transmitted to General Wool for the conduct of his operations against Chihuahua. It will be seen, that owing to my distance from his rendezvous, and the limited knowledge of the country through which he must pass, I have been able to give only very general instructions—leaving all points of detail, and many more important ones, to his own judgment and decision, in which I need hardly say I have full confidence.

After the main column, under my immediate orders, shall reach Saltillo, the occupation of Chihuahua will be attended with no difficulty except that of procuring transportation and subsistence, in regard to which I apprehend General Wool will meet with considerable embarrassment. I have, therefore, advised him to move with as small a force as consistent with safety, in order the better to insure a sufficiency of supplies.

I find it next to impossible to gain accurate information respecting the country, except by actual examination.

One of the routes to Monterey has been examined as far as China, and another is now under reconnoissance to Seralvo. At one of these points it will probably be found expedient to establish a temporary depot, to facilitate our forward movement.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, August 14, 1846.

SIR: On the 2d of this month I had the honor to address you a communication by direction of the commanding general, preliminary to further instructions, and touching particularly upon the recent proceedings of Colonel Harney, in calling out volunteers and projecting a march towards the Rio Grande. The opportunity, however, failed, by which we hoped to forward that communication; and, as it now becomes necessary to employ a special express, the general avails himself of the occasion to communicate his final orders, so far as it can be done.

The instructions which the commanding general has received from general head-quarters, as well as those to yourself of June 11, bring your movement under his orders, and perhaps contemplate detailed instructions from him in reference to it. These it is quite impossible to give, for reasons mentioned in my communication of August 2. The commanding general therefore can only direct that, after receiving and organizing your force, you march on the city of Chihuahua with such portion of it as can be transported and subsisted. From the best information that can be obtained here, it is not supposed that more than a moderate portion of your command —say the regular troops of all arms, one regiment of volunteer horse, and possibly one of volunteer foot—can be sustained between San Antonio and Chihuahua. The forward movement of the main body to Saltillo, which will precede your march, will render it entirely safe to penetrate with the above force to Chihuahua by the Monclova route, particularly as the people of Coahuila are understood to be well disposed towards us.

In regard to the route, it is presumed that you may obtain at San Antonio satisfactory information. I enclose a memorandum embracing all the information we have at head-quarters on this subject. It is taken for granted that you will find the Presidio and Monclova route the most eligible, if not indeed the only practicable one.

On the supposition that Monclova will be a point in your route, the commanding general desires that particular pains be taken to conciliate the people on the route, and generally in the State of Coahuila, of which Monclova is a principal town. The people of that State are understood to be of the federal party, opposed to Paredes, and so far favorable to us. It is not doubted that their neutrality, if not co-operation, may be secured by judicious management. I respectfully enclose a number of proclamations in the Spanish language, which the general desires you to distribute after entering Mexico, in such manner as you may deem most expedient.

It is the wish of the government that you should occupy the city of Chihuahua, and such other points in the State of that name as may be necessary to a thorough occupation of the country. "The Paso del Norte" will probably be one of these points. Another will be found in the direction of Parras or Saltillo; but the general cannot at this distance, and in advance of your operations, pretend to give definitive instructions on this subject.

In regard to supplies, beyond what you may transport from San Antonio, your command will be obliged to depend upon the country which it occupies. It is impracticable at this time to throw supplies up the Rio Grande above this point. It is believed that sufficient supplies of beef and mutton may be obtained on the entire route from Presidio; but no pork. Flour may be obtained at Monclova, or in that vicinity, to the extent perhaps of a thousand barrels. Beyond that amount the general has no assurance of supply. In case of a deficiency of flour the troops must depend upon corn, the breadstuff principally used in this part of Mexico. Hand-mills are almost indispensable for the preparation of corn, and the general advises that you take immediate measures to procure a sufficient number of them.

The proper dispositions for the defence and protection of the Indian frontier of Texas are necessarily left to your direction, and the commanding general desires you to make the suitable arrangements for that object. It is not supposed that it will be necessary to retain any of the companies called out by Colonel Harney. After designating the corps to march in the direction of Chihuahua, and such detachments as may be necessary for the protection of the border settlements, the remainder, I am directed to say, had better fall back on Port Lavacca, where they can be easily subsisted and held in readiness for any service that may be ordered at Tampico or other points on the coast.

The regular troops, except the cavalry and three batteries of artillery, are now concentrated at this point. The 12-months volunteers are daily arriving, and the general hopes to move on Monterey by the 1st September, with a force say of 6,000 men. It is quite possible that our advance to that point may be resisted; but the general anticipates no serious difficulty in reaching and occupying Saltillo, say by the 1st of October.

Please avail yourself of the return of the express to forward any communications you may have for head-quarters.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Brigadier General J. E. Wool,
Commanding, &c., San Antonio de Bexar.

[No. 76.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camargo, August 19, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to report that the 1st brigade of regular troops, under the immediate command of Brigadier General Worth, has taken up the line of march for Seralvo, a point on the Monterey route, say 70 miles in advance of this position, where I have taken measures to establish a depot of supplies for the consumption of the army in route. This brigade will be followed as rapidly as practicable by the remaining regular corps and such regiments of volunteers as I may be able to throw forward.

The regular cavalry and remaining batteries of artillery will join me in a few days. In the mean time, the volunteer regiments are gradually arriving and taking up a position at this place. Two brigades (Indiana, and Illinois and Missouri) remain in rear, near the mouth of the river, until further orders. One regiment (3d Ohio) has been halted at Matamoras for the better protection of that important point.

Brigadier Generals Pillow, Hamer, Lane, and Quitman have reported to me, and are now on duty with their proper brigades. Major General Butler and Brigadier Generals Marshall and Shields have, I understand, arrived at Brazos Santiago, but have not yet reported. Of the numerous quartermasters and commissaries, but two or three have yet reported. Their services are greatly needed with the army.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 78.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camargo, August 25, 1846.

Sir: I have to report that the intelligence has reached us by several sources from the interior, and is believed to be authentic, that the government of Paredes has been overthrown, and that Gomez y Farias is now at the head of affairs. It is reported that Paredes was on his march to this frontier with 8,000 men; that while at San Luis Potosi he heard of revolutionary movements at Valadolid and Queretaro; that he returned with his troops, and on reaching Queretaro, where the revolutionary troops seem to have assembled, his own not only refused to fight, but themselves declared against him and for federation, and even made him prisoner. Many of these details may be inaccurate, but I am inclined to believe the material fact, that Paredes has been deposed.

This intelligence is brought from Monterey by a confidential messenger, who says there are at Monterey not more than 2,000 or 2,500 regular troops, the remnant of those who fled from Matamoras, and a considerable number of militia of the country gathered together, many of them forcibly. Some attempt has been made to fortify the city by the erection of batteries which command the approaches. He heard of no reinforcements in rear.

The 2d brigade, 624 strong, marched this morning, and will occupy a point on the route within supporting distance of the 1st brigade. The remaining brigades, whether of regulars or volunteers, will be thrown forward in like manner, in echelon, along the route. I hope to march with the rear column say by the 5th proximo. The means of transportation come in slowly, and many inevitable delays are encountered.

The regular force is now entirely brought forward except the 2d infantry, of which no portion has been reported. I am extremely anxious to secure the services of this regiment, and hope that a portion of it at least may join before I march.

You will perceive from my orders that the volunteer-force has been duly organized. The general officers have all arrived except Major General Patterson. A majority of the regiment of Texas foot, under Colonel Johnston, having expressed a disinclination to serve for another term of three months, I have ordered their discharge, and they have already been mustered out of service. Colonel Wood's regiment of Texas horse is now encamped in this neighborhood, and its companies are rendering useful service as escorts, &c. Col. Hay's regiment is on its march from Matamoras, having taken San Fernando in its route, which passed through a part of the country not before examined.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

[No. 79.]

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camargo, August 26, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose, herewith, a communication (No. 1) addressed to me by ———, a citizen of Victoria, and my reply to it (No. 2.) These translations were made or obtained by ———.

I do not know the full extent or character of the movement proposed in these papers, or whether it would be calculated at this time either to forward our own views or benefit its projectors. I have accordingly given but little encouragement to ———, who has visited me at this place. On reaching Monterey I can tell better how far it may be advisable to encourage such projects. My instructions from the Department of War do not authorize me to promise any protection to independent States after the conclusion of a peace, and it is very doubtful whether a movement will be made without such pledge. I respectfully submit the case to the department, to the end that additional instructions, if necessary, may be given to me.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. Army, commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 80.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, August 28, 1846.

SIR: No general depot of clothing has yet been established for this army. The "clothing depot," so called, is simply a place of deposite for clothing, &c., drawn on regimental estimates, and not suited for promiscuous issue. We need very much a depot similar to those established in Florida, the officer in charge of which shall make his requisitions direct for clothing and camp equipage, and issue to all officers who may require such articles. Only the fatigue or undress clothing would be necessary, with a large proportion of boots. I beg that the subject may be submitted to the proper authorities, and if my suggestion be approved, that the quartermaster general may be at once instructed to establish a proper clothing depot, say at Point Isabel.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. Army, commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 84.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, September 2, 1846.

SIR: I feel it my duty to call your attention to the great scarcity of medical officers with this army. While nearly two-thirds of the regular army is now serving on this frontier, we have not more than two-sevenths of the medical staff—a manifest disproportion, to the great injury of the service.

Our general hospitals at St. Joseph's island, Point Isabel, and Matamoras, are scantily supplied with officers, and yet we take the field with no more than one medical officer to a battalion, and in eight battalions of regular troops but one full surgeon. This allowance is quite too small for the field, and the public interest demands that it be at once increased; but it is now too late to do so for this campaign.

The great deficiency of medical officers brings with it the obvious necessity of hiring less competent physicians, and often at higher rates. There are many surgeons and assistant surgeons at garrisons on the seaboard, and elsewhere, whose places might be filled at moderate cost, while their valuable services might be secured where most needed in the field during active operations.

Under the circumstance above stated, I regret that I cannot possibly spare the services of Assistant Surgeon Wells at this juncture. Until a considerable increase shall be made in the strength of the medical staff serving with this army, I should deem myself culpable to permit any medical officer to leave who is able to perform duty.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Remarks of the surgeon general on the letter of Surgeon P. H. Craig, medical director, army of occupation, asking for a leave of absence, with the endorsement of General Taylor thereon, to the following effect:

"Owing to the scarcity of medical officers, I find it impossible to dispense with the services of Surgeon Craig at this time, and therefore forward his application, with the urgent recommendation that additional medical officers be sent to this army to admit of the relief of Surgeon Craig and others, who are more or less broken down by long and arduous service in the field," &c.

[A copy of these remarks was sent to General Taylor on the 18th September, 1846, by the adjutant general of the army.]

SURGEON GENERAL'S OFFICE,
July 29, 1846.

Upon the subject of the scarcity of medical officers in the field, I have no hesitation in expressing the belief that the regular troops employed against Mexico have comparatively as large a number of medical officers as any other army in the world.

The laws of the land in former times, as on a late occasion, awarded two medical officers to a full regiment of about 750 men, or one medical officer to 375 men; and this proportion of medical officers to a consolidated regiment or body of 750 men has been found, from long experience, sufficient to meet the requirements of the service.

From the monthly returns in the adjutant general's office for May last, (the latest report received,) it appears that on the 30th of that month the strength of the army of occupation in officers and men was 3,938; and from the returns in the surgeon general's office it is found that there were at that time 24 medical officers serving with that army.

Now, if we divide 3,938 men, the strength of the command, by 24, the number of medical officers present with it, the result will give one medical officer to every 164 men, instead of 375, or 100 per cent. more of medical officers than is contemplated by the laws providing for the organization of military corps.

If we give twelve medical officers to the 3,938 men in the field, which is the full complement recognised by law, we shall have, after furnishing one for medical director, two for a general hospital, and one to perform the duty of medical purveyor, still eight officers, or one-third of the whole number, in reserve to meet the contingencies of the service, the incidents and accidents growing out of active operations in the field.

Since the last return from the army, one medical officer has gone into the field with a body of recruits; two are now en route with detachments of the 2d infantry towards the theatre of action, and one is about to sail in a day or two with another portion of the 2d infantry for the seat of war.

In this way—that is, by sending a medical officer with each detachment of troops which goes into the field—the standard number of medical officers (originally large) will be kept up with the army of occupation.

To do more than this would be making a sacrifice of military propriety and the public interest, to save a little labor to some of the medical officers, who, if the duties are equitably distributed among them, I am free to say, from analogy and from experience, have not more to do than the government has a right to claim of them.

I know what a man can perform and ought to do in time of need. I have myself acted as medical director, medical purveyor, and attending surgeon to a body of troops, at one and the same time; nay more, I have frequently prescribed for 250 men a day; and I have a right to expect that those under my control will perform something like the same amount of duty.

As to the "exposure and privations incident to a camp life making serious inroads upon a man's health," or his being "broken down by long and arduous service in the field," of less than one year's duration, I can scarcely entertain the idea.

Why, I never would permit myself to be sick when honor and duty claimed from me active exertion; but whether sick or well, I was never known to quit the field until called off by authority. It is very easy for an officer, who is called upon to do a little more duty than the very little service he has been accustomed to perform at a small military post, to speak in round numbers of the arduous duties, the privations and sufferings, he has experienced in the field, when a statistical examination into the matter will prove that his grievances are all imaginary—mere trifles, as light as air.

It may be proper to remark, in connexion with this subject, that there are other armies or bodies of troops operating in the field, besides the army of occupation, to be provided with medical officers; and as they are further removed, being more in the interior of the country, from the facilities of obtaining reinforcements or relief in the way of medical aid in the event of a fatality, it is perhaps proper that they should be furnished in the outset with a comparatively larger medical corps; also, there are some important and indispensable duties to be performed by medical officers of the army other than those of prescribing for the sick and administering to the wounded; and for cases of this kind, provision must be made.

Again, we must have some officers in reserve to meet contingencies nearer at home; such as may arise from the hasty assemblage of recuits for transportation to the theatre of war, the getting up of new expeditions, &c., &c.; each case requiring the employment of medical officers of the army, and therefore constituting a good reason for not sending all the medical officers at once into the field.

I have been thus particular in my statements, to show that, in the fulfilment of my obligations generally to the goverment, involving a due regard to the public interests as well as to the rights and claims of individuals, I have not been unmindful of the legitimate claims and wants of the army of occupation.

I have given all in the way of medical aid which military propriety, the customs of the service in like cases, and the actual wants of the army, seemed to require; but if they desire more medical officers they shall have them, with myself to boot, if acceptable, and I am borne out in the measure by the government.

Far be it from me to wish to withhold aught that will contribute to the comfort, the convenience, or to the gratification of either one of those gallant souls who so valiantly fought and so signally triumphed on the battle fields of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

TH. LAWSON,
Surgeon General.

Brig. General R. Jones,
Adjutant General U. S. A.

]No. 85.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camargo, September 3, 1846.

Sir: My "orders" Nos. 98, 100, and 108, will have advised you of the organization which I have given to the regular and volunteer forces now taking the field. For reasons already set forth I have found it impossible to throw forward more than a small portion of the volunteers, and I deem it best to select that portion from as many States as possible, organizing a temporary division for the campaign. If the state of supplies in the country will be found to warrant it, I shall bring forward other portions of the volunteers.

REGULARS.

Cavalry.—2d dragoons.
Ridgely's battery.

4*th brigade.*—1st infantry.
Baltimore battalion.

2*d Division*—Brigadier General Worth.

1*st brigade.*—Duncan's battery.
Artillery battalion.
8th infantry.
2*d brigade.*—Taylor's battery.
5th infantry.
7th infantry.
Blanchard's company of Louisiana volunteers.

VOLUNTEERS.

Field Division, Major Genenal Butler.	1st brigade, Brig. Gen. Hamer.	1st Kentucky reg't. 1st Ohio regiment.
	2d brigade, Brig. Gen. Quitman.	1st Tennessee reg't. Mississippi reg't.
Texas Division, Major Gen. Henderson.		1st regiment Texas mounted volunteers. 2d do do do do.

Of the last division it is quite uncertain how many will go forward; with it we shall have a force of 6,000 men. Had Riley joined me, the regular force would have amounted to 3,300 men. I feel the absence of his regiment, but have replaced it by the Maryland and Washington battalion.

The 2d division, except Taylor's battery, is now thrown forward to Seralvo and Puntiaguda; the 1st division, except the cavalry and artillery, is en route for the latter point. Major General Butler's division will march, say, by the 6th instant; I shall move with the head-quarters on the 5th, and pass rapidly forward to Seralvo, the advanced depot of the army.

I respectfully enclose a map of the valley of the San Juan, exhibiting the routes to Monterey and Saltillo. The usual travelled route from this place to Monterey crosses the river at Paso de las Culabazas, and passes through Manteca and Caiderita. The difficulty of crossing the San Juan when swollen, and some other considerations, have induced me to prefer the route by Mier and Seralvo. At the latter place, an admirable healthy position, a large depot of supplies has been established, and I propose there to concentrate the whole or a greater portion of the marching force. The route from that point to Monterey, whether by Caiderita or Marin, will be determined hereafter. Spy companies are now sent forward to make the necessary examinations in front.

We have no very recent intelligence from the interior, nor have I yet satisfactory means of judging whether our occupation of Monterey and Saltillo will be disputed. A confidential messenger is now sent forward, and I hope to communicate his intelligence before we march.

Despatches this day received from San Antonia represents that Brigadier General Wool, on account of delays resulting from Col. Harney's movement and other causes, would not be able to move before the last of this month. On the 23d of August it seems that no portion of the general's command had arrived. The Illinois and Arkansas troops were daily expected. Colonel Harney had crossed the river with difficulty at Presidio Rio Grande; and while halted there received my orders to return to San Antonio, which I learn from General Wool he had obeyed. General Wool had taken measures to arrest that officer. He had encountered no opposition at Presidio, and seems to have been well received by the authorities and inhabitants.

Major General Patterson, daily expected here, will have command of all the troops left in my rear, and will be specially charged with providing for the sick. I have used every effort to extend the hospital accommodations and the medical force, but the service is suffering greatly in this latter particular. There has been great sickness and mortality in some of the volunteer regiments; their surgeons are not always men of education and experience, and our army surgeons are too few even for their appropriate duties. Great numbers of volunteer sick are taken into the several general hospitals, and no exertion is spared to ameliorate their condition.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 86.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camargo, September 4, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully enclose herewith a report this day received from Brigadier General Worth, conveying recent intelligence from the interior of an important character, and transmitting a proclamation of Ampudia, the new general-in-chief.

I shall lose no time in moving forward with the marching columns, and bringing the matter to an issue of arms, if the enemy attempt to hold his position.

I am gratified to report that Major General Patterson has arrived in time to assume the command of all the troops left in rear.

I respectfully enclose a return of the army of occupation for July. It is necessarily defective in some particulars, but it is impossible, under existing circumstances, to furnish one more satisfactory. As reported in my last, I shall march with the head-quarters to-morrow.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major Gen. U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SECOND DIVISION,
Ceralvo, September 3, 1846.

SIR: I have to acknowledge you letter of the 28th (2d of that date) by ———.

My messenger returned last evening from Monterey. Herewith you will receive Ampudia's bulletin: it is ingenious, and well calculated through the clergy, to operate upon the fears of the ignorant Mexicans. Santa Ana had reached the capital and taken the reins of government, as general-in-chief. It is understood at Monterey that he proposes to place himself at the head of the army of the east. Two thousand troops of the line arrived on Monday with four pieces of field artillery: ten guns had previously been placed in position, and efforts are making to remount some old discarded pieces. Previous to the arrival of the troops from Potosi, desertions were numerous from Arista's men, after hearing of our approach: severe measures are taken with those apprehended or suspected. There is no cavalry at Monterey—supposed to be at Caiderita. Canales is at Marin, with six hundred, having an advance between that and Papayallos. Many families are leaving the city, which would appear to indicate a design to stand siege. When the general arrives I shall be able to lay before him a tolerable accurate map or plan of the city, showing with some details the approaches and projected points of resistance. Lieutenant Meade has the subject in hand.

The weather has been for several days very unpropitious, and will, I fear, have impeded the trains; but a few days fair weather will restore the roads to good condition..

We have secured some five hundred bushels of corn, and might have had as many thousand with funds.

I have sent a trusty agent, ———, to Sabinos, in which neighbourhood he lives, and where he does not doubt being able to contract, for delivery here in fifteen days, for some five or six thousand bushels. To secure the delivery, however, it will be necessary to advance a cavalry command on that road, as otherwise the enemy may oppose obstacles. Nothing has arrived from the depot since my last report. Lieutenant Colonel Garland will, I suppose, reach Pentiaquo to-day at furthest.

On Monday last one hundred and three mules started for Camargo, rendered on my requisition upon the authorities of Aqualiqus and Pentiuguado; to-morrow or next day a like or greater number will start.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. J. WORTH,
Brevet Brigadier General.

To Major Bliss, Assist. Adjt. General,
Head-quarters, Army of Occupation, Camargo.

GENERAL-IN-CHIEF OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH.

Considering that the hour has come for taking energetic and timely measures to free the department of the east from Anglo-American rapacity, and that by the laws of nations and of war every traitor to his country or spy of the enemy should suffer the penalty of death—and, finally, considering that it is my indispensable duty to oppose a barrier to the torrent of evils caused by the contraband traffic which has been carried on in the most barefaced manner with the usurpers of our sacred territory, in virtue of the powers confided upon me by existing laws I have determined to decree:

1st. Every native or foreigner who, of his own accord, shall give aid directly or indirectly to the enemy, shall be shot.

2d. Those who, after the publication of this decree, shall continue contraband traffic with the enemy shall suffer the penalty stated in the preceding article.

3d. The authorities of every branch of the public administration will take care, strictly and under the most rigid responsibility, that these provisions be punctually fulfilled.

4th. This decree is intended to produce action among the people, since all citizens have the right and are under obligation to denounce any infraction of it, and to apprehend the criminals in order to deliver them up to the judicial authority; and, that it may reach the notice of all, and that none may allege ignorance, I order it to be published and circulated to all to whom it belongs to see that it be faithfully executed.

Given at head-quarters, Monterey, 31st of August, 1846.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

[No. 87.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Servalo, September 12, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to report my arrival at this place on the 9th inst. with the first division, under command of Brigadier General Twiggs. The regular troops are now concentrated here with one brigade of Major General Butler's volunteer division. The other brigade will arrive to-morrow morning, when I shall commence the forward movement towards Monterey. It is three marches hence to Marin, distant 24 miles from Monterey. At that point, if the enemy show a disposition to oppose our advance, I propose to bring the columns together. To the Texas mounted troops, under Governor Henderson, I have given the route by China and Caiderita, and expect them to join me at Marin.

The enemy is reported in considerable force at Monterey, and may give us battle there. It is also reported that Santa Anna is on his way from the interior, and expected in a few days.

The health of the army is much improved since approaching the mountains, and it is generally in excellent condition for service.

Agreeably to your special instructions of August 13, Brigadier General Shields has been ordered to report to Brigadier General Wool, for service with the column against Chihuahua.

I have to acknowledge copies of your communications to Col. Harney, of July 18 and August 14; to Colonel Clarke, of August 14; the letter of Brigadier General Gibson to your office, dated August 6, and of Mr. George E. Blake, of August 17; "general orders" Nos. 35, 36, and 37, and special orders Nos. 71 and 77, inclusive.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 88.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Marin, 24 miles N. E. of Monterey, Sept. 17, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to report my arrival at this place on the 15th inst. with the 1st division, under Brigadier General Twiggs. The 2d division, under Brigadier General Worth, arrived yesterday, and that of volunteers, under Major General Butler, to-day. I am looking impatiently for the arrival of the Texan cavalry from China. It should be here to-day; but I shall not delay my march in case it does not arrive. To-morrow I propose to move forward to Monterey.

From Papayallos to this place our advance was continually in sight of the Mexican pickets, but drove them in without combat, except at Ramas, where a trifling affair took place betweem McCulloch's rangers and the enemy's rear guard. One or two Mexicans were wounded, with no damage on our side. A cavalry force, perhaps 1,000 strong, under General Torrejon, has been constantly in our front, driving off the citizens and committing many outrages upon persons and property.

I cannot communicate any authentic intelligence from the interior. Vague reports of Santa Anna's advance, with reinforcements, reach us from time to time. It is even yet doubtful whether Ampudia will attempt to hold Monterey. A few days will now determine. His regular force is small—say 3,000; eked out perhaps to 6,000 by volunteers—many of them forced.

I am gratified to state that our own force is in excellent condition, fully prepared for the most active and arduous service.

I respectfully enclose a proclamation of Ampudia and a circular to his commanders, which have been dropped in numbers on the road. It will be seen that the enemy has not forgotten his former arts.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

GENERAL-IN-CHIEF OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH.

Circular.

The annexed publication, in English, has for object to make known to individuals of the troops of the United States, who, as I am informed, wish to abandon their colors, the good disposition with which they will be received and admitted under the auspices of the Mexican flag, whose only desire is to resist the unjust aggression of the neighboring republic, and to receive with open arms those who may approach it as friends: wherefore I give you notice, that all individuals from the ranks of the enemy, who may present themselves with this intention clearly manifested, shall be succored and conducted to the interior of the republic by proper routes; but those who may present themselves in hostile attitude, or who, under pacific appearances, shall conceal sinister designs against the sacred rights of the nation, you will cause to be attacked and harrassed in every way; and in case the conduct of those who may present themselves shall appear to be doubtful, or it should not be possible to ascertain whether their intent be good or evil, you will send them under guard to these head-quarters; and should this not be practicable, under the diverse circumstances of war, you will cause them to be marched, in the same manner, to some point in the interior out of reach of the enemy. All which I communicate for your punctual and exact compliance, holding you responsible for the slightest omission in relation to all the points contained in the present order, the high importance of which is well known.

God and liberty! September 5, 1846.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

ARMY OF THE NORTH.

General-in-chief, Head-quarters,
Monterey, September 15, 1846.

It is well known that the war carried on to the republic of Mexico by the government of the United States of America is unjust, illegal, and anti-Christian, for which reason no one ought to contribute to it.

The federal government having been happily re-established, a large number of battalions of the national guard in the States of Coahuila, St. Louis Potosi, Guanajuato, Zacatecas, Queretaro, and others, are ready to be on the field and fight for our independence.

Acting according to the dictates of honor, and in compliance with what my country expects from me, in the name of my government I offer to all individuals, that will lay down their arms and separate themselves from the American army, seeking protection, they will be well received and treated in all the plantations, farms, or towns where they will first arrive, and assisted for their march to the interior of the republic by all the authorities on the road, as has been done with all those that have passed over to us.

To all those that wish to serve in the Mexican army their offices will be conserved and guarantied.

PEDRO DE AMPUDIA.

[No. 92.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, September 28, 1846.

SIR: I have to report that the last brigade of Mexican troops marched for Saltillo this morning. The town is now fully in our possession, and is occupied for the present by the 2d division. The public stores turned over to us under the capitulation have consisted mainly of ordnance and ordnance stores. The guns captured and surrendered to us amount to about thirty-five serviceable pieces of various calibres, and the amount of ammunition and other stores is very great. Proper measures are taken to secure these stores, and they will be rendered available for our own purposes as far as possible.

Suitable buildings have been taken in town for the care of our wounded, who are now mostly removed thither and rendered comfortable. The troops, except those necessarily quartered in the city, will be disposed in good camps in the neighborhood.

The Texas troops have expressed a desire to return home, and I shall soon give the necessary orders for their discharge and payment. They will be replaced in time for operations by the Kentucky and Tennessee regiments of horse, now under orders to report to me.

I am advised that a portion at least of the 2d infantry has arrived on the Rio Grande. This reinforcement will be most seasonable, after our recent losses; and I hope it will soon be followed by a good number of recruits, for our companies are greatly reduced.

Brigadier General Wool reports, under the date of September 15, that his advance, 1,200 strong, would march about the 22d instant, to be followed by the same number as soon as supplies and transportation could be provided. I shall probably find it expedient to instruct General Wool to occupy Monclova with a portion of his force, while the remainder may penetrate to Chihuahua, by way of Santa Rosa. The command left by Colonel Harney at the Presidio crossing having been fired upon by the Mexicans, with the loss of one killed and two wounded, set fire to the public stores they were left to protect, and retreated to San Antonio; thus concluding, not very creditably, the unauthorized expedition of which it formed a part.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A, commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS,
September 15, 1846.

SIR: Since my communication of the 23d ultimo I had the honor to receive yours (through your assistant adjutant general) of the 25th, by the return express, Mr. Adams.

Colonel Harney, as I intimated in my letter of the 24th, returned on the 28th with part of his command. He left, however, three companies of the Texan volunteers on the Rio Grande; for what purpose I have not been informed. On the receipt of my order they were ordered to return to this place. The order was not obeyed until five days after the receipt of the order, when, as Captain Cady and Lieutenant Rogers report, they were fired upon by a small party of Mexicans on the opposite side of the river; and not being able, on account of the distance, to return it with effect, they retreated after burning all the public stores, except provisions just sufficient to sustain them on the march to this place, where they arrived on the 5th instant. Thus ended an expedition no less unfortunate than its termination was disgraceful to our arms.

Colonel Harney having returned to this place, I relieved him from arrest, and ordered him to duty, although I was very far from being satisfied with his explanation, leaving any further action in relation to his conduct to yourself.

The eight companies of the Texan volunteers called into service by Colonel Harney have been discharged, which I had determined to do previous to your communication of the 25th ultimo; the remaining two companies at Austin and St. Mark's will be discharged in the course of two or three days.

The Kentucky and Tennessee regiments of volunteer cavalry have been ordered to La Vaca, or in the neighborhood, to recruit, where they can get supplies; after which they will be ordered to continue their march to Camargo, and report to you or the commanding officer at that place.

So much of your communication as relates to the depredations of the Camanches, Lepans, and Tonkaways, I had previously anticipated. Small parties of the Lepans, Tonkaways, and Mescaleros, encamped near this place some three weeks since, were just from the Rio Grande; and I discovered they had Mexican prisoners among them, and ordered them to be delivered up, which was complied with to the number of four—one woman, two girls, and a boy; at the same time I informed them that if they committed any more depredations on this side of the Rio Grande, I would pursue and chastise them. They have promised to obey my orders, and not to cross the Rio Grande to plunder the Mexicans, and to communicate my orders to the Camanches.

Owing to the want of supplies, now arriving, the most of which will be here in the course of a few days, I have been delayed in my movements towards the Rio Grande. I shall, however, send forward my advance, the regulars, six hundred strong, and a part of the volunteers, amounting to some 1,200 men, on Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday next. The residue of the force, not exceeding 1,200 men, will follow as soon as they can be prepared with supplies and a wagon train. I assure you it has been exceedingly difficult, and attended with immense trouble, and you may add great expense, to get the supplies and to forward them to this place.

From all the information I have been able to obtain, my route will be to the Presidio Santa Rosa, where I expect to be able to ascertain my route to Chihuahua. Whether or not Monclova should be in my direct route, it may not be improper to visit that place, it being but 75 miles from Santa Rosa.

Mr. Lewis, a young gentleman from Camargo, and who brought me a letter from Governor Henderson, will be the bearer of this letter. I recommend him to your favorable consideration.

I have the honor to be, with considerations of the highest respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. WOOL,
Brigadier General U. S. Army.

To Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding the Army of Occupation.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.
September 15, 1846.

SIR: In addition to what I have communicated in my letter of this date, I would inform you that Captain Cady reports that, on the 28th of August, a party of seven men, commanded by Lieutenant Rogers, had been to Presidio to collect supplies. Lieutenant Rogers had purchased 350 bushels of corn, and 400 pounds of flour, and sent it to the river. As they were about to transport it across to the volunteer camp, a party of Mexicans fired on them, and killed one man, wounded two, two were missing, and two returned. The corn and flour were taken by the Mexicans. After this they commenced the fire, which caused the volunteers to burn their stores and retreat, as mentioned in my first letter.

Herewith, I send you a return of my command, exclusive of the two companies of the Texan volunteers stationed at the head of St. Mark's creek and Austin.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JOHN E. WOOL,
Brigadier General U. S. Army.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding the Army of Occupation, Mexico.

HEAD-QUARTERS, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS,
September 15, 1846.

GENERAL: Your communication of the 8th ultimo was received this morning.

In answer to so much of it as relates to returns of regiments, I would remark that it has been anticipated, and that the attention of colonels and adjutants of regiments have again and again been called to the subject, whilst my aid-de-camp devoted days in endeavoring to show them how to make out their returns; and yet I doubt whether we shall be able to give you a correct return at the end of the present month, without the aid of the muster-rolls recently made out by Colonel Churchill.

I should extremely regret if a momentary misapprehension of the instructions of the 1st of July should have caused you the slightest uneasiness. It was only for a moment that I imagined that Major General Butler might have received "special instructions," not communicated to me, in regard to the movement of the troops not en route for Mexico; hence I hesitated, for a single moment, whether or not I should countermand my orders to the Kentucky and Tennessee cavalry and the Mississippi infantry, until the arrival of General Butler. I concluded, however, such could not have been the intention, and my orders remained unchanged. I am happy, however, to find that my conduct has met the approbation of the general-in-chief. I assure you I have had but a single object in view, and that was to execute the duties assigned me faithfully, and with all the zeal, promptness, and ability I was master of. This, I feel assured, will be conceded to me by all that witnessed my exertions. In saying thus much of myself, I would do great injustice to others if I should omit to say that every staff officer, with a single exception, placed under my authority, exerted himself, I have no doubt, to the utmost of his ability to execute the orders and instructions of the authorities at Washington. They were always ready, day or night, to execute any duties required.

I have recently seen a letter of Colonel Yell, published in the Union, with comments. It may not be improper to state the reasons for ordering the arms of his regiment to San Antonio, via La Vaca. In descending the Mississippi, on my way to New Orleans and this place, I stopped at Baton Rouge to inquire about the arms intended for the Tennessee regiment. They had been shipped the day before (the 23d of July) for Memphis; at the same time, I inquired if the arms for Colonel Yell's regiment had been forwarded, and found they had not. I asked the cause of the delay, when Captain Whitely informed me that he had to wait for the carbines sent from New York, which had arrived, and was then only waiting for Colonel Hunt to send him a boat to take them up the Red river.

I left orders with him to forward them, without the least delay. The same day I arrived at New Orleans, where I found that the camp equipage for Colonel Yell's regiment had been returned to New Orleans, because the water was too low to transport them to Fulton. I immediately countermanded the order to Captain Whitely to send the arms up the Red river, and to forward them with all possible despatch to New Orleans, and from thence, with the camp equipage, via La Vaca, to San Antonio de Bexar.

Herewith I enclose two letters of this date to Major General Taylor. The general has not deemed it necessary to give me any definite instructions in regard to my expedition to Chihuahua. He says, in his communication of the 2d ultimo, that the distance is too great, and his knowledge of the route and country so limited, that he leaves all the details of the expedition, as well as the frontier of Texas, to my discretion, in which he says "he has the fullest confidence." He, however, remarks that I can only sustain in that section of Mexico a limited force, unless supplied from the United States; not exceeding one regiment of mounted men, one regiment of foot, and the regulars—amounting to about 600. The two regiments of Illinois infantry, the Arkansas cavalry, with the regulars, will not give an effective force to exceed the force he has suggested, as capable of being supplied between the Presidio and Chihuahua. I have no doubt I shall find it very difficult to supply any number of troops exceeding 2,000 or 2,500. To guard against accidents, I shall establish a depot of provisions and other supplies at the Crossing of the Rio Grande, at or near Presidio. The only difficulty in the way of this is the means of transportation, which I think can be overcome.

The Rio Grande is reported to be high, and that it is not probable we shall be able to cross it without boats. To meet this contingency, I have ordered four boats to be prepared by Captain Frazer, of the engineer corps. They will be ready for transportation in the course of the present week. Every thing is doing that can be done to hasten the march of the troops. To show how much we have done, and how difficult it has been to forward the expedition in accordance with my own wishes and desires, I herewith enclose a copy of a letter, dated the 9th instant, from Major Thomas, quartermaster at La Vaca. The wagons have been hitherto 15 to 20 days from La Vaca to this place. As the roads have greatly improved within the last two weeks, I am in hopes the last train will arrive in the course of from ten to twelve days.

In conclusion, I have only to add that I am greatly in want of experienced medical officers. But one of the new appointments, Surgeon Price, who is enabled to attend to duty, has reported. We have three citizens surgeons for the three regiments of volunteers. The one attached to Colonel Yell's regiment will not remain, because he was not appointed an assistant surgeon, which he had expected. Surgeon Foote is somewhere on the road between this and La Vaca. Surgeon Wharton is dangerously ill at La Vaca. Captain Prentiss has arrived, and reported for duty as assistant adjutant-general. He was in the office a day, when he was taken sick. I am apprehensive he will not be able to perform the duties I require. My aid-de-camp is discharging the duties of his office.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. WOOL,
Brigadier General U. S. Army.

To Brigadier General R. Jones,
Adjutant General.

Port La Vaca, Texas,
September 9, 1846.

General: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated 5th instant. I am as anxious as possible to do every thing to enable you to put your advance in motion, and have been exerting myself to the utmost to do so; but I assure you that it is a great labor: the wagons from New Orleans are parts of different lots, and now after a week's work we have numerous parts of wagons which fit nothing. A vessel has just arrived below, bringing some more wagons, and parts of others left behind on former shipments. I trust that these will enable me to complete the wagons. I have a large train preparing; shall commence loading in the morning, and send them off as quick as possible, with every thing you require, as far as it is here.

I had intended leaving here to-day for your head-quarters, but find it impossible to do so in justice to you and myself. It is my intention to personally attend to the wants of your army, and not leave things to be done by others, satisfying myself by uttering complaints; and then I wish to join you, and take my proper position, as in fact I have, since my arrival at this place, been as hard at work as the youngest assistant quartermaster with your division. I have cheerfully done this to remedy the errors of others higher in authority; for the baggage and supply train should have been at La Vaca long before the arrival of the troops. A magazine of provisions and supplies of all kinds should have been at San Antonio before your arrival, so as to enable you to take the field as soon as the troops were ready. I have done all in my power to remedy the delays of others, but cannot altogether overcome them.

The train which is now loading will have the best supply of quartermaster's stores of any which has left, and will also be the largest train. I hope that, together with the private wagons now loading, and to be loaded in a day or two, it will amount to at least fifty wagons. I cannot send a list of the articles, but it will have all the articles you mention, and many others. The loading of previous trains was attended to by Captain Irwin, and I supposed he had duly notified Lieutenant Newton, to whom they were consigned; but I learn he had not done so particularly. Of the train now loading, a list shall be forwarded as soon as it leaves.

The brig Oriole arrived to-day from New Orleans with 50 mules, 24 wagons, and a lot of harness. The captain reports that he has also the missing parts of the wagons heretofore sent by Colonel Hunt; and I hope that he has, as I have many parts of wagons entirely useless. Captains Davis and Ralston have been of great assistance in getting together what we have here: without their services much more delay would have taken place.

Colonel Hunt has not sent the articles required by Captain Frazer; previous to the receipt of a duplicate of his requisition I had written to him on the subject, urging him to send them on.

Many of the articles I required are yet behind, and the delay is unpardonable. I wrote him on this subject also.

I remain, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. THOMAS,
Major and Quartermaster.

Brig. Gen. JOHN E. WOOL,
Commanding division U. S. A., San Antonio, Texas.

[No. 93.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 6, 1846.

Sir: I have respectfully to report that the entire force of mounted Texas volunteers has been mustered out of service, and is now returning home by companies. With their departure we may look for a restoration of quiet and order in Monterey, for I regret to report that some shameful atrocities have been perpetrated by them since the capitulation of the town. One company of Texas foot volunteers, which has rendered excellent service in the campaign, is now on the march to Camargo, there to be mustered out of service. It is deemed necessary to station a small force at Laredo, on the east bank of the Rio Grandè, for the purpose of protecting that frontier from Indian depredations, and enabling the government of Texas to extend its jurisdiction with more facility to the river. I have accordingly, with the advice of Governor Henderson, authorised General Lamar, ex-president of Texas, to raise a mounted company of 80 men for this service, to be mustered for twelve months. As a very small force is now in service from the State of Texas, I trust this step will be approved by the department.

The 2d infantry, with some of the artillery companies left in rear, and an additional volunteer force, has been ordered forward, together with a heavy battery train. Colonel Belknap, acting inspector general, has proceeded to the posts and depots in rear, for the purpose of breaking up the establishment at St. Joseph's island, and bringing up all men who have been left behind and may be able to rejoin their companies. In case of a resumption of hostilities, it is my wish to be as strong as possible in regular troops.

We have no credible intelligence from the interior. Some rumors of a counter movement in favor of Paredes want confirmation. General Ampudia at the last advices was at Saltillo, probably with the whole or a greater part of his army.

I have been unable as yet to prepare my detailed official report of the operations before Monterey, the last report from subordinate commanders being this moment received. Our loss in killed, wounded, and missing will vary very little from 500; 400 of which was sustained in the attack on the lower part of the city on the 21st.

I regret to report that Lieutenant Dilworth, 1st infantry, died of his wounds on the 27th ultimo.

Our last date from Washington is August 28.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 95.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, October 11, 1846.

SIR: I respectfully enclose a statement relating to a recent atrocity committed in the streets of Monterey. The man, Fitzsimmons, is now in confinement. It will be perceived at once that there is no American tribunal here competent to meet the case, and I respectfully ask for instructions as to the proper disposition to be made of the culprit. In reply to a communication from the Mexican general, desiring that the man might be brought to merited punishment, I was obliged to answer that the case must be submitted to my government before any action could be taken here.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

Having been called on by General Worth to state what I saw relative to the murder of a Mexican lancer, on the 5th instant, I do hereby certify to the following:

I was standing in front of Captain McCowan's quarters, in company with several others, when my attention was attracted by a remark (I think) coming from an individual who had just issued from a small house on the opposite side of the street. As well as I recollect, he observed to an individual who was on the opposite side of the street from himself, that here comes a Mexican lancer, with his lance and gun. The individual observed, in reply, stop him and take them away; when the young man advanced as though he intended to do so, but passed immediately in front of the lancer, without interfering with him. When the lancer had passed about ten or fifteen paces, as I think, he would range with a window in the small house across the street. I heard the report of a gun, and, on turning my eyes to the window in the small house across the street, I saw what could not be anything else but the smoke issuing from a gun that had been discharged through the window; after which report, the lancer advanced some five or ten paces, and fell dead from his horse. Colonel Hays arrived soon after the gun had been discharged, and went immediately into the small house across the street from which the gun had been discharged, and there found a man quietly seated, without any individual with him. (He called himself Fitzsimmons.) Colonel Hays asked him if the gun was fired from that house; when Fitzsimmons appeared to be much excited, and answered that it was not. Colonel Hays then picked up a gun and opened the pan, when smoke came out, and the gun had every appearance of having just been fired. Colonel Hays remarked to him that he, Fitzsimmons, had killed that man, or knew who had done it. Fitzsimmons denied the charge, and said he knew nothing of it.

W. B. P. GAINES,
Lieutenant, Brazoria company.

I do certify that the latter part of this statement, from where my name is mentioned in it, came under my own observation, and is correct.

JOHN C. HAYS,
Colonel, commanding 1st reg't Texas volunteers.
MONTEREY, October 6, 1816.

[No. 97.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, October 13, 1846.

SIR: I deeply regret to report that First Lieutenant R. H. Graham, 4th infantry, died last night (12th instant) of wounds received in the engagement of the 21st of September.

I have to acknowledge your communications of August 31st, September 12th and 15th, (two) regimental orders, No. 65, (head-quarters 2d artillery,) with your endorsement, and "special orders" Nos. 82, 87, 88, and 89; also, 200 blank certificates of discharge for volunteers.

One of our mails was intercepted by the Mexicans before the capitulation, containing most probably the Washington dates between August 25th and 31st, which are wanting to complete our files. The dates between September 1st and 12th are also due, but are believed to have been delayed by stormy weather in the gulf.

Will you please supply duplicates of the intercepted communications and orders?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. W. S. BLISS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 99.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, October 20, 1846.

SIR: In reply to your communication of September 19th, I have to state that it is not probable that the mail lost between Galveston and New Orleans in September contained despatches from the army, as the steamer is believed to have sailed only from Galveston, and not from Brazos Santiago.

I have to acknowledge your communication of September 21st, and "general orders" No. 41, duplicates of which were received by Lieutenant Armistead; copies of your communications to Brigadier General Shields of September 18th, to the general officers of volunteers of September 19th, and to Lieutenant William O'Brien, Maryland and District of Columbia battalion, of September 22d, and "special orders" No. 83 to 86 inclusive. "General orders" Nos. 39 and 40, and "special orders," No. 81, are now wanting to complete the files, and were probably contained in the intercepted mail. We have no dates from your office or the War Department between August 25th and August 31st.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 101.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 27, 1846.

Sir: By a report received from Brigadier General Wool, dated the 19th instant, it appears that, with his advance, he was at that date at San José, about 75 miles this side of the Rio Grande. He reports 50 days' rations on hand, and expects to obtain further supplies from the country. He is advancing on Monclova, at which point he proposes to establish a depot of supplies. His report is necessarily brief, as it was sent by a Mexican, and might have fallen into the enemy's hands, and it leaves me in doubt as to his precise route towards Chihuahua. I hope to hear more definitely from Monclova.

We have no recent intelligence from the interior. Our latest official dates from Washington are still those brought by Lieutenant Armistead.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,

Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 102.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, October 28, 1846.

Sir: It is with no ordinary regret that I find myself under the painful necessity of reporting the decease of Brevet Captain R. Ridgely, Assistant Adjutant General. While riding in the city of Monterey, on the 25th instant, his horse accidentally slipped and threw him with such force upon the ground as to produce concussion of the brain, of which he expired last night, (27th.)

His activity and gallantry before the enemy render his death a serious loss to the service, while the melancholy circumstances under which it occurred will make it peculiarly afflicting to his family and friends.

His remains will be interred, this evening, with the honors of war.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

[No. 103.]

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 2, 1846.

Sir: It becomes my melancholy duty to report the decease of Major W. W. Lear, 3d infantry. The wound received by the lamented major in the action of the 21st September, though very severe, was doing well, and hopes were entertained of his recovery; but his feeble system could not recover from the consequent exhaustion, and he sunk gradually until the 31st October, when death put a period to his sufferings. I enclose a copy of the order announcing to the army the decease of this gallant and meritorious officer.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 104.]

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 3, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose, herewith, a copy of the report of the board of medical officers convened to examine certain men of the 2d infantry and mounted riflemen. Certificates of disability in all the cases marked in the margin have been forwarded to my head-quarters, and under the circumstances of the case, I have ordered discharges accordingly. The certificates will be duly forwarded to your office by Colonel Riley. Many of the cases are of recent enlistment, and appear to be such as should have been detected before the men were enlisted.

I enclose a return of the regular troops of the army of occupation for the month of August. It has been impracticable to furnish this return earlier; and as for a complete return, embracing the volunteers as well as regular troops, it is entirely impossible as yet to prepare one, owing to the extreme difficulty of procuring returns from the volunteer regiments.

I have to acknowledge your communications of September 18th, 28th, and 30th, and October 5th; the letter of Lieutenant Hartstene, United States navy, of September 24th, referred to me; copies of your communications to Colonel Gates, September 26th;

Lieutenant Colonel Belton, September 17th; Captain Hunter, September 26th; duplicate of that to Captain Mason of August 24th; and a copy of the letter of Brevet Major Hawkins to your office, dated September 17th; also "general orders," No. 42, and "special orders," Nos. 90 to 94, inclusive. The above communications, with the revised official register, were received by mail on the 29th of October.

I have also to acknowledge the receipt, on the 2d instant, of a box containing several thousand blank muster rolls, and returns, for the use of the volunteers.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

[No. 106.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, November 8, 1846.

Sir: Your communication of October 8th, relative to the positions of Captains Sherman and Bragg, 3d artillery, was received yesterday. You will perceive from my "special orders," No. 172, dated the 6th instant, that Captain Sherman had been already ordered to join his proper company, and that Captain Bragg had been assigned to the command of company C.

In regard to this latter assignment I beg leave to say, that on the 18th of June, when Captain Bragg legally succeeded to his grade, Captain M. S. Miller, in whose place he was promoted, was captain of company C, to which company Captain Bragg was therefore naturally carried. It is not seen how this assignment could be affected by the transfer announced in "special orders," No. 69, of August 6th; for, at the date of said transfer, Captain Miller, it seems to me, was no longer, in point of law, an officer of the 3d artillery.

However the question of succession may be viewed, it is vitally important, for the good of the service, that a permanent and efficient captain, experienced in the field service of artillery, should be attached to company C, which is greatly in want of administrative care and management. I deem Captain Bragg eminently qualified in all respects for this command; and the battery which he leaves has by his care been brought into such good condition, and is withal so well officered, that it may suffer a change of commanders without material injury. I shall therefore retain the present assignment until otherwise ordered.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major Gen. U. S. Army, commanding.

No. 1.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, November 5, 1846.

SIR: The convention concluded at this place on the 24th of September prescribed that the American forces should not pass a certain line for the term of eight weeks, or until the orders or instructions of the respective governments could be received. I have now the honor to notify you that I have received instructions from my government to conclude the cessation of hostilities, and I shall accordingly consider myself at liberty to cross the specified line after the 13th instant, the date at which I suppose this communication will be received at San Luis.

I am informed that several Americans, captured at China and elsewhere, are now prisoners in San Luis. I hope you will find it compatible with justice and propriety to release these men and allow them to return within our lines. At the capitulation of this place, impressed with the hope and belief that the way might be opened to an honorable peace between the two republics, I was induced to accede to liberal terms, and I restored immediately the prisoners of war in my hands, including three commissioned officers. I did not know at that time that any American prisoners had been sent to the interior. I trust you will find in this proceeding good reason for complying with the request which humanity dictates in behalf of the prisoners understood to be now at San Luis.

Should Major Graham, the bearer of this communication, proceed as far as your head-quarters, I beg leave to recommend him to your kind attention, and I should be pleased to receive by him any communication which you may desire to make.

I have the honor to be, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

SENOR GENERAL: A las diez de la mañana de hoy, y con oficio del E. S. gobernador del estado de Coahuila del 8 de este mes, he recibido el de V. S. del 5, en que me participa que, par orden de su gobierno, está dispuesto á romper el convenio celebrado en Monterey el 24 de Setiembre último, y en consecuencia á traspasar el dia 13 de este propio mes la linea señalada en aquél, en cuya fecha consideraba V. S. que habria yo recibido su nota relativa.

Creido yo de que el termino estipulado en dicho convenio debrá ambas partes, no habia dictado providencia alguna que tendiese á faltar á él; mas atendida la obligacion en que V. S. se considera á virtud de la orden de su gobierno, me limitada á responderle, que puede cuando guste comenzar sus hostilidades, á que corresponderé debidamente.

Respecto de prisioneros Americanos, dicé á V. S. que solo existen en este cuartel general los siete, de que le acompaño lista nominal; y confiado en lo que V. S. me manifestá de haber puesto en libertad á varios Mexicanos, he determinado para corresponder á su generosidad hacerlo proprio con los siete referidos, y que la comisaria de este egercito los socorra con setenta pesos para sus alimentos en el camino.

Dice V. S., que cuando se verificó en Monterey el convenio citado, tenia la esperanza de que los terminos en que se concibió abririan un camino para que entre ambas republicas se celebrate una paz honorosa. Prescindiendo de si ese convenio fue efecto de la necesidad, ó dela noble mira que V. S. indica, me reduciré á decirle, que por el espiritu y decision que advierto en todos los Mejicanos, debe V. S. desechár toda idéa de paz entretanto un solo Norte Americano pise armado el territorio de esta republica, y subsistan al frente de sus puertos, las escuadras que los hostilizan. Sin embargo, el Congreso estraordinario debe reunirse en la capital, á fines del presente mes; y este augusto cuerpo resolvera lo que juzgue mas conveniente al honor y á los intereres de la nacion.

El Mayor Graham no ha llegado hasta este cuartel general, y si lo hubiera hecho, le habria attendido como lo ecsigen su caracter y empleo, obsequiando á la vez la recomendacion que V. S. se sirve hácerme. Mando esta communicacion por estraordinario al Saltillo, para que de lá misma manera se remita á V. S.

Tengo el honor, con este motivo, de ofrecer á V. S. las seguridades de mi distinguida consideracion.

Dios y libertad! Cuartel general de San Luis Potosi, á 10 de Noviembre de 1846.

[Translation.]

General: At 10 o'clock this morning (under cover of a despatch from his excellency the governor of the State of Coahuila of the 8th instant) I received yours of the 5th, in which you inform me that by order of your government you intend to break the convention agreed upon at Monterey on the 24th September last, and consequently on the 13th of the present month to pass the line then established, by which date you suppose I will have received your note on the subject.

Believing that the terms stipulated in said convention ought to be religiously observed by both parties, I had taken no measures whatever which might tend to a violation of them; but in view of the obligation under which you consider yourself in consequence of the order of your government, I limit myself to this reply, that you may commence hostilities when you please, and that I shall duly correspond to them.

With respect to American prisoners, I have to say that there are but seven of them at head-quarters, of which I send you a list by their names; and satisfied, as you state, that you have liberated a number of Mexicans, I have determined, in order to meet your generosity with a like spirit, to do the same in regard to the seven referred to, and have directed the commissariat of this army to supply them with seventy dollars to pay their expenses on the road.

You say that when the convention above cited was entered into at Monterey, you entertained the hope that the terms in which it was conceived might open a way to an honorable peace between the two republics. Leaving out of view the question whether this convention was the result of necessity, or of the noble sentiments you express, I will content myself with saying that, from the spirit and decision which I observe in all Mexicans, you ought to discard every idea of peace while a single North American treads in arms the territory of this republic, or while hostile squadrons remain in front of her ports. However, the extraordinary congress is to assemble in the capital about the end of the present month, and that august body will determine what it may judge best for the honor and interest of the nation.

Major Graham has not arrived at these head-quarters. If he had come, I would have received him with the attentions which his character and rank demand; showing at the same time my regard to your recommendation on the subject. I send this communication to Saltillo by courier, whence it will be forwarded in the same way to you.

I have the honor to offer you the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

God and liberty! Head-quarters, San Luis Potosi, 10th November, 1846.

ANT. LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

Major General Z. Taylor,
General-in-chief of the army of the United States of the north.

No. 3.

Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Saltillo, November 20, 1846.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 10th instant, and beg leave to return my thanks for your humane attention in ordering the release of the prisoners referred to in my letter of November 5. I shall not fail to report to my government this generous proceeding; and I am sure that it will be justly appreciated, as tending to alleviate the rigors necessarily attending a state of war, and which it becomes enlightened nations to reduce as far as circumstances will permit.

In regard to the convention of Monterey, I need hardly invite your attention to the provision of that convention which limited the cessation of hostilities to eight weeks, or, until the orders or instructions of the respective governments should be received; plainly leaving it to either government to prescribe a termination to said cessation when it might deem proper. I mention this subject because your communication seems to imply the imputation of a want of faith on the part of the government of the United States—an imputation, which, in my judgment, is not warranted by the terms of the convention or the facts of the case.

In conclusion, permit me still to express the hope that the august Mexican congress, soon to assemble in the capital, will find it for the interest and honor of the great people which they represent to accept the offer of the United States, to enter upon an amicable negotiation of the difficulties, and thus to establish permanent relations of good will and friendship between the republics.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, sir, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. Army, commanding.

El Señor General D. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna,
Commanding in chief the Mexican army,
San Luis Potosi.

[No. 118.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, December 3, 1846.

Sir: It becomes my melancholy duty to report the death of Brigadier General Hamar, of the volunteer service, who expired last evening, (2d,) after a short illness.

The order to the army announcing this sudden dispensation expresses but feebly the high estimation in which the deceased was held by all who knew him. In council, I found him clear and judicious; and in the administration of his command, though kind, yet always impartial and just. He was an active participant in the operations before Monterey, and since had commanded the volunteer division. His loss to the army at this time cannot be supplied, and the experience which he daily acquired in a new profession rendered his services continually more valuable. I had looked forward with confidence to the benefit of his abilities and judgment in the service which yet lies before us, and feel most sensibly the privation of them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

[No. 119.] Head-quarters, Army of Occupation,
Camp near Monterey, December 4, 1846.

Sir: I respectfully enclose, herewith, a letter received on the 30th ultimo, from General Santa Anna, with a copy of my reply, (Nos. 1 and 2.)

If General Vega has been exchanged, as I do not doubt, it is to be regretted that I was not officially in possession of the fact, as, in that case, I could have addressed a much more satisfactory reply to General Santa Anna. It is quite unnecessary for me to invite the attention of the department to the request of that general.

The news brought by the messenger from San Luis is not very important. 20,000 troops are said to be in the city, and a large cavalry force scattered through the country for forage and subsistence. Their cavalry parties are thrown forward some 100 miles, or more, on the road to Saltillo, as far as water and supplies extend. From all the information I have obtained, it is, at this time, quite impossible for a large column to move on that route, from a want of water.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army,

Sor. General: Hé recibido la comunicacion de V. S. fecha 20 del corriente, en que contesta á la mia del dia 10, referente á la cesacion del armisticio estipulado en el convenio de Monterey, y hechome cargo de la observacion que me hace V. S. para destruir el concepto que talvez pudiera formarse contra la buena fé del gobierno de los E. Unidos por haber principiado los hostilidades antes del vencimiento de las ocho semanas, tengo el honor de decirle, que me conformo con el juicio que há formado sobre el particular.

Agradesco á V. S. la honorosa calificacion que hizo de mi procedimiento en favor de los prisioneros Americanos que se contraban en este cuartel general, y aguardo por parte de V. S. en los casos que puedan ocurrir igual correspondencia. Con este motivo le manifestaré, que el gefe, oficiales, y tripulacion del bergantin Truxton que se perdio frente á la barra de Tuzpan fueran hecho prisioneros de guerra por las tropas Mexicanas; y á peticion del Comodoro Connor, se pusieron en absoluta libertad, con la condicion de verificarse un cange por el General Diaz de la Vega y los tres oficiales Mexicanos que le acompañan, lo cual fué aceptado por el gobierno de los Estados Unidos, segun comunicó el mismo comodoro al comandante general de Vera Cruz con fecha 7 de Octúbre último. Pero, como hasta el dia 24 del mismo mes exista el General Diaz de la Vega en Nueva Orleans en el mismo estado en que lo colocó el exito de la batalla del dia 9 de Mayo, me veo en el caso de reclamar á V. S. el cumplimiento de lo acordado entre el gobierno Mexicano y el de los Estados Unidos, respecto al cange de todos los prisioneros del Truxton por el General Vega y los tres oficiales citados; esperando que V. S. hará a su gobierno la comunicacion que corresponde, para que aquello tenga efecto segun lo exige el honor, y la buena fé empeñada.

Concluire esta nota asegurando á V. S. que yo tambien tengo esperanza de que el soberano Congreso nacional, que queva á instalarse procsimamente, acordará lo que mas convenga á los intereses de la Republica; pero creo que no me equivoco al asegurar á V. S., que ni el Congreso, ni ningun Mexicano, podrán jamas oir propuestas de paz sin que el territorio nacional sea evacuado por las fuerzas de los Estados Unidos, y desaparesca la actitud hostil de sus buques de guerra: ese há de sér sin duda el preliminar de cualquiera negociacion que se abra; y seame licito expresar á V. S. que con movida la nacion por un sentimiento de patriotismo, y dispuesta á defender á todo trance palmo a palmo su territoria, nunca dejará de calificar como merece, y como lo há el hecho yá el mundo civilizado, la conducta de los Estados Unidos, y hara cuanto puede y debe por merecer dignamente el titulo que lleva de independiente y libre.

Tengo el honor de asegurar á V. S. mi atenta consideracion.

Dios y libartad! Cuartel General de San Luis Potosi, Noviembre 24 de 1846.

ANT. LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

Sor. Mayor Gen. Z. Taylor,
General-en-gefe del Egercito de los Estados Unidos.

[Translation.]

General: I have received your communication of the 20th instant, in which you reply to mine of the 10th, in relation to the cessation of the armistice stipulated in the convention of Monterey; and, impressed with the remarks you make in opposition to the opinion which perhaps might be entertained against the good faith of the government of the United States, for having commenced hostilities before the termination of the eight weeks, I have the honor to say to you that I submit to the judgment you have formed upon this matter. I thank you for the honorable notice you take of my proceedings in relation to the American prisoners who were at these head-quarters, and I expect from you in like cases similar conduct. In this understanding, I have to state that the commissioned officers and crew of the brig Truxton, wrecked on the bar of Tuspan, were made prisoners of war by Mexican troops, and at the request of Commodore Connor, were placed at absolute liberty, with the condition of being exchanged for General Dias de la Vega and the three Mexican officers who accompany him, which was accepted by the government of the United States, as made known by the commodore himself to the commanding general at Vera Cruz, under date of the 7th of October last. But as up to the 24th of the same month General Dias de la Vega was still at New Orleans, in the same condition in which he was placed by the result of the battle of the 9th of May, I find myself under the necessity of claiming from you a compliance with the agreement between the Mexican government and that of the United States, in respect to the exchange of all the prisoners of the Truxton for General Vega and the three officers mentioned, in the hope that you will make to your government the necessary communication, that said agreement may be carried into effect, as required by honor and the faith pledged.

I will conclude this note by assuring you that I also entertain a hope that the sovereign national congress about to assemble will determine upon what may be best for the interests of the republic; but I believe that I am not mistaken when I assure you that neither congress nor any Mexican can ever listen to any proposition for peace until the national territory shall have been evacuated by the forces of the United States, and the hostile attitude of their ships of war shall have ceased.

This, without doubt, must be preliminary to any negotiation that may be opened; and allow me further to say to you that this nation, moved by sentiments of patriotism, and determined to defend her territory at every hazard, inch by inch, will never cease to qualify as it deserves, and as the civilized world has already done, the conduct of the United States, and will do all it can and ought to do to deserve worthily the title it holds to independence and freedom.

I have the honor to assure you of my high consideration. God and liberty! Head-quarters, San Luis Potosi, November 24, 1846.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Camp near Monterey, December 4, 1846.

SENOR GENERAL: I have had the honor to receive your communication of November 24, in which you allude to the case of General Dias de la Vega, and request that the United States government may be reminded of the agreement to exchange him, and the officers who shared his fate, for the commander, officers and crew of the brig Truxton.

I regret that I am not officially advised of the action of my government in relation to General Vega, and that therefore I am not able to assure you with certainty in regard to the exchange in question. But I cannot doubt that whatever may have been promised has been strictly performed; indeed, it is stated in the New Orleans journals of the 10th of November that General Vega had been exchanged, and would soon leave for Mexico. I shall, nevertheless, address the United States government on this subject, as you request.

I beg leave to assure you that I shall not fail on all proper occasions to reciprocate your kindness in releasing the American prisoners lately at San Luis Potosi, and that orders will accordingly be given for liberating a small number of Mexican prisoners who were captured in May last, and are yet in depôt near Matamoras. They will be transported to Vera Cruz and delivered to the commandant general of that place.

I have the honor to be, with high respect, sir, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

Señor General D. ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA,
Commanding in chief, San Luis Potosi, Mexico.

[No. 126.] HEAD-QUARTERS, ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Montemorelos, December 26, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, on the 24th instant, while in route, of the instructions from your office, dated November 18, relative to the muster of the regiment of volunteer horse called out from the State of Texas; also of the copy of instructions of the mustering officer.

In compliance with those instructions, Colonel Croghan, inspector general United States army, has this day been ordered to proceed to Austin, or the rendezvous of the new regiment, and report to the governor of Texas for the duty of mustering it. I have associated Surgeon Finley with Colonel Croghan on this duty, and, in view of the state of his health, have permitted him, after its completion, to repair to the city of Washington.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. TAYLOR,
Major General U. S. A., commanding.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Adjt. General's Office, Washington, February 6, 1847.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions, and the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, calling for "all correspondence with General Taylor since the commencement of hostilities with Mexico," &c., I respectfully lay before you the accompanying papers, arranged in separate series from A to G, inclusive, which contain all the information relative to the subject of inquiry, afforded by the records of the offices of the general-in-chief and adjutant general of the army, viz:

Series A.—Containing copies of all the letters addressed by Major General Scott, commanding the army, to Major General Taylor, since April 24, 1846, when hostilities commenced.

Series B.—Containing copies of all letters, except those of mere detail, addressed to Major General Taylor from the office of the Adjutant General of the army.

Series C.—Containing a synopsis of every letter from the Adjutant General's office to Major General Taylor, not copied at length in series B.

Series D.—Containing copies of all the "orders" of any particular interest issued by Major General Taylor.

Series E.—Containing a synopsis of every order issued by Major General Taylor, not copied at length in series D.

Series F.—Containing copies of all the important "special orders" issued by Major General Taylor.

Series G.—Containing a synopsis of every special order issued by Major General Taylor, not copied at length in series F.

The above embraces all the correspondence with General Taylor during the time specified in the resolution of the House, except the general's own letters to the Adjutant General, all of which are now in possession of the War Department, whence it is understood copies will be furnished.

The 24th of April, 1846, is fixed upon as the commencement of hostilities, it being the day on which General Arista, commanding the Mexican army at Matamoras, announced to General Taylor that he considered hostilities as having commenced.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

HON. W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

A.

HEAD-QUARTERS, OF THE ARMY,
Washington, May 18, 1846.

SIR: We have no report from you later than the 26th ult., and but little through unofficial sources so late as the morning of the 29th. Of course, notwithstanding our high confidence in you and your little army, we are anxious to hear further from you. All the success that may be expected, under the circumstances, is confidently relied upon.

Congress having recognised the existence of war between the United States and the republic of Mexico, and having authorized the acceptance of 50,000 volunteers, the War Department has already called upon several States for quotas of twelve-month volunteers—making a total of about 20,000, say, one-fourth horse, to march upon Mexico from different points upon the Rio Grande. Of course, at this early moment, and at this distance from the scene of intended operations, no definite plan of campaign has been laid down. Being destined to the chief command of the augmented forces, I shall delay as much as possible of that plan until I can profit by your better knowledge of the enemy's country, when it is my hope to have the benefit of your valuable services, according to your brevet rank, and with the column that may be the most agreeable to you.

We have multiplied our force on the general recruiting service, and hope in two or three months to bring up the privates of companies to 70 or 80—at least in the regiments with you.

I fear that we shall not be able to put on the Rio Grande, with our utmost efforts, more than 10 or 15,000 volunteers by the 1st of September—the best period, we learn here, for the commencement of operations beyond, with the view to a conquest of a peace. What you may have done since the 26th ult., or what you may be able to accomplish before September, with your limited means, towards that general end, (an honorable peace,) cannot now be assumed. We may hope that with the small reinforcements you have by this time received, you have forced back the Mexicans to the right bank of the Rio Grande, and perhaps may have taken Matamoras; or possibly, by the greatly superior army of the enemy, you may now be placed strictly on the defensive. By this note it is not intended to embarrass you with new instructions, but to give you information as to expectations or intentions entertained here—leaving you under the instructions you have already received, and to your own good judgment, zeal, and intelligence.

I do not now expect to reach the Rio Grande much ahead of the heavy reinforcements alluded to above, or to assume the immediate command in that quarter before my arrival.

With great respect, I remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

To Brevet Brigadier General TAYLOR,
Commanding, &c., &c.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, June 11, 1846.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th ultimo, addressed to the Adjutant General, has been laid, by the Secretary of War, before the President.

We are all gratified at the disposition you have made of the Mexican general's effects, captured in the battles of the 8th and 9th, which you considered to be strictly his private property.

Perhaps the pavilion (though not probable) and the pieces of plate you mention may also be considered as parts of his personal effects. If so, they may be disposed of in like manner. In no case will it be necessary to send the pavilion here. If public property, and suitable to your purposes, no better use of it can be made than at your head-quarters in the field. On the same supposition, the President directs that the plate be deposited in some safe place, subject to further orders.

The captured colors and standards may be sent here, to be preserved as national trophies.

All other public property captured by the gallant army under your command, which may be adapted to its current use, will be turned over for that purpose to the appropriate officers of the general staff, under your orders. Any pieces of artillery or ordnance, not so adapted, may also be shipped to this place, to be deposited in the Washington arsenal as national trophies.

I remain, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Brevet Major General Z. TAYLOR,
U. S. Army, commanding, &c.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, June 16, 1846.

SIR: I have the honor, by direction of the general-in-chief, to transmit herewith a copy of Notes on Mexico, furnished him by Colonel A. Butler, an officer of the war of 1812-'14, and for some years minister of the United States in that republic.

In furnishing these notes, I am desired by the general-in-chief to say that they are communicated simply as aids, perhaps, to further inquiry, and without any intention of changing his general instructions to you of the 12th inst.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

H. L. SCOTT,
A. D. C., &c.

Brevet Major General Z. TAYLOR,
U. S. Army, commanding, &c.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, August 20, 1846.

SIR: In the numerous volunteer corps now in the service of the United States, vacancies in commissions, by resignations, deaths and otherwise, will probably occur.

The commissions of volunteer officers cannot properly be accepted by any functionary of the United States. You may, however, grant discharges from the service of the United States, "honorable" or otherwise, according to conduct in that service, upon the presentation of such circumstances as may appear to you of grave interest to the officers themselves, or to the public service.

Vacancies in volunteer commissions, up to the rank of colonel inclusive, however created, may be filled in accordance with the laws of the States to which the discharged or deceased officers respectively belonged. Those laws may prescribe elections, or promotions by seniority. In the former case, you may announce in orders the vacancies to be filled, and appoint the times of election. Where the principle of promotion prevails, the next in rank may be put in orders to act in the higher places (as also in the case of elections) until the pleasure of the governor or governors interested can be made known in the form of commissions. Hence it will be necessary to cause to be reported to the particular governors the discharges, deaths, elections and promotions which may occur among the officers in their respective corps.

A similar letter is addressed to Brigadier General Wool, with this addition:

"Considering your remoteness from the general head-quarters of the army against Mexico, but without intending to withdraw you from the command of Major General Taylor, you are authorized to act in the matters presented above, while you shall remain at a considerable distance from him."

I remain, sir, with high respect, your most obedient servant,

WINFIELD SCOTT.

To Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding army against Mexico.
To Brigadier General WOOL,
San Antonio, Texas.
To Brigadier General KEARNY,
Santa Fé, Mexico.

General: In obedience to the instructions of the Secretary of War, I enclose herewith a copy of the "Daily Union," of the 7th instant, containing certain resolutions offered yesterday to the House of Representatives by the Hon. J. Q. Adams, under the head of "desertions from the army," and also the debate which follows thereon. As it is probable the resolutions will pass the House; with a view, in that event, to enable the President to answer the call with the least delay, you are requested to transmit, at as early a day as possible, the names and description of all deserters who may have been killed in the act of desertion from your command, with a special report of all the orders and instructions, if any, issued to any officer or non-commissioned officer relative thereto, and all the circumstances connected with the subject, so as to enable the department to understand the character of the transaction, and furnish such information as may be required in relation to it.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brevet Brigadier General Z. Taylor,

Note.—In connexion with the foregoing I send you a copy of my report of the 5th instant, in answer to a previous resolution of the Hon. Mr. Adams.

No. 3.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 12, 1846.

GENERAL: A bill for increasing the number of privates in all our regiments to one hundred per company having become a law, it is desirable to increase our force on the recruiting service, general and special.

Accordingly, the general-in-chief directs that you will immediately (as soon as active operations on the Rio Grande may allow you the necessary time) select one or two companies of each regiment of artillery, (other than Ringgold's and Duncan's,) and three or four of each of the other regiments with you, to be broken up, and transfer all the privates from such companies to the remaining companies of their respective regiments. Lieutenants, the musicians, and half the non-commissioned officers, may also be transferred to fill vacancies, taking the most efficient for field service, other than 1st sergeants. So, also, of artillery artificers, and the remainder, if any, temporarily attached to the companies of their respective regiments.

The companies left blank by transfers you will send to the points designated below, where they will find instructions from this office;

The blank companies of the 2d dragoons and 4th regiment of artillery to Baltimore;

The blank companies of the 3d regiment of artillery and 5th of infantry to Philadelphia;

The blank companies of the 2d artillery and 8th infantry to New York;

The blank companies of the 1st artillery and 7th infantry to Boston; and

The blank companies of the 3d infantry to Newport, Kentucky.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brevet Brigadier General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding the Army in Texas.

No. 4.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 25, 1846.

GENERAL: I am directed by the Secretary of War to say, as it is quite probable, and highly desirable, that many of those patriotic volunteers from Louisiana and other States who have sailed from New Orleans, or who may be assembling to follow, under the requisitions and calls suddenly made in that quarter, may, from the same patriotic ardor, be willing to re-enrol themselves, under the act of the 13th instant, as twelve-month volunteers, that you be, and you are accordingly requested to invite them to do so; and that you cause all such as may consent to be enrolled in companies and regiments, giving credit for the time passed under their first hasty enrolment.

Previous to the new act (May 13) there was no legal authority for requiring or accepting the services of volunteers for a period exceeding three months; and any enrolment prior thereto, for a longer time, cannot, of course, be enforced, though it is probable most of those who volunteered for six months will consider themselves bound for that term.

It is of great importance, however, to secure the services of the volunteers now with you for the longest legal period, (twelve months,) and you are accordingly requested to use every proper effort to accomplish this desirable object.

The Secretary of War will correspond with the governors upon this subject, and request their co-operation in effecting the arrangement herein proposed.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 25, 1846.

GENERAL: I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the several despatches and orders from your head quarters since my letter of May 7th, viz: letters dated April 23d, 26th, 30th, and May 3d and 5th, (numbered 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33;) "orders" from 49 to 55; and "special orders" from 54 to 58; all inclusive.

Your correspondence with General Ampudia in relation to the blockade of the mouth of the Rio Grande, reported in a previous communication, and the measures taken to increase the force under your command by calls upon the States of Louisiana and Texas for volunteer troops, are fully approved by the War Department; and it affords me much pleasure to express the perfect confidence that is reposed in you and the army under your command.

Your despatch of May 5, covering the report made by Major Brown, 7th infantry, of the attack upon the field works opposite Matamoras, has satisfied the department that the reliance of the country upon the troops under your command is not misplaced, and that they will be found equal to every emergency.

It is hoped that the battalion of the 1st infantry, from Jefferson barracks, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Wilson, and the volunteers hastily enrolled at New Orleans, will afford you timely aid.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Your despatches Nos. 34, 35, 36, 37; also "orders" from 55 to 60, and "special orders" from 58 to 62, all inclusive, have been received.

Gen. orders No. 15.

Head-quarters of the Army,
Adjutant General's Office, Washington, May 29, 1846.

1. Instructions have already been given to Brigadier General Wool, and through him to several officers placed at his disposition, for the early inspection and muster into the service of the United States of the quotas of twelve-month volunteers who have been called for by the President of the United States from Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Tennessee, and Mississippi, and who may present themselves for acceptance, under that call, at the rendezvous of those States respectively.

2. Instructions have also been given to other officers of the army to inspect and muster the quotas, called for in like manner, from Georgia, Alabama, and Arkansas.

3. As soon as inspected and mustered, as above, the several regiments and battalions of volunteer horse and foot will, without delay, be put en route, as follows:

4. The regiments of cavalry or mounted men called for from Kentucky and Tennessee will, from their respective State rendezvous, take up their lines of march, by the best routes, via Memphis, Little Rock, on the Arkansas, Fulton, on the Red river, and Robins's Ferry, on the Trinity river, upon San Antonio de Bexar, Texas. The regiment of cavalry or mounted men called for from Arkansas will, from its State rendezvous (say) Washington, take the same route from Fulton to San Antonio de Bexar.

5. Excepting one regiment of the Kentucky and one of the Illinois quotas of foot, to which Brigadier General Wool is charged with giving different routes, and also excepting the Arkansas battalion, which will receive instructions through Brevet Brigadier General Arbuckle, all the other regiments and battalions of volunteer infantry or rifle, called for from the said States, will be embarked at the nearest navigable points to their respective State rendezvous, and thence proceed by water, with or without transhipment at Mobile or New Orleans, to Point Isabel or Brazos Santiago, Texas, where, like the troops ordered to San Antonio de Bexar, the whole will come under the orders of the general officer in the chief command of the United States land forces operating against Mexico.

6. The chiefs of the general staff of the army at this place will each, in what concerns his department, charge himself, through his subordinates, with supplying the said volunteers (horse and foot) the necessary arms, accoutrements, ammunition, knapsacks, haversacks, canteens, (for water,) camp equipage, subsistence, medicines and hospital stores, and means of transportation, by land and water, according to routes and destinations, and according to law and regulations.

By command of Major General Scott:

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

[Note on the above order.]

Brevet Major Gen. Z. Taylor,
Commanding army in Texas:

I am directed by the general-in-chief to say to you, informally, on this order, that a portion of the twelve-month volunteers (foot) mentioned herein will find orders, in passing by New Orleans, to proceed not to Point Isabel but to La Vaca, (Matagorda bay,) and thence march to San Antonio be Bexar; but the portion of the foot that may be so directed is, I believe, not yet exactly determined.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

W. G. FREEMAN,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Adjutant General's Office,

No. 8.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 16, 1846.

GENERAL: The instructions of the general-in-chief of the army, dated June 12, will put you in possession of the views of the government in regard to your operations beyond the Rio del Norte, which you may consider as the answer to your communication of May 21, requesting further instructions for your guidance.

The instructions of the 12th inform you that about 16,280 twelve-month volunteers will be placed under your general command. These volunteers have been called from the following States:

	Horse reg'ts.	Foot reg'ts.	Places of rendezvous.
Ohio........	–	3	Cincinnati.
Indiana	–	3	New Albany.
Kentucky ...	1	2	Louisville for horse, Newport and Smithland for foot—one regiment at each place.
Illinois......	–	3	Alton and Springfield.
Tennessee ...	1	2	Memphis for cavalry, Nashville for foot.
Georgia	–	1	Columbus.
Alabama	–	1	Mobile.
Arkansas	1 & 2 cos.	3 cos.	Washington for cavalry, and Fort Smith for foot.
Missouri	–	1	Fort Leavenworth.
Mississippi ..	–	1	Natchez.
Texas.......	1	5 cos.	Austin.
	4 regt's 2 cos.	17 reg'ts 8 cos.

Of this force the following regiments have been directed upon San Antonio de Bexar; the horse via Fulton, Robin's Ferry, &c.: and the foot via New Orleans and La Vaca bay, to wit:

4 regiments of horse from Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Texas;

2 regiments of foot from Kentucky and Illinois;

6 regiments of volunteers, horse and foot, to San Antonio.

If we estimate each regiment at 740 men, exclusive of officers, (the minimum which any mustering officer has been authorized to accept,) although many regiments of foot will exceed that number, you will have a division of volunteers at San Antonio, horse and foot, of 4,440 men.

Deducting this number from 16,280, leaves 11,840 men, which will be about the volunteer force (twelve-months men) ordered to Point Isabel, exclusive of your requisitions for three months men, and the other volunteers gone to the seat of war under orders from Brevet Major General Gaines.

A battalion of Baltimore and Washington volunteers, under Lieutenant Colonel Watson, sailed two days since for Point Isabel, which in the above statement may be computed in the place of five Arkansas companies (two mounted) which will be retained in the Cherokee country.

Five companies of regulars have been ordered to San Antonio de Bexar, to wit: two of the 1st dragoons, two of the 6th infantry, with the major, drawn from Forts Gibson and Smith, and Captain Washington's company of light artillery (4th regiment) from Carlisle. This regular force may amount to about four hundred, if the privates of dragoons and infantry be carried up to the standard which has been ordered—sixty-four and eighty.

Five companies of artillery, averaging more than ninety each, (by consolidation, excellent troops, &c.,) drawn from Newport, New York, Virginia, and Charleston, are now some days at sea, for Point Isabel, besides one hundred and ten good dragoon recruits. At the end of the month two hundred recruits (most of them pretty well instructed) will be sent from New York, which you will please to assign to such regiments as you may judge best for the service.

Until otherwise directed, the standard of companies for the artillery and infantry will be eighty privates; the light artillery companies may exceed that number, if necessary, as full batteries have been ordered for those fine companies which proved so efficient and skilful in the late conflicts with the enemy. The standard of dragoon companies will not exceed seventy privates.

I acknowledge the following despatches received from your headquarters at Matamoras, to wit: Letters, Nos. 45 and 46, "circular" of May 26, "orders" 66 and 67, and "special orders" 68 to 73, inclusive.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

GENERAL: I send, herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter from H. L. Kinney, esq., to the honorable D. S. Kaufman, dated Corpus Christi, May 14, 1846, representing the unprotected condition of the inhabitants of Corpus Christi, Texas, since the removal of the United States troops to the Rio Grande. I also respectfully transmit a copy of my letter to honorable S. Houston, dated the 17th instant, on the same subject.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Brevet Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding Army of Occupation, Matamoras, Mexico.

[The following is a copy of H. L. Kinney's letter to honorable D. S. Kaufman, alluded to above.—R. J.]

CORPUS CHRISTI, May 14, 1846.

DEAR SIR: As you will perceive, I am once more at the ranche. I obtained leave of absence more than a fortnight since, and returned here in consequence of representations, forwarded to me, of the unprotected condition of the place since the removal of the United States troops to the Rio Grande. If I had not done so, the strong probability is that, by this time, the place would have been entirely abandoned, as the inhabitants generally feel that their property and persons are in imminent danger from Indians and Mexicans who are hovering around us, almost nightly stealing our horses, cattle, and sheep, and from whom we are also in danger of an attack. As you already fully understand, all the United States troops under General Taylor are opposite the town of Matamoras, or at Point Isabel; and the whole western frontier is now far more exposed to the depredations of Indians, or other marauding parties, than at any previous time. There is nothing, whatever, to prevent the Camanches from coming here—anywhere between the Nueces and the Rio Grande—the whole region of country being without the slightest protection. Mexican troops can cross the Rio Grande at any place they choose above General Taylor's camp—Meir, Reinosa, Camargo, Laredo, or at any point between these places—and cross the prairie to this place, or any other frontier town, without encountering a single soldier; and, in our present unarmed condition, one hundred men could take this place and plunder it, if they were equal to our own troops.

The call for volunteers is not only draining this whole frontier of effective men, but it occasions serious and well-grounded alarm of danger to such as cannot leave their families to join in the contest; and, unless some kind of protection is afforded to this place by the United States government, it will be wholly abandoned by its present inhabitants, and then not a single settlement will remain in this State west of the Nueces; besides, my dear sir, the smaller towns east of this will share the same fate; and the whole country, in the absence of its natural defenders, on the Rio Grande, will be left without inhabitants from this to the Colorado.

This is no overdrawn picture, but a matter of sober fact. It may become the subject of historical regret. The United States government has stores of provisions here for volunteers, unprotected by a single soldier save one unarmed, unserviceable infantry man, left to serve out rations to such volunteers as pass through here to join General Taylor, via Padre island; for the inland route has, for the last three weeks, been so infested by marauding parties, that all communication between us and the Rio Grande has been cut off. Several parties who left here for General Taylor's camp never have arrived, and others coming here from thence, have been killed or made prisoners.

The fact of annexation being completed, disarmed our whole population. They literally turned their swords into pruning hooks, and began to forget the calamities and anxieties naturally incident to a border residence, and to cultivate the arts of peace. We are, therefore, without arms or ammunition.

We require a small force of regular troops for our protection, and, to do us any good, that assistance should be afforded us without delay. But in case the government cannot do this, I implore you to endeavor to procure arms and ammunition for such as remain, and to get me some authority to organize the inhabitants to make the best defence we can. Without this done, and that speedily, we must once more, to our great loss and damage, abandon our homes. You know well what I have suffered for this frontier; but you can scarcely imagine the anguish with which I should turn my back upon a place for which I have so long, hitherto unaided, combatted against all sorts of difficulties. I have no time to say more, as the boat waits. You know what is wanted. I rely on our long friendship for you to do what is necessary.

In haste, as ever, yours truly,

H. L. KINNEY.

Hon. DAVID S. KAUFMAN.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Adjutant General's Office, Washington, June 17, 1846.

GENERAL: The letter of William Mann, of the 14th ultimo, asking that troops be stationed at Corpus Christi for the protection of that place, referred by you to the War Department, has been received; and, in reply, I respectfully inform you that, Texas being within the limits of General Taylor's command, it is not doubted he will take ample measures for the security of the several towns and settlements. If there be cause of alarm for Corpus Christi, the matter should be immediately represented to the general, who will promptly extend such assistance as the nature of the case may require.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Sir: By direction of the general-in-chief, I have the honor to communicate, for your information, a statement of the volunteer force destined for offensive operations, under your orders, against the republic of Mexico, and arranged into brigades by the President of the United States, viz:

For Chihuahua.

1 mounted regiment from Arkansas,	Brigade under Brig. Gen. Wool.
1 mounted regiment from Texas,
2 regiments of foot from Illinois,
1 battalion of foot from Texas.

For the Rio Grande.

1 mounted regiment from Tennessee,	Brigade.
2 regiments of foot from do.
1 mounted regiment from Kentucky,	Brigade.
2 regiments of foot from do.
1 regiment of foot from Alabama,	Brigade.
1 regiment of foot from Georgia,
1 regiment of foot from Mississippi.
2 regiments of foot from Illinois,
1 regiment of foot from Missouri.
3 regiments of foot from Indiana.—Brigade.
3 regiments of foot from Ohio,	Brigade.
1 battalion of foot from District of Columbia.

Brigadier General Wood has been this day notified of the volunteer force you may assign to his command, besides such regulars as are to be assembled at San Antonio de Bexar, for the Chihuahua expedition; and he has been instructed to send two, instead of one, of the Illinois regiments of foot, as directed by "general orders" No. 15, and the Adjutant General's letter of the 1st instant, from New Orleans to La Vaca bay, to march thence to San Antonio de Bexar; and should there be yet time for the change, to send the Kentucky regiment of foot to Point Isabel, and not to La Vaca bay.

I enclose, herewith, a copy of the instructions referred to.

GENERAL: I request you will forward, as soon as convenient, a list of the non-commissioned officers, soldiers, &c., killed or wounded in the battles of the 8th and 9th of May. This list is the more necessary at this time, to enable me to answer the daily inquiries of the friends of the soldiers belonging to the regiments known to have participated in those engagements.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 7, 1846.

GENERAL: Herewith I respectfully enclose "special orders" No. 58, directing Major L. Thomas, assistant adjutant general, to report for duty with the army under your command. Of the high qualifications of this officer no one is better able to judge than yourself, he having served with you when commanding in Florida.

In ordering the senior staff officer of the department available to report to your head-quarters, it is by no means the intention of the general-in-chief, nor the wish of Major Thomas, to interfere in any degree with your choice or wishes in regard to the position of Captain Bliss, who has all along, with so much ability and entire satisfaction in every quarter, as I have reason to believe, performed the arduous duties of chief of your staff.

Such an army in the field as the one now under your command, whether as regards numbers or composition, will require as numerous a staff as our organization will afford; and it is the intention to send you other assistant adjutants general as soon as they may be appointed.

Please to inform Captain Bliss that in a few days I hope to have the pleasure of forwarding his commission of major in this department.

I am, general, with great respect, your obedient servant,
R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Major Gen. Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding, &c., Matamoras, Mexico.

Brevet Captain J. H. Prentiss, assistant adjutant general, has been instructed to report in person to Brigadier General Wool for duty.

I received orders the 7th instant to report to you for duty, and expect to set out in three or four days.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 11, 1846.

GENERAL: I enclose herewith a copy of instructions from the Secretary of War to the Adjutant General, calling for a list of all the officers who were in the actions of the 8th and 9th of May, under your command, and of those who were in Fort Brown during the bombardment. As this office cannot furnish the information desired, I have to request that you will take measures to forward, as early as practicable, the list required.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

L. THOMAS,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding, &c., Matamoras, Mexico.

[The following is a copy of the Secretary of War's instructions referred to in the foregoing letter.—R. J.]

The Adjutant General will furnish, with the least delay practicable, a list showing the name of every commissioned officer of the army who was present in the actions of the 8th and 9th of May, as well as those in Fort Brown during its bombardment.

W. L. MARCY,
Secretary of War.

War Department, July 10, 1846.

No. 15.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 17, 1846.

General: The communication from this office of June 20th informed you of the arrangement of the volunteer regiments into brigades by the President, and I have now to communicate the instructions of the department respecting the assignment of the general officers who already have been ordered to join the army under your command, and to report to you in person.

Major General Butler will be assigned to the 1st division of volunteers, to be composed of the Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana brigades, to be commanded respectively by the brigadier generals appointed from those States; and Major General Patterson will be assigned to the command of the 2d division, to be composed of the Illinois and Tennessee brigades, and the brigade formed of the three regiments raised in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, to which must be attached the Washington and Baltimore battalion, instead of the Ohio brigade, as first ordered, according to the order of arrangement forwarded to you June 20th. You will assign the brigadier generals to the brigades of the 2d division according to the States in which they are raised and appointed.

If there be other major generals appointed, this arrangement of divisions would necessarily be changed.

It is seen from newspaper accounts that the Texan volunteers have assembled on the lower Rio Grande, while the arrangements at Washington assigned the quota from that State to the division to be concentrated and organized at San Antonio de Bexar. Unless your plan of operations requires a different arrangement, the Texan volunteers should be ordered to San Antonio as a part of General Wool's division.

General orders of July 2 (No. 25) will apprize you of the 2d regiment of infantry being en route, which will be a handsome accession of 650 efficient men to your army.

Since the last acknowledgment (June 16th) of despatches from your head-quarters, the following letters and orders have been duly received and laid before the commanding general and Secretary of War, to wit: Letters Nos. 47 to 56, (except No. 53, missing,) "orders" 68 to 79, and "special orders" 74 to 96, all inclusive.

I am, general, with great respect, your obedient servant,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 29, 1846.

GENERAL: I respectfully enclose for your information a copy of the communication of the acting governor of Texas to the Secretary of War, dated June 23, from which it appears that the quota of volunteers called for from that State will not, in all probability, be obtained. I also enclose a copy of my letter to Colonel Harney upon the same subject.

The general-in-chief has several times inquired of me if his letter to you, sent direct, in his own name, dated May 18, had ever been acknowledged; and repeating the inquiry to-day, my reply was, as heretofore, that its receipt had not been acknowledged, as seen by your correspondence with this office. The communications from this office to you have, I believe, been uniformly noticed. The one referred to above, from the general-in-chief, under his own sign manual, I had supposed might have been answered direct; but as this appears not to be the case, I apprehend the letter of May 18 may never have reached you.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

R. JONES, Adjutant General.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
Commanding the army in Mexico, Matamoras.

[The following is a copy of the communication from the governor pro tempore of Texas to the Secretary of War, referred to in the above letter.—R. J.]

STATE OF TEXAS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Austin, June 23, 1846.

SIR: Your communication of the 16th May last was duly received, but a temporary absence from the seat of government will account for my not having answered it until the present time.

You, no doubt, ere this have been officially informed by General Taylor of his requisition on this State for four regiments of volunteer riflemen, two of mounted and two of foot, to serve for the term of six months, unless sooner discharged; also, the requisition of Brevet Colonel Harney, commanding at San Antonio, for seven companies for the protection of the southwestern frontier; making an aggregate of three thousand men.

Those required by General Taylor, from every information, are now mustered into service at head-quarters of the army. The latter have all reported to the adjutant general of the State, and will in a few days to Colonel Harney, to be mustered into service and for orders.

While the executive of the State feels certain of the promptness with which any call made upon her militia would be unhesitatingly responded to, the sparseness of our population, the exposed condition of our extensive line of frontier, together with the recent petition from citizens of several frontier counties for two companies of mounted men for their protection, in consequence of recent hostile demonstrations having been made, notwithstanding the treaty recently [made] by the commissioners of the United States, obliges me to request that the requisition be made upon some other State or States.

Although there is no immediate apprehensions, we are all alike exposed to the attacks of marauding bands of Mexicans and disaffected prairie Indians.

Your request relating to the organization of companies and regiments has been attended to by publishing in the newspapers of this place, and shall be strictly observed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. HORTON,
Governor, pro tempore.

Hon. W. L. Marcy,
Secretary of War.

[The following is a copy of the communication to Colonel Harney, referred to in the foregoing letter from the Adjutant General to General Taylor of July 29, 1846—R. J.]

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 24, 1846.

Colonel: It is seen from the communication of the lieutenant governor of Texas, of the 23d ultimo, to the Secretary of War, that you have made a requisition on that State for seven companies of volunteers, which force, it is also stated, was at that date fully raised and nearly in readiness to join you at San Antonia de Bexar.

Although you were not authorized* to call for volunteers or militia into the service of the United States, yet, as your requisition has been thus answered by the governor of Texas, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the force thus furnished may be received in lieu of the force required under the requisition from the War Department. It will be necessary, however, that you take immediate steps to re-enrol these troops (if mustered into service; if not, to muster them accordingly) "to serve for twelve months or during the war, unless sooner discharged," agreeably to the terms of the act approved May 13, 1846. Unless this change be made in the term of service for which they have engaged to serve, they cannot be retained, but must be discharged, as it is not lawful to enrol and receive volunteers for any period less than twelve months.

* This was a mistake, for it appears that Colonel Harney was authorized by General Taylor to call for what volunteer force he did make requisition for, which fact was brought to the notice of the Adjutant General in a letter of the general's of a subsequent date to the within.

R. JONES.

Adjutant General's Office, September 5, 1846.

The governor of Texas has been corresponded with to the same effect.

I am, sir, &c.,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Brevet Colonel W. S. Harney, 2d dragoons,
Commanding at San Antonio de Bexar, Texas.

No. 17.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 30, 1846.

General: To enable the paymaster to deduct from the volunteers advances made to them by their respective States, before being mustered into the service of the United States, it will be necessary that the amount required to be deducted to reimburse the States which have made such advances, be charged to each volunteer on the first muster-rolls. This can only be done by the officers who make out the rolls, as in the case of deductions made from the United States troops. To accomplish the end in view, I am instructed by the Secretary of War to direct that you will please to give all the necessary orders and instructions to the officers of the volunteer corps, the mustering and inspecting officers, and the paymasters.

I respectfully enclose, for your information, a copy of the Paymaster General's letter of this date to the Secretary of War on the subject, which presents the case more in detail.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Matamoras, Mexico.

[The following is a copy of the Paymaster General's letter referred to in the Adjutant General's letter to Major General Taylor of July 30, 1846.—R. J.]

Paymaster General's Office, July 30, 1846.

Sir: To enable paymasters to deduct from the volunteers the advances made to them by their respective States, before they were received into the service of the United States, it will be necessary that the amount to be deducted should be charged to each volunteer on the muster rolls, as in the case of deductions required to be made from the United States troops. This can only be done by the officers who make out the rolls.

The governors of some of the States have furnished statements of the expenses incurred in fitting out volunteers and getting them to places of rendezvous, and of the sums advanced to them. I shall furnish the senior paymaster, serving with the troops, statements of the deductions to be made from them on account of such expenses and advances, as soon as I obtain them from the accounting officers who are preparing them; but I fear this will be too late for the first muster and inspection, and it is highly important that the deductions should be made at the first payment. I would, therefore, respectfully suggest, that the officers commanding regiments and companies be instructed to have the amount required to be deducted charged to each volunteer on the muster rolls. It is presumed the officers commanding regiments know what advances were made to the field and staff officers of their regiments, and that the captains know the advances made to their companies, and, of course, what deductions should be made. It is the special duty of the mustering and inspecting officers to see that the rolls contain the information which is to govern the payment, and that nothing important is omitted. I shall instruct the paymasters to furnish the inspectors such information as I may be able to communicate from time to time, by which means they can correct mistakes and supply omissions in the muster rolls. The inspectors can best instruct volunteer officers how the rolls are to be prepared; and if that is done in time, much trouble and difficulty in settling the advances made by States will be prevented.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. TOWSON, P. M. G.

One of the brigadier generals would have been ordered direct from this office at an earlier day to San Antonio, but it could not be ascertained until near the close of the late session of Congress what other appointments might not be made, upon which, of course, in some degree would depend the most suitable selection.

Washington, August 25, 1846.

General: Captain Mason's company mounted riflemen will embark at Baltimore the 3d of September for the army in Mexico, to serve temporarily on foot with the 2d regiment of infantry, as you will see by the captain's instructions, of which I respectfully enclose a copy. It will be seen that provision is made for the mounting of the company at your discretion, whenever the means and the opportunity may be afforded you.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding the Army in Mexico,
Matamoras, Mexico.

[The following is a copy of the letter to Captain Mason referred to in the above letter.]

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, August 24, 1846.

Captain: You will hold your company in readiness to embark for the army in Mexico, as soon after the 2d of September as transportation can be provided for the quartermaster.

The company will be armed and equipped for active service on foot with the 2d infantry, until means and opportunity may enable Major General Taylor to direct that it be mounted.

If you arrive at Point Isabel before the infantry, wait their arrival, and report to the officer in command for temporary duty with it; but if the contrary, follow in the same direction, and join either battalion that you may fall in with.

I am, captain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

To Captain S. T. Mason,
Mounted rifle regiment, Fort McHenry, Md.

NOTE.—Consult with Colonel Belton as to the expediency of paying off your company before they embark; some question of the public good is to be considered in determining the measure.

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

No. 22.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, August 31, 1846.

GENERAL: Your communication of the 10th instant from Camargo (No. 73) has this day been received, and submitted to the general-in-chief and Secretary of War.

The departure of the 2d regiment of infantry from Newport, Kentucky, and Fort Columbus, for the army in Mexico, has been delayed no longer than necessary to fill up the companies with recruits to a respectable standard. Both battalions will embark and proceed to their destination the 2d proximo, as you will see by the instructions of the 21st instant, of which you were duly apprized at the time. The regiment in the aggregate, it is hoped, will be about 650 strong. In addition to the nine companies of the 2d infantry, Captain Mason's company, and a detachment of Captain Walker's company (C) mounted rifle regiment, under Lieutenant McLane, will embark at Baltimore on the 3d of September for Point Isabel, for active service with the army in Mexico, as you will see by the instructions to the company commanders of the 24th and 26th, of which copies were duly forwarded at the time. These companies will be mounted at the earliest day practicable—probably sooner than they could receive horses if they were concentrated at Jefferson barracks, where the regiment is to be organized and equipped. Their service with the 2d infantry on foot, therefore, is only temporary, and of course does not impair their right to cavalry pay for the time being, any more than the fact of their remaining at Jefferson barracks, or elsewhere, without horses, while undergoing for a month or two the necessary course of preparatory instruction before receiving them. Captain Walker is already in Mexico, and under your orders, and it will be for you to direct when he will join his company in the regular army.

The authority communicated in my letter of the 17th of July, relative to Brevet Brigadier General Worth appointing Lieutenant Lee his aid-de-camp, extends, of course, to the appointment of his successor, Lieutenant Pemberton.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Major General Z. TAYLOR,
United States Army, Camargo, Mexico.

No. 23.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, September 12, 1846.

General: Before the receipt, on the 5th instant, of your letter of August 14, Captain Taylor, 1st artillery, was en route with some recruits and horses for his company in Mexico, his battery having been sent by sea. By your letter, it is perceived that these horses may probably not be required for Captain Taylor's company; but it is thought that their arrival in Mexico may not be inopportune. As they are mostly of good quality and many of them already trained, should they be not needed for the artillery service, it is not doubted that they will be required to remount the three companies of the 2d dragoons about to be organized at Point Isabel, as you will have seen by "special orders" No. 83, dated the 2d instant, which was forwarded to you at its date.

Captain Taylor reports this day that he arrived at Newport, Kentucky, with forty horses, on the 7th instant, and that he should proceed on his route as soon as he procured the additional horses required for his battery, which would be in a few days.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Major General Z. Taylor,
Commanding, &c., Camargo, Mexico.

No. 24.

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, September 15, 1846.

General: Learning informally that the suggestions of the general-in-chief, communicated in my letter of September 1, 1845, relative to the assignment of Lieutenant Colonel Payne, of the 4th, and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Childs, of the 3d artillery, may have influenced your arrangement of the artillery companies into battalions, &c., beyond the period contemplated at the time, I am desired to say that the arrangements intimated were not intended to be permanent. The general-in-chief regrets, therefore, (if, indeed, it be so,) that you regard the suggestions communicated in September last at all abiding, as the circumstances of the service have altogether changed since the army (now no longer the "army of occupation") was stationed at Corpus Christi. It was not doubted, therefore, that your arrangements of the artillery commands, whether as infantry or with batteries, would be made only with reference to the requirements of the service in the field.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. JONES,
Adjutant General.

Major General Z. Taylor,
